Mr. Tichenor is over 78 years of age, but remains strong and vigorous. He is a member of the M. E. Church. Leander Tichenor, son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Maxwell) Tichenor, was born at Newark, N. J., July 11, 1826. He remained with his father on the farm until his 24th year, when he became engaged in the boot and shoe trade at Chelsea, manufacturing his own stock. He remained in that business for seven or eight years. He is now engaged in boot and shoe-making. In 1850 he was married to Olive Becker, of Sylvan Center, and 1 child is living—Seaborn B. Several children are deceased. Mr. Tichenor was a member of the Board of Trustees of Chelsea for several years, and is a Junior Deacon of Olive Lodge of Masons in Chelsea and is a Good Templar. He is also a member of the Methodist Church.

Charles W. Vogel, proprietor meat market, Chelsea, was born in Lima tp., Feb. 27, 1858. His parents are John F. and Annie (Kappler) Vogel, the former of whom is a blacksmith of Freedom tp. Charles learned the blacksmith trade but did not work at it very long. He obtained a common-school education and obtained a knowledge of the meat trade, while working for William Reyer, of Ann Arbor. He subsequently bought a half interest in George Taylor's meat market at Chelsea, and a few months after purchased the entire establishment. He owns the building where he does business, and also handles ice to some extent. In 1879 he married Elizabeth Neuoffer. They have 1 child—Annie Matilda Phœbe. Mr. Vogel is a member of the German Workmen's Society and of the Lutheran Church.

Frederick Vogel, carriage-maker, Chelsea, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, Sept. 27, 1838, and son of John George and Caroline (Dieterle) Vogel, the latter of whom died when Frederick was 18 or 20 years of age. He came to America in 1858, and after serving three years as a clerk, entered the carriage manufactory of Lawson and Wooster, and subsequently worked in Lansing. He established his present business in Chelsea in 1865. He was one of the originators of the German Workmen's Society, and is its present cashier; is a member of the Lutheran Church and Trustee in that body. He was married in 1865 to Mary Kirn. They have 3 children—Edward Albert, Frederick and Hermann Ernst.

Curran White, an early settler in Michigan, is a descendant of Perogrine White, who came to America in the Mayflower, and whose son was the first white child born in New England. Mr. White was the youngest of 6 children, and his mother Jane (Robinson) White, died March 25, 1815, leaving him an infant but 14 months old. In 1832 his father came to Michigan and bought land in Lima and Freedom tps., Washtenaw county. He was 57 years of age when he died. When his father left New York, Curran was 18 years of age, and in 1833 accompanied his two oldest brothers to Michigan, locating near Adrian. For two years Mr. White worked with his brother clearing land. In the fall of 1833 he invested his earnings in 80 acres of land in Hillsdale county, and the following year bought a second 80-acre tract. In 1835 he returned to New York, but came to Michigan again in 1826, remaining with his father for three years. In 1839 he married Jane S. Keyes, formerly of Oneida county, N. Y. In October of 1836, he settled on his father's farm in Lima tp., comprising 210 acres of timbered land. In 1855 he settled in Chelsea, where he has since resided. Mr. White is a member of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw county, and is a very interesting citizen.

Thomas Wilkinson, merchant, Chelsea, was born in Sylvan tp., Oct. 14, 1837. His parents were Thomas and Jane (Clarey) Wilkinson, who came to this county about 1835. The former was a native of Ireland, and on coming to this county entered 160 acres of land and went to farming. When the Michigan Central railroad was in course of erection, he was engaged in their employ, and in January, 1839, was killed by a mass of falling dirt in a deep cut. Thomas was at that time only 15 months old, and in due time his mother married William Judson. She was the mother of 10 children (one son, named Patrick, being killed by a threshing-machine on Aug. 3, 1858,) and departed this life in the autumn of 1873. Thomas remained on the farm till he was 13 years old, when he bought his time of his step-father, and then started in life for himself. He was employed by S. D. Whittaker, to work on a farm at $5.50 per month. From that time till 1861 he was engaged in almost all kinds of business, and in the latter year, in connection with several others, he erected the fine block extending from Middle street north. He placed a stock of goods in his portion of the block, and in 1862 took H. S. Holmes into partnership with him, a relation which existed till 1864, when Mr. W. purchased his partner's interest and has since continued in that business alone. He has built up a fine trade and is one of the most prominent merchants of Chelsea. He was married in 1864 to Riza M. Morse, an adopted daughter of J. C. Winans. They have 3 children—Archie W., Nettie Jane and Thomas M. Mr. Wilkinson is a member of the Congregational Church in which body he officiates as Trustee. He has been elected to several local offices and filled them with satisfaction to all.

John C. Winans, retired merchant, Chelsea, was born at Watervliet, Albany Co., N. Y., in 1808. He emigrated to this county, and settled in Sylvan tp., in 1833, taking up 160 acres of Government land on section 35. He was married in 1833 to Betsey M. Fenn. In 1839 he entered into mercantile pursuits at Waterloo, and two years later removed to Sylvan Center, where he was engaged in the same business for 10 years, serving as Postmaster a good share of the time. In March, 1850, he removed to Chelsea and built and stocked a store on the corner where the Chelsea Bank is now located. He was engaged in business in the latter place for over 19 years, dealing extensively in produce and lumber. In 1872 Mrs. Winans departed this life, and he subsequently married Mrs. Hannah Johnson. Mr. Winans is a member of the Congregational Church, in which body he officiates as Trustee and Deacon. Since 1868 he has retired from active business life, and will spend the remainder of his days in rest and contentment.

