PRESIDENT'S CORNER

Isn't our Museum beautiful with its fresh, new coat of paint! The color is Classic White and Anderson's Paint Store mixed it to duplicate a paint chip that our architect, Gary Cooper, asked them to match. We have received a phone call asking if we were "putting up aluminum siding!" The paint job looks so good that that person suspected we are using non-authentic siding! Just wait until the fence goes up and the landscaping is in! Our Museum will be beautiful!

Englander's Furniture Store, located at 2333 South State Street, will be hosting its third annual Holiday Christmas Tree Trimming Contest soon.

KAREN'S COLUMN

I want to give special thanks to the two who have been responsible for the careful accounting and disbursement of museum funds to date. Thelma Graves and Esther Warzynski have done a terrific job keeping track of every donation and every bill. They have supplied timely and accurate reports to the Board since the beginning of the project and have contributed many hours to the Society.

Thelma Graves, you will recall, is the one who first notified the Society about the availability of the Wall Street house. The rest, as they say, is history. Esther Warzynski has had a long involvement with WCHS, serving as a Board member and officer. She capably arranged programs for several years as vice president. My personal thanks for their interest and support. We would not be where we are now without the help of these two dedicated workers. Patty Creal, Society Treasurer, will be fully utilizing her new computer program, looking after the museum funds as well as the Society's finances.

A list of tasks to complete the exterior of the Museum on Main Street has been put together by our architect WCHS has participated the past two years and will do so again this season. The first prize for the non-profit group's tree that garners the most "votes" will be $1,000; second prize: $750; and the third prize: $500. Each dollar donated to WCHS counts as one "vote" and will be added to our Museum Fund, at the end of the contest. Last year, WCHS earned over 7,000 "votes." The winner, the Cancer Society, earned over 17,000 "votes." You may visit the Englander Store to cast votes between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Pauline Walters, 662-9092

Gary Cooper of Quinn Evans/Architects This fall we hope to complete the following:

Complete painting, including porches, doors, basement door and basement stair wall;

Install storm doors and stoops;

Install two new back doors, (needed for egress from basement, and for handicapped entrance);

Complete landscaping, exterior lighting;

Install fences, at north property line, screen fences and gate at meters;

Construct porch railings, lattice and make improvements to front door, railing and wall cap at basement stairs;

Install decorative wood fence and signs.

That is our agenda for the next several months.

As winter approaches, we will be looking for someone to shovel our walks and keep our parking lot clear of snow. If anyone knows where we might be able to get this service donated, I would appreciate knowing about it.

TOUR OF THE SHARON MILL WINERY OCT. 18TH

Autumn harvest time calls for a trip into the county countryside to savor the sights and smells of the season.

The Hawker family have restored a 19th century grist mill, once owned by Henry Ford, and operate the historic site as a winery featuring Michigan wines from Old Mission Peninsula. They will conduct the society on a tour of the winery and mill and will treat members to a tasting. A modest admission fee of $2.00 per person may be applied to any wine purchase.

In order to avoid congestion, members are asked to convene at 12:30 a.m. at the Mill. See map and driving directions, and allow 35 minutes drive time from Main and Stadium to the Mill.

DIRECTIONS TO THE SHARON MILL

Take Pleasant Lake Road west to dead-end at Parker Road, turn left (south)

Take Parker for only a short distance to Pleasant Lake Road, turn right (west)

Driving time will vary. From the corner of Main and Stadium, the distance to the mill takes 30 - 35 minutes.

ANN ARBORITES HAVE A PLAN,

HOW TO RENOVATE TIGER STADIUM

"Ask the players or ask the fans. The most beautiful park in baseball is Tiger Stadium. It's a baseball treasure and, fortunately for us, it's right here in Detroit. Players love it because of its intimacy. Fans are close and the atmosphere is electric. Tradition, charm, baseball lore and modernization have made the great old park colorful, comfortable and safe. Tiger Stadium is a state landmark. It's a focal point from which all else is measured."

Joe O'Neal of O'Neal Construction Company in Ann Arbor read the above quote to begin his presentation to WCHS on his ingenious plan to renovate Tiger Stadium rather than build a new one.

The above quote came from the Detroit Tigers official scorebook and program for the 1987 American League Championship Series. Yet, since then, the Tiger organization and other officials seem to think only a new stadium will do.