Charles H. Wines is numbered among the most prominent and honored pioneers of this prosperous county. He was born at Shoreham, Addison Co., Vt., Nov. 25, 1823. His parents were Mahlon and Anna (Morrison) Wines, the former of whom was a farmer, mechanic and school-teacher. Charles was 10 years of age when his parents removed to this county, in 1834, and joined the Vermont settlers in Dexter (now Sylvan) tp. Charles learned the mason's trade when quite young, and assisted his father throughout the neighborhood for several years. Mr. Wines desired to become a physician, but his father earnestly requested that he should remain on the farm, and support him in his declining years; filial duty conquered his ambition, and he yielded to his parent's wishes, remaining a farmer up to the present time. In the winter of 1842 he labored with his brother at Jackson, Mich., on the M. C. R. R., then in process of construction. In 1848 he traveled for Filkins Bros., dealers in patent medicines, visiting 18 of the 38 states of the Union. At the outbreak of the civil war, he was employed in recruiting troops, and was chairman of the "war club" of this county, formed for the purpose of enlisting troops, and forwarding hospital supplies. Mr. Wines has taken great interest in the Washtenaw Agricultural Society, having served on the executive committee; also as President and Secretary of the Western Washtenaw Society. He was a member of the Washtenaw Farmers' Mutual Insurance Co., from Sylvan tp., for 12 years. He was member of the first Presbyterian Church organized in Sylvan tp., but on the forming of a Congregational Church united his membership with the latter body, where he has since worshipped. Mr. Wines is Republican in politics, and a man of sterling character, strict integrity and unblemished honor. He was married in 1846 to Emily Durand, and 4 children were born to them—Georgia, Ella, Walter Colton and Charles Sumner. Mrs. Wines died Dec. 10, 1874, and he was again married Aug. 20, 1878 to Mrs. Fanny Emmett, of Augusta tp. They have 1 child—Henry Morrison.

Mahlon Wines (deceased) was one of the first to settle in Sylvan tp. He was born at Hanover, Morris Co., N. J., Oct. 24, 1793, and was a son of William and Nellie (Baldwin) Wines. His parents were poor, but gave their son such advantages for education as the period and their circumstances permitted, and Mahlon improved the opportunities that were offered, in a very wise manner. When he was but a lad, he made profession of religion, and united with the Presbyterian Church. At the age of 19 he went to Vermont and taught two terms of school before reaching his majority. In 1812 he enlisted in the U. S. Army and participated in the memorable battle of Plattsburg. In 1814 he married Miss A. Morrison, and 20 years later removed to Michigan, joining their early Vermont friends, in their new home in Sylvan tp., Washtenaw county. Mr. Wines located land on sec. 24, but having learned the masons' trade he followed that vocation, and laid the foundations of many of the best residences in Chelsea and Sylvan tp. He built the foundation for Elisha Congdon's store, the first business building erected in Chelsea. Mr. Wines assisted in the organization of Sylvan tp., and was subsequently elected Justice of the Peace, serving in that capacity for 13 years. He was present at the organization of the first Presbyterian Church, and the first school district of the new tp., and was otherwise identified with the civil and social progress of that section of Washtenaw county. He died at a ripe old age, and in his death Sylvan tp. lost a good citizen, and Washtenaw county a worthy pioneer.

Henry L. Wood, of the firm of Wood Bros., merchants, Chelsea, was born at Stockbridge, Ingham Co., Mich., Oct. 11, 1839. He came to Chelsea in 1855, and learned the trade of carriage-making, with Boyd & Harlow. In the early part of the war he enlisted in the 24th Reg. Mich. Vol. Inf., and was leader of the regimental band until the organization was dissolved. He then entered the Iron Brigade bands, and served therein until the close of the war. He was engaged in carriage-making, in connection with his brother for some time, and when they sold out, they established their present business. Mr. Wood was married in June, 1873, to Ada Dancer, of Lima tp. They have 2 children—May L. and Henry C. Mr. Wood is a member of the M. E. Church, and Superintendent of the Sunday-school. He is also leader of the singing.

Ira Wood, a prominent and well-respected pioneer of Washtenaw county, was born at Gorham, Ontario Co., N. Y., Jan. 21, 1803, and was the son of James and Clarissa (Hurd) Wood. His father was a farmer, and before the Erie canal was constructed, did considerable teaming on the road to Albany. He was drafted into the army in 1812, and escaped participating in the battle at Queenstown, by the fact of there not being boats enough on the American side to convey all the troops across the river at Lewiston. At the age of 21 years, Ira made the journey to Michigan on foot, crossing the Niagara river at Lewiston, and passing through Canada, without an acquaintance or companion to relieve the monotony of the route. He arrived at Detroit, and entered into the employ of T. W. Palmer, the father of the Palmer who was a prominent Senatorial candidate during the autumn of 1880. Detroit then contained only 2,000 inhabitants, mostly French, and the fort was garrisoned by about 80 soldiers. A few months after his arrival, Mr. Wood removed to Ann Arbor, and was employed by a Mr. Dix. His uncle arrived in the new territory soon after, and Mr. Wood assisted him in farming the 80 acres of land he had purchased. They worked together for three years, doing their own house-work all the while. This kind of a life grew monotonous, and they held a matrimonial council. The uncle had brought a fine vest pattern with him, and it was decided that whoever married first should become the happy owner of this treasure. To assist them in choosing a bride, they decided on a party, and invitations were sent to all the marriageable ladies for miles around. The time came, also the ladies. Mr. Wood was fortunate enough to select a maiden of his choice, and before long he was joined in marriage with Miss Jane Pullen, that happy event occurring July 5, 1827, thus securing two prizes—the bride, and the much coveted vest pattern. The following autumn, he dissolved partnership with his uncle, as one partner was all he needed, and bought a farm of his own in Ann Arbor tp., his parents having removed to Ann Arbor. In 1836 Mr. Wood sold his farm and purchased 160 acres of timbered land in Ingham Co., Mich., where he removed. This tract of land he cleared and improved, residing there over 28 years. The panic of 1837 placed Mr. Wood under serious business embarrassment for several years, and he finally removed into Stockbridge, a village of that county. There he was elected to, and served in every official position in the tp., with the exception of supervisor. Mr. Wood bought 60 acres of land near the village, from which he derived considerable resource. Mrs. Wood died Feb. 15, 1847, and in 1848 Mr. Wood married Mrs. Caroline Bellinger. He then sold his property and removed to Rives tp., Jackson Co., where he bought 80 acres of land, which proved a profitable investment. In 1869 he sold this property and bought 10 lots in Chelsea, Washtenaw Co., and removed to that place. He now resides with one of his sons. Mr. Wood has been the father of 7 children, 4 of whom are living—Mary, James P., Henry L. and Francis. Louisa, Marcia and Harvey, an infant, are deceased. Mr. Wood has been a faithful and consistent member of the M. E. Church for 40 years, and a staunch Republican since the existence of that party.

James P. Wood, of the firm of Wood Bros., merchants, Chelsea, was born at Putnam, Livingston Co., Aug. 17, 1836. His parents were Ira and Jane (Pullen) Wood. In 1852, he learned the trade of a carriage-maker, and in 1857 engaged in business with John L. Harlow, of Chelsea. In 1861 he enlisted to serve as musician in the 24th Mich. Reg. band, and subsequently in the band connected with the famous Iron Brigade. He engaged in business with his brother in 1868, where he has since remained. He was married in 1859 to Sarah A. Freer. They have 1 child living—James Francis. Two children died while Mr. Wood was in the army. Mr. Wood is President of the Trustees of Chelsea village; has been one of the Trustees of Oak Grove cemetery for 18 years; is a Trustee of the M. E. Church, and has been connected with that body since its organization.

Heman M. Woods, hardware merchant, Chelsea, was born at Batavia, N. Y., Dec. 11, 1849; son of Mason M. and Sarah Jane (Morgan) Woods. His father was a farmer, and Heman passed his early life in agricultural pursuits. At the age of 14 years, his parents removed to Ingham county, Michigan, but Heman located at Jackson. He came to Chelsea, Jan. 1, 1869, and was subsequently Cashier of the Chelsea Bank for two years. On Jan. 1, 1874, he entered into copartnership with W. J. Knapp, and their present business was established. He was married July 23, 1873, to Mary H. Sergeant. They have 3 children—Walter H., Jennie and an infant. Mr. Woods is a member of the Chelsea School Board, and one of the village Trustees. He is connected with the Congregational Church, and a Free Mason.

Dr. George E. Wright, dentist, Chelsea, was born at Sodus, Wayne Co., N. Y., Nov. 7, 1842, son of John B. and Catherine (Marquette) Wright. Mr. Wright was raised on a farm, and at the age of 17 years began a course of study in the Western Reserve Institute, at Hiram, Ohio, under the efficient supervision of Prof. James A. Garfield, now President of the United States. In 1861 when the war broke out, Prof. Garfield raised a regiment for the Union army, and 160 of his students, electrified by their teacher's example, joined his regiment, Dr. Wright being among the number. At the close of the Rebellion Mr. Wright resumed his studies at the Institute, and two years later began the study of dentistry. In 1868 he engaged in dental practice at Leslie, Michigan, and four years after in Chelsea. In 1875 he entered the dental department of the University of Michigan, graduating the following year; since that period he has been engaged in the successful practice of his profession at Chelsea. He was married Feb. 27, 1876, to Laurretta Ellsworth, of Chelsea. They have 1 daughter—Nina E. Dr. Wright is connected with the Congregational Church, and the I. O. O. F., having passed all the chairs in the latter institution, and is a member of the Grand Lodge and Grand Encampment of Michigan.

Charles Young, farmer and stock-raiser, sec. 10, Sylvan tp.; was born in England, in 1822. He is the son of John and Ruth (Powell) Young. He received his schooling in the public educational institutions of this State. He was married in 1847 to Betsey Loomis, and to this union have been born 7 children, 5 of whom are now living. His first wife died, and the maiden name of his second wife was Harriett Gordon, daughter of James Gordon, whom he married in 1877. Mr. Young's parents came to this county in 1833, and his mother is still living here. He is the owner of 80 acres of fine farming land. Politically he is a Democrat.

LIMA TOWNSHIP.

The physical characteristics of Lima township compare very favorably with those of any division of Washtenaw. In the northern sections are found Goodrich creek, the county drain, the north branch of Mill creek, with the southern extension of Four-Mile lake and Forty-Acre lake. The marshes of the northern half of the township extend over a thousand acres, while the southern half may be said to want in this respect. Mill creek, with its south branch and other feeders, flows through southern Lima. The creek affords a good water-power. The population is made up of Americans, with a large German element. The people are industrious and claim as good farms as those found in other sections of the county.

THE ORGANIC.

The first township meeting was held at the house of John Hartford, on the first Monday in April, 1834. The meeting was called to order by Russel Parker, one of the justices of the peace, between the hours of 9 and 12 o'clock in the forenoon, and the electors present then proceeded to choose, viva voce, a Moderator and Clerk. John K. Bingham was chosen Clerk and Oliver L. Cooper, Judge of election. The meeting being duly organized and proclamation duly made for the opening of the polls, the electors of the township proceeded to business, and the following persons were duly elected to fill the several offices;

Supervisor—Russel Parker.

Township Clerk—John K. Bingham.

Assessors—Elijah Cooper, Darius Pierce, Lemuel S. Scott.

Constable and Collector—Elias Easton.

Commissioners of Highways—Rodney Ackley, Samuel Cooper, John Davis.

Commissioners of Common Schools—Frederick S. Sheldon, Solomon Sutherland, Oliver L. Cooper.

Directors of the Poor—Samuel Clements, John Davis.

Inspectors of Common Schools—Samuel Bradley, Oliver L. Cooper, Darius Pierce, Elkanah Downer, Deacon G. Willits.

Pound Master—John Harford.

Fence Viewers—Curtiss Hurd, Joseph P. Riggs, John K. Bingham.

The electors at this meeting also passed the following resolutions: Resolved, That the present Township Clerk purchase a suitable book for Township Record, at the expense of the Township of Lima; that this township pay as much bounty for wolf scalps as the county.

Of the foregoing officers, Darius Pierce and Elkanah Downer still reside in the township. Oliver L. Cooper (who had the honor of naming the township) lives in Jackson county. Rodney Ackley emigrated to Oregon in the year 1873. Elias Easton lives in an adjoining county; the remainder are dead.

HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES.

The following is an extract from a paper on Lima township, prepared specially for this work at the request of the general committee, by Morrell Goodrich, Vice-President of the Pioneer Society:

William C. Lemmon purchased his land from the general Government May 19, 1825, but did not settle thereon until 1830.

Samuel Clements arrived about the same period, purchased 640 acres of land, on which he, with his family, settled Aug. 11, 1825.

Jerome Loomis settled in June, 1825; married Margaret Conway in 1832; Russell Parker in 1826, married Hannah Cowan in 1830, and died Nov. 4, 1880, aged 84 years. William Wightman settled in 1826; William Boucher in 1827, married Jennette Simons in 1831; Hezekiah Riggs settled in 1829; Marvin Cadwell, Francis Dougherty, Elias Eastern, John Done, James and Thomas Mitchell came in 1830, and made their locations. John Davis, Calvin Winslow, Jacob White, Thomas Haffey, Lemuel Scott, William Nordman, Gaudeloupe Nordman, Hiram Gregory, Curtis Hurd, Ananna Bennett, Darius Pierce, Hiram Andrews, R. Snell, Samuel Cooper and John Hartford came in 1831.