O'Neal's plan, developed in conjunction with Gunnar Birkerts of Gunnar Birkerts & Associates architectural firm and Robert Darvas, to renovate the stadium was first presented in 1988. Now that the Tigers have been sold, O'Neal was asked to present the Birkerts-O'Neal plan to the new owner, Mike Ilich. WCHS had a preview of that presentation.

Joining with O'Neal in the presentation was Dr. Robert Darvas, a structural engineer and University of Michigan professor of architecture who did the structural design for this plan.

"Given the choice of playing on one of the brand new stadium diamonds or Tiger Stadium," O'Neal said, "wouldn't you rather follow the likes of Tigers Hank Greenberg, Ty Cobb, Charlie Gehringer, Mickey Cochrane, Al Kaline, Willie Horton, Norm Cash, Denny McLean, Jim Northrup, Mark Fidrych, Alan Trammell, Lou Whitaker, Frank Tanana and Cecil Fielder, just to name a few?" In addition, famous players of other teams, such as Ted Williams, Lou Gehrig, Reggie Jackson, Nolan Ryan, Satchel Paige, Mickey Mantle, Bob Feller, Babe Ruth and thousands more have played on that field.

Prior to 1900, Detroit's hay market was located where the ball diamond now stands. However, baseball was first played at Michigan and Trumbull in 1896. Nine world series were played there, four world championships were won as a result of those world series. It has been the site of three All-Star games. It has the only double deck bleachers of any ball park in existence. Virtually every single American League player has played in Tiger Stadium and quite a few of the major National League players. Its records exist for 96 years. Boston's Fenway Park and Chicago's Wrigley Field are two old parks but neither are as old as Tiger Stadium.

Tiger Stadium is listed as one of the 11 most endangered historic places by the National Trust for Historic Preservation, a trust established by the United States Congress to save our heritage.

The shape of the stadium reflects the pressures of the city. It got its shape from the surrounding streets--Michigan, Trumbull, National Avenue (now Cochrane) and Cherry Street (now under the left field stands) and Kaline. The upper deck forms a porch in right field, the only stadium with such a condition. If a fly ball is hit into this area, the porch catches it because the porch overhangs the field by 15 feet. The overhang is caused by Trumbull at that point: they could not move Trumbull so they had to move the stadium inward.

Tiger Stadium was also the home of the Detroit Lions football team from 1938 to 1975 until they moved to the Silverdome. Mr. Fetzer of the Tigers, when requested by the Silverdome Committee to move the Tigers to the Silverdome, responded with that famous statement that "this franchise belongs to the inner city of Detroit. I am but the caretaker."

If the stadium could speak it would tell you many stories. It could tell you about Cobb's lake, located at home plate. Cobb would have grounds-keepers put water in front of home plate. If he hit a bunt, the ball would stop almost instantaneously. If a base player or the pitcher tried to get it, they would slip and go by it. By then Cobb would be on first base. Tiger Stadium could tell you it heard Martin Luther King speak there, also Nelson Mandela. It would say, "I have stood by you during World War I. You came down and forgot some of the things that were bothering you. I did that for you in the Great Depression, again in World War II and again in 1968 when I gave you a world championship team so you could begin the healing process from those devastating riots of 1967."

When the Detroit baseball diamond was known as Bennett Park, home plate was at the corner of Michigan and Trumbull. When Mr. Navin built the first stadium, only one deck in 1912, home plate was moved to the corner of Cochrane and Michigan. The 1912 concrete stadium structure is still in place. In 1924 he double-decked it from third base around to first and added a press box. In 1935-36, Navin added double-decking from third base along Trumbull, and the bleachers. The plan was for Mr. Navin to close in the corner but he died. Mr. Briggs finished it. They added lights in 1948, the last major stadium to add them, except for Chicago's Wrigley Field which added theirs only about two years ago.

There's no doubt the Tigers need something done to their home. No one could argue that you could leave that stadium alone and continue using it the way it is. The team, fan, press and office facilities are not right. They've outgrown all of those various facilities. They do not need, however, a brand new stadium. There is nothing wrong with the stadium's concrete or steel, as Bob Darvas will attest. You can renovate that stadium and bring it up to and past any of the new stadiums of today.

When Tom Monaghan bought the team in 1983 he stated, "As long as I own this team we will not build a new stadium." In Detroit Monthly of May 1988, Monaghan stated, "With the cost of a new stadium, it seems like you can do an awful lot of improvement on the existing stadium for that kind of money." But soon after May 1988, Monaghan said his dreams to renovate the stadium could not be realized because there are obstructed view seats that cannot be removed.