The first frame house built in the township was that by Jason Caldwell in 1830. He sold the farm to David Dickson, which now belongs to B. C. Whittaker, who came to Michigan in 1835. The house was painted red, then yellow, from which fact it was called the "Yellow Tavern." James and Thomas Mitchell commenced building Samuel Clements' large frame house in the year 1830. It is now occupied by the widow of Charles Clements. This is the oldest house now occupied in the township.

Garleek built the house that is now owned by Hiram Pierce in 1831. It is located a few rods west of the town line in Sylvan. Hezekiah Riggs, noticed in reference to the first blacksmith, traded a span of horses with Samuel Clements in the year 1829, for the west half of the north quarter of section 25. Rufus Crossman was the first merchant opening a store at the Center, as early as 1832. Reeves had a store at the Center in 1840, which, after some years, he sold out, and moved into the township of Pinckney. There he established a flouring mill, and subsequently a distillery, which won for the property the title of the "Devil's Half Acre."

The first tavern that was opened at Lima Center was a large log house kept by John Harford, in 1830. The first frame building that was occupied as a tavern stands there still. The barn that is attached to this house is an old dilapidated building, and is the second building at the east end of the village. Curtis Hurd opened a log-tavern one and one-half miles west of the Center in 1831, and afterward built a large frame house and barn. This was the principal tavern of the district for many years.

There was a saw-mill built by Shaw and Arnold at the Center as early as 1834. It has long since passed away like the once flourishing village of Lima Center.

New Jerusalem was platted by John K. Bingham. He built a saw-mill there in 1832, on the south branch of Mill creek. Palmer Westfall erected a grist-mill about 1860, which is now operated by John G. Mockle. This mill does all the custom work for the farmers of southern Lima, Freedom and the north part of Sharon and Bridgewater. The little village comprises 15 buildings, a blacksmith shop, a cooper shop and one store.

This is a small unincorporated village, and was laid out in 1838 by W. A. Shaw, J. E. Freer and Abram Arnold. Some time pre-vions a settlement had grown up here, and between the years 1833 and 1841 it was quite a thriving place, having at one time two hotels, three stores, and other business in proportion. The first store was opened by Rufus and William A. Crossman. The next was by John Bacon. On the completion of the railroad to Jackson, through the village of Dexter, the village of Lima began to decline. It now has about 15 buildings and less than 100 inhabitants.

POSTOFFICE

The first postoffice, established in 1832, was called Mill Creek, the name by which the village of Lima was known before it was platted. Asa Williams was the first postmaster. Its present postmaster is William Covert.

RELIGIOUS.

The first religious services in the town were held by Elder Carpenter, a Baptist minister, and Elder Baughman, Methodist Episcopal; but the first organized society was that of the Presbyterians, who at a very early date erected a church on land donated by John Harford and Asa Williams. Among the members of this Church were the Mitchells, Easterns, Davises, Whitakers, Wards, Coopers, Freers, Boyds, and others. The Church and society, after years of labor in the cause, were compelled to mortgage the house to raise means to defray expenses. The mortgage was not redeemed and the house finally passed into the possession of the town, and is now used for town purposes.

At Lima Center the Methodist Episcopal organization have a church, which was erected about the year 1848. The following have been regular appointees to this charge: Revs. Benjamin H. Hedges, 1853; R. McConnell, 1861; Joseph W. Hall, Lima and North Lake, 1864; P. O. Johnson, 1865; Shier and Van Anken, 1866; Newell Newton, 1867-8; E. Vanorman, 1869; E. E. Peaman, 1870; W. M. Triggs, 1871; L. J. Whitcomb, 1873-'5; J. Diverty, 1876; J. C. Wortley, 1877; L. P. Davis, 1878; John W. Shank, 1879; J. M. Shank, 1880.

A RAISING WITHOUT WHISKY.

William C. Lemmon, when erecting his house in June, 1830, carried out the principle of temperance so far as to state that whisky would not be supplied to his neighbors who assisted in raising the building. The men who aided in its erection brought the walls up to the first floor, when they demanded the customary, drink. This Mr. Lemmon refused, presenting a substitute in the shape of water, which was not accepted; the men retired, and it was not until the subsequent week that the house was finished, and only then at the solicitation of Gen. Asa Williams, who explained to the people that Mr. Lemmon's family should not suffer on account of the parent's temperance fanaticism.

The oldest settler now residing in Lima is Morrell Goodrich, who arrived here in September, 1827.

A committee furnishes this volume with the following account of the Untold advantages are being reaped from our order. In this direction the members of Lafayette Grange are storing knowledge for the present and future.

PERSONAL SKETCHES.

In the following pages are given sketches of many of those men who made Lima their home and raised it from its primitive condition to the rank of one of the first municipal divisions of the county.

Abner Beach, farmer, sec. 15, Lima tp.; P. O., Lima Center; came from New York to Michigan with his parents in 1835, stopping for about six months at Detroit, and in 1838 to Lima tp. His father, William G Beach, was a well-known citizen of this tp., and died in 1862. His mother, Polly Beach, died in 1875. Both were buried at Lima Center. Abner was born in March, 1832, and has passed the greater part of his life in this vicinity. He was married in November, 1862, to Cynthia Dixon, born in Lima tp. in 1839, daughter of David K. and Zilla Dixon, who were among the early settlers of Lima tp. They have 1 child—Edward, born in 1868. Mr. B. is one of the leading farmers in the section of county where he resides.

Henry A. Carr, physician, Lima Center, was born at New Lebanon, N. Y., June 26, 1822. In this place he grew to manhood, and believing he could make the practice of medicine the labor of his life, he entered Castleton Medical College, in Vermont, graduating in the spring of 1845. Shortly after this he was married to Harriet Sluyter, born in New York, in May, 1831, daughter of William and Martha Sluyter. They had 3 children, all of whom died when young. In the spring of 1846 Mr. Carr came to Michigan, and located in Napoleon, where he practiced his profession for about a year. He then removed to Rowland, Lenawee county, and in 1848 to Manchester, Washtenaw county. In 1850 he went to Lima Center, where he still resides. During the summer of 1880 he went to Renewa, Wisconsin, and opened a drug store, but his health failed him and he returned to Lima Center. Mr. Carr is one of the leading physicians in Washtenaw county, and a member of the Masonic fraternity, and connected with the Chelsea lodge. Mr. and Mrs. C. are members of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw County.

William H. Cook (deceased), was born at Rodney, Jefferson Co., N. Y., April 19, 1810; son of Stephen Cook. He came to Washtenaw county when a young man. On Oct. 20, 1839, he married Emeline Beckers, born in Tompkins county, N. Y., Feb. 23, 1811, daughter of Simeon and Polly (Patchin) Beckers, the former a native of Massachusetts, and the latter a native of New York. Mrs. Cook had come to Washtenaw county at an early date, and was one of the first school-teachers in Lima tp. After their marriage they moved into Lima tp., where she still lives. Mr. Cook died Oct. 31, 1870, and was interred at Dexter. He had been a member of the M. E. Church at Dexter for some years. He had 5 children, all boys, born to him—Samuel C., of Grand Rapids; William H., of St. Paul, Minn.; Stephen D., of Michigan; Marcus S., living at home, and George E., of Sherman, Texas.

B. G. Cooper, farmer, sec. 19, Lima tp.; was born in Ontario county, N. Y., Dec. 16, 1810. He emigrated to this county in 1831, and purchased 160 acres of wild, uncultivated land. He has been twice married; in 1845 to Charlotte Depue, who was born in this county, in 1827. By this marriage they had 4 children, 2 of whom are living—Almira, wife of Emery Chitman, and Frank. The deceased are Elmer and Ellen. The mother of these children died in 1855. In 1860, he was married to Mrs. Elizabeth Frost, daughter of James and Hester Van Alta. By this marriage 5 children have been born—Addie, Elmer, Lena, Osman and Sarah, deceased. Mr. C. is a member of the M. E. denomination, and a Republican.

Lester L. Cooper, farmer; P. O., Dexter; was born in Addison county, Vermont, Feb. 25, 1808. He was the son of Lester and Sally (Snow) Cooper. They were parents of 4 children, when they came to this county in 1829—Lester L., Mary, Laura and Sarah. The second and third children are deceased. The father of these children, Lester Cooper, was born in Addison county, in 1780, and married July 9, 1801. He died March 15, 1845. He resided in his native county until his removal to Michigan. Lester L. was married in this county in 1835. Mrs. C. died in 1860, and in 1864 he married Mrs. Susan Blanchard, born near Ann Arbor, Sept. 9, 1834, and daughter of Nicholas Dole, a former resident of this county. Some years previous to the late war, she had moved with her husband to Illinois. During the war he enlisted in Co. K, 127th Ill. Vol. Inf., and died in the hospital at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., in May, 1862. Mr. Cooper has an adopted daughter, Nancy, P. Avery, who was born in Kendall county, Illinois, in February, 1870.

Consider Cushman, farmer, sec. 19, Lima tp.; son of Ira and Anna (Sprague) Cushman, natives of New York, and of English descent. They emigrated to Washtenaw county in 1835, and settled in Lima tp., where they remained till death, the former dying in 1874, and the latter in 1861. They were the parents of 6 children, of whom Consider was the third, and born in New York, June 3, 1818. He was raised a farmer's boy, and received his education in his native State, during the winter months. On Nov. 3, 1839, he was married to Charlotte Smith, daughter of Jones and Lucy Smith, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and of Welsh descent, and the latter a native of New Jersey and of French parentage. They came to this county in 1836. Mrs. C. was born in 1818. Nine children were sent to bless this alliance, 5 of whom are living—Lucy M., wife of Leonard Rodman, of Lima tp.; Jane C., the twins, Jerome and Marion, and Oliver J. The names of the 4 deceased were Byron, Wesley, Lewis and Charlotte E. Mr. C. came to this county a poor man, and has toiled and struggled till he has gained the ascendancy over poverty, and after giving each of his children a good piece of land, has 110 acres left, which will keep him comfortable the remainder of his life. His religious views are free and unbiased, and he is considered a fine man, a good neighbor, and an influential citizen.

Walter H. Dancer, sec. 20, Lima tp.; P. O., Chelsea; was born in this county, June 21, 1844. He is a son of Henry and Emily (Gully) Dancer, the former a native of England, and the latter a native of New York. Mr. Dancer, Sr., came to Washtenaw county in 1830, and his wife followed him five years later. Walter H. was reared on a farm and has devoted almost his entire life to agricultural pursuits. In 1867, he married Mary Tucker, born in New York, March 29, 1840, daughter of Mary and Christiana Tucker. The result of this marriage has been the birth of 3 children—Herbert A., born March 12, 1870; Henry M., born March 8, 1874; and William Z. C., born Feb. 11, 1879. Mr. Dancer is a prominent Democrat of Lima tp., and has served that party in several official positions; was School Director and Treasurer of the school fund. At present he represents the township in the Board of Supervisors. Mr. and Mrs. D. are members of the M. E. Church. Mr. Dancer's father died in 1850, but his widow is still living with her son Walter H., on the 140 acres of land forming the old homestead.

Leander Easton is a native of Lima tp., where he was born in June, 1840. His parents came from Yates Co., N. Y., and settled in Lima tp. in May, 1831. His father, Paul D. Easton, was the son of Enos and Sally (Drake) Easton, and born in Seneca Co., N. Y., Aug. 12, 1805. In Feb., 1826, he married Sally Adams, born in Rutland Co., Vt., Feb. 14, 1805, and daughter of Ashel and Polly Adams, the former a native of Connecticut, and the latter a native of Massachusetts. They came to Yates Co., N. Y., when Sally was an infant. Eight children were born to them—Rufus, died, aged 22; Rhoda, wife of J. D. Chandler, Marshall Co., Iowa; Ambrose J., enlisted in Co. K., 4th Mich. Vol. Inf., and was killed at Malvern Hill, June 30, 1863; Fernando, a resident of Des Moines, Iowa; Leander; Almetta, wife of John C. Bradley, Atlantic, Iowa; Orpha, wife of G. M. Thompson, Ingham Co., Mich.; Mary A., wife of Thomas Fisk, Polk, Iowa. In the summer of 1832 Mr. Easton was summoned to appear armed and equipped for service, in the then supposed war with the Black Hawk Indians. He was not willing to leave his young wife and two children in the timber of Lima tp., far from any habitation whatever, so he thought it best to return to New York. This he did, and in the spring of 1834 came once more to this county, and in the autumn of that year bought his farm on sec. 14, Lima tp., where he lived until his death, which occurred Dec. 23, 1858. Mrs. Easton still survives, and resides with her son Leander, on the old homestead. She is the only person living in Lima tp. who came there in 1831. Mr. E. was a faithful member of the M. E. Church, as is his wife. Leander was reared on a farm, and in Sept., 1863, married Mary M. Dixon, born in Lima tp., in Dec., 1841. They had 1 child born to them—Alvin J. Mrs. Easton died in Aug., 1865, and was buried at Lima Center. In Feb., 1870, Mr. E. married Elizabeth M. Doane, born in Dexter tp. in Feb., 1842, and daughter of John and Annie Doane. The result of this marriage was the birth of two children—Annie L. and Helen M. In July, 1871, death deprived Mr. Easton of his noble wife, and she was laid away to await the great judgment day. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., and a successful farmer. He has been for many years a faithful member of the M. E. Church.