"Those words caught my attention," O'Neal said. "Drawings of the structure were not available. I asked and received permission to crawl around the structure. I measured each member--all beams, lengths, sizes. I started to study how to get rid of those columns. One logical way is to reach out with a structure to grab hold of and support the upper deck and then remove the columns.

"In looking at the drawing it occurred to me that if we lifted the upper deck about 11 feet and moved it away from the field about 20 feet, you could cut the load carried by those columns considerably."

With that in mind, we drew a very rough sketch showing a possible way to do that. I took it to my friend Bob Darvas and showed him my concept. He studied it and found that members of reasonable in size were structurally feasible.

HE FLUSTERED PITCHER, STOLE BASE BACKWARDS

A gentleman named Herman "Germany" Shaefer in Tiger Stadium brought about the need for the rule that you cannot steal a base backwards.

"You might wonder why would anyone want to steal bases backwards," Joe O'Neal said. "There was a good method in his madness. He and his teammates would have a strategy that they wanted to implement.

"If the strategy failed, by stealing a base backwards they would try it again until it was successful. The pitcher would suddenly discover that the runner on second, instead of now being on third, was back on first and you could bet that the next four pitches would be balls and the opposing team would have two on instead of one.?"

Darvas said, "Let's go talk to Gunnar Birkerts about it." I had never met Birkerts, someone of international fame in the world of architecture.

A meeting was arranged. Mr. Birkerts spent about 40 minutes explaining that this was not an architectural or engineering or sports problem. It's going to be a political problem and we would be wasting our time and he did not want to get involved. "But you've come this far, let's look at your drawings," he said.

We got them out and showed them to him. In the next 20 minutes he was on the phone to Tom Monaghan to arrange a meeting to show Monaghan this concept.

Though we could not convince Monaghan to fund further study of the concept, he expressed an interest in our ideas and suggested, if we believed in them, we might pursue it on our own. We decided to go ahead ourselves. Bob did the structural design. I built the models. I helped with the architecture and Birkerts donated a major chunk of the architecture. We put together our plan, and took it back to Mr. Monaghan and the Tiger management.

When O'Neal, Birkerts and Darvas first went to the Tigers, they were given a list of all the amenities they felt were necessary and required in a new stadium. For example, 230 lavatories, 330 water closets, three acres of concession and storage area, 1,600 square feet of first aid space, home club house of 5,720 square feet, etc.

Darvas had the challenge of making a structure that would work; Birkerts had the challenge of taking the Tigers' program and placing it into the resulting structural system and existing Tiger Stadium. "We did everything they wanted. We went to the meeting and showed them what we had done". They looked at it and said, "We still need a new stadium."

In January 1991, Wayne County officials announced they were going to study renovation versus a new stadium. The design team took their concept to the county and their engineers who reviewed its feasibility. Birkerts, O'Neal and Darvas showed it to Ed McNamara, Wayne County administrator, and Michael Duggan, his deputy; to Wayne County commissioners, Mayor Coleman Young and SEMCOG (Southeast Michigan Council of Governments). McNamara and Duggan were favorably

Duggan were favorably impressed with the concept. But when the Tigers announced their position in an Economic Club of Detroit speech, they said they had to have a brand new stadium.

DIAMOND HAD FOUR NAMES

Tiger Stadium has had four names in its lifetime:

- Bennett Park until 1912
- Navin Field, 1912-1938
- Briggs Stadium, 1938-1961
- Tiger Stadium, 1961-present.

The condition of Tiger Stadium is excellent. The sight lines in this stadium would equal or exceed any of the new stadiums that have been built.

"Another major part of our plan is that we can keep the stadium in operation while this is being implemented," O'Neal said. O'Neal's model demonstrated how the upper deck could be lifted and moved back creating a much wider concourse for people's movement, more toilets and concession stands, it was noted. The structure could be built while they are playing games, then sections of the upper deck, roof and lights removed, severed and moved up onto the new supporting arms with the aid of hydraulic jacks. "There are professionals who do nothing but lift structures," O'Neal said.