Luther James, Esq., an old and honored pioneer of Washtenaw Co., was born at Goshen, Mass., July 13, 1803. His parents were Capt. Malachi and Elizabeth (Lyman) James, the former of whom was a descendant of John James, the elder of three brothers who came to America from England about the time the Pilgrim Fathers landed at Plymouth Rock. John James married Deborah Bates, of Pembroke, Mass. To them were born 6 children, of whom John James, jr., was the eldest. He was born in 1744; married Lois Beals, of Cohasset, Mass., April 4, 1765, and died July 11, 1804. To them were born 7 children, of whom Malachi was the second. He was born July 9, 1767. On Feb. 18, 1790, he married Elizabeth Lyman, of Northampton, Mass., who was born Oct. 31, 1771. The former was an aid to Gen. Mattoon, in what was known as "Shay's Rebellion." He died Aug. 24, 1849, at the age of 83 years, and his wife followed him July 9, 1856, aged 85 years. Malachi moved with his father to Goshen, Mass., in 1769. To him were born 11 children, of whom Luther was the sixth. Four of the daughters married at the old homestead. Some of the children became prominent citizens of this county, and added much to its material wealth. Among them were Enoch and Lewis L. The former died at Ann Arbor, Feb. 28, 1867, and the latter at Dexter, Aug. 17, 1880. Luther James, the subject of this sketch, was reared to manhood on his father's farm in Massachusetts, and received his preliminary education at the district-schools, subsequently attending an academy at Old Hadley, Mass. Believing that in the Western States he could find a field of labor which would give him a better chance to expand and increase the excellent business qualities which nature had bestowed upon him, Mr. James came to Michigan, in the summer of 1835, and located in Washtenaw county. His first business was dealing in horses, which he purchased in Ohio, and disposed of in this and adjoining counties. Having a little cash at his disposal, he naturally turned his attention to some business, in which he could invest his ready means, and make a fair and comfortable living. With a shrewd foresight, he saw the wonderful success which could be obtained in purchasing wool, and shipping it to the East, having previously been engaged in the wool trade in the Eastern States. He accordingly began operations, though on a small scale at first. During the early days, there being but comparatively little wool raised in this State he extended his field of operations so as to include this, Jackson, Lenawee, and other counties. At one time, Mr. James was the largest wool-buyer in the State of Michigan. When he first arrived in this county, Mr. James acted as broker for parties in the East, and has never entirely given up that business. He has always taken an active interest in the public affairs of Washtenaw county, and his generosity in all matters pertaining to the welfare of the community is excelled by none. Seeing the necessity for the erection of a more substantial structure in which to store the public records of the county, Mr. James threw his energy and influence into the enterprise of building a new court-house for Washtenaw county. After considerable length of time, the matter was brought before the Board of Supervisors, which ordered a vote to be taken by the people. This was accordingly done, and the measure defeated. It was once more submitted and again defeated. Mr. James then set about enlisting the people in behalf of the intended enterprise. He canvassed the entire western part of the county. It having been twice defeated, he saw he must renew his energies, or his long cherished idea would fall to ashes. He therefore came forward, and proposed to give to the county a clock to put in the tower of the building, which should cost not to exceed $1,000; to that effect he issued a bond to the supervisors of the county, and again commenced the canvass. On the next vote, the proposition of building was carried by a large majority, and Mr. James retired from the field with a full knowledge of having done his entire duty in the matter. The proposition for building was carried mainly through the influence of Mr. James' gift, and a donation of $20,000, made by the city of Ann Arbor, over and above its proportion of taxes. The edifice was erected, and a handsome clock put in the tower, for which Mr. James gave the Board his check for $1,000. During the October session of 1879, of that body, it "Resolved, that the thanks of the Board and of the people of the county be extended to Mr. James for his munificent gift, which secures for the county the clock which adorns our court-house tower.

"Resolved, That a copy of the above resolutions be presented to Mr. James, and published in the city papers."

Every peal of the noonday hour resounds throughout the city, the enterprise of this generous pioneer; and every tick, tick, tick of its long swinging pendulum shall bear to future generations worthy commemoration of one whose acts of public benevolence were emulated by the many, but excelled by few. For many years Mr. James made his home with his sister, Mrs. Sophia Sears, but since her demise resides with his nephew, Thomas S. Sears, of Lima tp. Mr. James has been uniformly successful in business, and is familiarly known throughout this and adjoining counties as a man of strict integrity and uncompromising honor. His portrait embellishes this volume.

He was reared on a farm, and still follows that occupation, with the exception of a few months in summer, when he operates a steam thresher in Lima and Scio tps. In 1866 he was married to Rebecca Croman, born in this county in 1837. They had 1 child by this marriage, Eddie, born Jan. 10, 1867. Mr. P. had but a small share of this world's goods when he came into the county, but by 54 years of hard toiling and economizing, he had succeeded in acquiring quite a competency, and after settling a piece of property on each of his first wife's children, he had 227 acres of fine farm land at the time of his death, which occurred Dec. 4, 1880. He had filled several official trusts, and died mourned by all with whom he was acquainted. His widow and her 3 sons are living on the old homestead.

Hon. Sampson Parker, farmer, sec. 24, Lima tp., is the son of Orin and Jemima (Day) Parker, the former a native of England, and the latter of New York nativity. Darius Pierce was born Sept. 2, 1801, at Farmington, Ontario Co., N. Y. His parents were Nathan and Polly (McLouth) Pierce, who were married in Massachusetts, and removed to Manchester, N. Y., where the former died in 1814, at the age of 44 years. His grandfather, Nathan P., raised and commanded a company of militia at Berkshire, Mass., and was with Gen. Montgomery at his memorable defeat. He retreated to the River Sorrel, where he subsequently died of small-pox. Mr. Pierce's father was Pardon Arnold. He was a native of Smithfield, R. I., and when young accompanied his parents to Berkshire Co., Mass., when he was married to Sarah Carpenter. She bore him 9 children, 2 sons and 7 daughters, Mrs. Pierce being the only one who made the West her home. The two sons were soldiers in the Revolutionary war. Both parents departed this life at Farmington, N. Y. Darius Pierce came to Michigan in 1832, locating a quarter section of land now embraced by Albion, and also a half section, where the village of Teconsha, 12 miles from Marshall, now stands. In 1846, he was elected as Representative to the Michigan Legislature, and re-elected in 1847. During the latter term, the capital was permanently located at Lansing, Mr. Pierce drafting the bill, and being instrumental in its passage. He was the only member from this district, out of seven, who voted for the bill, the remaining ones wanting it located at Ann Arbor. He was a Justice of the Peace, for four years before Michigan was a State, and served as County Commissioner the same length of time, and Supervisor 10 years. His brother Nathan was taken prisoner at Queens-town, N. Y., in the war of 1812. After coming to Michigan he was elected to the Legislature and subsequently the State Senate. The capital was then at Detroit, and Nathan, being in the habit of always walking to and from each session, acquired the familiar title of "Old Boots."

Darius Pierce had 4 sons, 2 of whom, Henry and A. W., were soldiers in the Union army. The former was in command of a cavalry charge during the second battle of Bull Run, and while gallantly leading his men toward victory, a stray ball found a lodging place in his breast, and he fell dead from his horse. He was carelessly buried by the enemy, but subsequently disinterred by his brother Nathan, and now rests in Chelsea Cemetery. The other warrior, A. W., was in Co. K, 20th Reg. Mich. Vol. Inf., and had served in Virginia, Kentucky and Mississippi. He had been in bad health for some time, but refused to be discharged. He died on board a steamer, near Memphis, Tenn. The other two sons, Nathan and Edwin, went to California, on the overland route, in 1852, remaining there four years, when they returned to Michigan. Nathan went once more to the Golden State in 1859, but returned in 1863. Mr. Pierce has led an unusually active life, but now in his declining days he is quite feeble, and health much impaired. We present as one of the pioneers, Mr. Pierce's portrait.

Thomas Sears, jr., a well-known citizen of Lima tp., is the son of Thomas Sears, sr., a prominent practitioner of that section of Washtenaw Co. The latter was a native of Ashfield, Mass., and a son of Rowland and Jedediah (Conant) Sears, residents of Massachusetts. They were descendants of Richard Sears, a Pilgrim, who came over with the last company of Leyden exiles, landing at Plymouth, May 8, 1630. Rowland Sears was a farmer by occupation, but his son, Dr. Thomas Sears, prepared for a medical practice under the preceptorship of Peter Bryant, father of the famous deceased poet, William Cullen Bryant. He received his degree from a medical college of New York, and began to practice in Peru, Mass. He removed to Michigan in the summer of 1837, and settled on a farm in Lima tp., now occupied by the subject of this sketch. He was married in 1815 to Sophia James, of Goshen, Mass., daughter of Capt. Malachi James, and sister of Luther James, an honored pioneer of this county. At the time of their settlement in Michigan they had 7 children—Claudius W., a graduate of West Point; Frances, wife of William S. Martin, now a resident of Dexter; Sophia A., a wife of Dr. Ewing (dec.) of Dexter; Clara C., wife of H. H. Noble, of the firm of Dexter & Noble, Grand Rapids, Mich. (who died in 1868); Thomas S., our subject; Elizabeth L., who married Freeman Rowley, and now resides at Canton, Dakota, and Sarah J., wife of Edwin Rowley, who also resides at Canton, Dakota. After locating his farm, Dr. Sears resumed his practice, and as sickness was prevalent to a great extent in pioneer days, he had more than his share of physician's labor. The arduous duties to which he was subjected undermined his health, and he died of chill fever on Aug. 25, 1839. His family were left to strive with fortune on an unimproved farm. Thomas, jr., was the eldest, and only 12 years of age. Although so young, he was obliged to bear the burden and responsibility of the farm labor and management of the estate, and manfully and cheerfully did he perform the allotted task. The original farm consisted of 160 acres; but now Mr. Sears, who succeeded to his father's estate, has a fine and well-improved farm of 400 acres. He was married Dec. 23, 1858, to Anna Congdon. Mr. Sears' mother was a graduate of Westfield Academy, of Massachusetts, and departed this life Jan. 16, 1879, at the ripe old age 87 years.

Mr. Sears' residence, near Chelsea, is contemporaneous with the history of the village, and its owner remembers distinctly when the country adjacent was covered with heavy timber and thick underbrush. During the season of 1880, Mr. Sears improved his residence by the erection of a large addition, and at present has one of the finest dwellings in Lima tp., and a farm well supplied with all the modern improvements. Mr. Sears is a member of the Congregational Church Society, and assisted materially in the erection of the church at Chelsea. He has been a farmer of no mean ability, always paying the closest attention to little things about the farm and home, thereby learning the art of knowing how to save crops and large sums of money whenever it came to his lot to do so. He well deserves the success which he has attained. A portrait of Mr. Sears may be found in this work.

Uriah Stephens, farmer, sec. 30, Lima tp.; P. O., Chelsea; was born in New York, May 20, 1825. His parents, Allen C. and Joanna (Crane) Stephens, natives of New York, and English descent. The former died in New York in 1845, and the latter died in this State several years ago. Uriah emigrated to this county in 1837, and settled in Dexter tp., but since 1855 has resided on his present farm, consisting of 80 acres. On Jan. 1, 1855, he married Caroline Whitaker, born in New York Dec. 24, 1822, and daughter of Isaac and Achsah Whitaker, natives of New York, and of German ancestry. They came to this county in 1836, where the latter still lives at the advanced age of 85. Mr. Stephens has been blessed with 5 children, 3 of whom are living—Isaac A., Chauncey M. and Anna E. Mr. S. has been Township Treasurer one year; also has been member of School Board and School Director for six or eight years. Politically, he is a Republican.