He demonstrated the proposed move on his model, showing how the obstructing columns could be removed. In the process, 11 feet would become available in which to put the world's closest-to-the-field deluxe seating--the loges. There's no doubt the Tigers need the income from them. You have also removed twenty feet of obstruction when you are sitting in the lower deck. When a fly ball goes up and comes down, people sitting in the back of the lower deck lose it. While those in back will still lose it, the point of losing it has been moved 20 feet back into the lower decks.

"Frank Rashid, a founder of the Detroit Tiger Stadium Fan Club said, "It would be just plain wrong to stand by and allow hundreds of millions of dollars to go into an unwanted, unneeded play field for millionaires when our children have so few clean places to play." In addition, I would say it would be a crime to spend hundreds of millions of dollars when Detroit has so much in the way of homelessness, unemployment, decay, hunger, loss of spirit, and no money for the arts.

Jack Walter, former president of the National Trust for Historic Preservation said, "When we preserve our past we preserve what unites us, not what divides us, which is why cities that do preserve the best of their heritage and culture have more soul and more community spirit than those that do not."

He showed several slides inside the stadium including the steel structure, pointing out the existing trusses and where new ones would go. "There is nothing wrong with the structure--all it needs is normal maintenance just as your house needs a coat of paint every so often," Darvas noted.

The roof would be taken off in, perhaps, 200 foot segments, he said. "Hopefully that could be done off-season. Then those segments of upper deck would be lifted into place on the new structural frame."

"When the upper deck has been lifted and pushed back, the seats are still going to be closer to the field than any new stadium in the country. "That is the beauty of Tiger Stadium--people are very close to the field and these loges are going to be closer than anywhere else including the Palace indoor arena where the Pistons basketball team plays.

"Birkerts proposes that there be some glassed-in dining facilities in the upper level where you can eat while you watch your favorite baseball team play. The demolition required to site a new stadium in the Woodward area would consume five years of landfill volume.

Model by Gunnar Birkerts & Associates showing the relocated upper deck and loges and expanded concession area.

"I also approach this not as just an engineering problem. I'm a firm believer in historic preservation. In fact, I coined the phrase that people who don't take care of their past don't have much of a future either," Darvas said.

THE JOHN MAYNARD HOUSE

HOW TO JOIN WCHS

218 N. Division, Maynard House

The house was substantially altered by the Dobsons around 1910 when the large porch, roof dormers, and the two-story center portico were added in the popular Colonial Revival style. The main entry was then shifted from the center of the house to the south side, where it remains today. These additions are now considered historically significant in their own right. Photographs taken in 1909 by Miss Lucy Chapin, however, document the earlier structure before it was remodeled.

When John W. Maynard constructed this center-entry brick house in 1838, Catherine Street did not yet extend past Division Street. Although previous histories have put the date of construction at 1844, deeds suggest it was built around 1838. Maynard, a successful grocer with a store on Ann Street, had come to Ann Arbor as a child only months after John Allen and Elisha Rumsey founded the town in 1824. In a letter dated June of that year, John's father, Ezra, a farmer in Pittsfield Township, wrote the first eyewitness account of the emerging village.

John's brother, William S. Maynard, became very wealthy as a real estate developer and helped lure the University of Michigan to Ann Arbor by donating part of the original 40-acre campus. William served two terms as Mayor of Ann Arbor and Maynard Street is named after him. He built himself a high-style Italianate house at the northwest corner of Main and William Streets (demolished in 1990) that was famous for its greenhouse and for the peacocks in its garden.

John W. Maynard kept a lower profile than his brother and built himself a more old-fashioned house. His architectural sensibilities were recognized, though, for a Michigan Argus account in 1849 entitled "Notes on Our Village, No. 4," included his house among those that exhibited "the style of architecture which is an ornament to our village, and evinces the taste, judgment and liberality of their owners." Today John's house is one of a row of important buildings on large lots with deep setbacks lining the east side of Division Street north of Huron Street. Rare survivors in central Ann Arbor, they exemplify the mid-19th century look and feel of the town.

Members of the Maynard family occupied the house for over half a century. A decade after Catherine Street was extended in 1898 from Division to State Street, the property was sold to Russell T. Dobson, publisher of the Ann Arbor Times, a local newspaper. Pneumonia took Dobson's life in 1938 and the house was sold to the Christian Reformed Church for a student center. Around 1950 it was purchased by the Episcopal Student Foundation of St. Andrew's Church, given the name "Canterbury House," and used as a center for their outreach program. In 1992 the house was sold to the Trailblazers Association and opened as a clubhouse for persons recovering from a mental illness.