Hiram Ward (deceased) was born in New Jersey in 1798, and moved with his parents to Cayuga Co., New York, in 1795, where he spent his early life. He served in the war of 1812, and in 1815 married Olive Vanguisen, born in New Jersey in 1793, coming with her parents to New York in 1805. In 1835 they emigrated to Michigan, and settled on sec. 23, Lima tp., Washtenaw county, where Hiram died in 1842, and his wife in 1855. Three children were born to them, all of whom are living—Alonzo De Witt, Linval and Phebe Caroline. Linval was born in New York, in May, 1819, and came with his parents to Michigan, and still resides on the old homestead. In 1845 he married Mary Peck, and 2 children were born to them—Merritt and Frank. Mrs. Ward died in 1857, and in April, 1861, Mr. Ward married Martha Barch, born in Steuben Co., N. Y., in 1827, and came with his parents to this county at the age of 10.

Elias Westfall (deceased) was an old pioneer of Washtenaw county. He was born April 29, 1798, in Sussex Co., N. J., and was the son of Solomon and Parmelia (Westbrook) Westfall, the parents of 12 children. His father was a school-teacher, and Elias, when 14 years old, was bound as an apprentice to a tailor, the conditions of such bargain being the allowance of three months each winter to attend school, and when he attained his majority to receive a new suit of clothes. Not many years after, he went to Yates Co., N. Y., and Sept. 1, 1821, he married Christiana Sprows, born in New Jersey March 20, 1830. He then settled on a farm, following that occupation in summer, and working at his trade in winter. A few years after he married, he moved with his wife and son, Palmer, to Canadice, Ontario Co., N. Y., where he worked as before mentioned, and united with the M. E. Church. In 1835 he came to Michigan, bought a farm in Jackson county, built a log cabin, and returned to New York. In 1836 he emigrated to his new home with his family. In 1837 he sold his farm, and went to Lima tp., Washtenaw Co., where he bought a farm of 200 acres, residing there till his death, which occurred March 6, 1876. His son, Wesley Westfall, was born in Ontario Co., N. Y., Oct. 11, 1830. He came with his parents to this county in 1837, and spent his youthful days on his father's farm. Oct. 1, 1867, he married Jennie Stewart, daughter of De Witt and Mary Stewart, of Isabella Co., Mich. They have 2 children—Nelson and May. Mr. Westfall used the first steam thresher ever brought inside the borders of Washtenaw county, on July 28, 1870.

Mr. Westfall made religion the most important feature of his life. When he lived in Jackson county, he would often ride an ox to Church in the winter season, and when he arrived at his destination would tie the rope around the ox's horns and let him go home. After meeting, Mr. Westfall would trudge home alone over the dimly marked-out path. He had 6 children born to him, 5 of whom are living, 4 sons and 1 daughter. The other daughter, Christiana, is deceased. Mrs. Westfall died Jan. 4, 1845, after a sickness of only two weeks duration. A friend remarked: "She died a triumphant death, proclaiming happiness to the last, and her bedside was one of joy rather than of sorrow. She was the firmest Christian I ever met." We give Mr. Westfall's portrait.

Levi Whipple, farmer, sec. 33, Lima tp., was born in New York in 1817. His parents were Mason and Polly (Tiffany) Whipple, natives of Massachusetts, and of English descent. They came to this county in 1833, and settled in Lima tp., where the former died in 1842, and the latter in 1863. Levi has followed the occupation of a farmer through life, and at present owns 120 acres of good land, valued at $60 per acre. In 1853 he married Amanda Owens, born in New York in 1832. They have been blessed with 4 children—Mason, Warren, Clara and Edmund J. He is also raising a little girl by the name of Mabel Oliver. Mr. W. is politically a Republican, and in religion is a Free Thinker.

Finley B. Whitaker, farmer, sec 19, Lima tp.; P. O. Chelsea.; was born in this county Dec. 21, 1846. His parents were Charles and Laura (Beech) Whitaker, natives of Yates county, N. Y., the former of Scotch and the latter of German descent. They came to Washtenaw county at an early day, and rank among the pioneers of "fair Washtenaw." Finley B. was married in this State in 1878, to Alice J. Conklin, a daughter of Calvin F. and Nancy E. (Preston) Conklin, the former a native of this county, the latter a native of New York. They have 1 child by this marriage—Burleigh C., born Sept. 16, 1878. Mr. Whitaker has held several local offices, and is a member of Chapter 98, Blue Lodge, Grass Lake, of the Masonic fraternity. In politics he votes with the Democratic party.

Walter C. Wines, son of Charles Wines, of Sylvan tp., was born in Sylvan tp., Sept. 21, 1852. His life was mostly spent on his father's farm, but in 1878 he went to Detroit, and was engaged in the lumber business. In the spring of 1880 he returned to Washtenaw county and purchased his present farm, near Che sea. Feb. 22, 1826, he married Mrs. Sarah J. Pratt, born in Sylvan tp. in February, 1845, and a daughter of Cyrus Beckwith, a former resident of this county. They have 3 children—Sydney and Alice Pratt, and Walter C. Wines.

SCIO TOWNSHIP.

The town of Scio was organized by the Territorial Council March 25, 1833, and the first township meeting was held at the residence of Horace Leek, on section 9. It embraces township No. 2 south, of range 5 east, and is one of the best agricultural towns in the county.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The first settler in the town was Alexander Laverty, who came in October, 1825, and located on section 25. He lived here but a few years, when he disposed of his place, moved west, and dropped out of the recollection of nearly all of the early settlers.

Hiram Putnam located the west half of the northwest quarter of section 18, in 1825, and moved his father and mother there in 1826. Mr. Putnam sold out and moved to Ingham county, in 1835.

Geo. W. Patterson and Elias Smith came in 1826 and settled on section 15. In the fall of this year Russell Parker located the northwest quarter of section 30, and James Cleland the southwest quarter of section 21. Robert McCartney and Samuel Rath purchased farms on section 28, and moved to them in the spring of 1827. Hiram Arnold was a settler of 1827, locating his homestead on section 14. Mr. Arnold remained on his farm until his death, which occurred in 1879. He, in the 52 years of a busy life in this county, accumulated a large fortune. Rufus Knight was also a settler of 1827, and located his homestead on section 34. He was a fine man, a good citizen, and was quite successful in life. James Popkins settled on section 14 in 1827. When Mr. Popkins first began life in this county he was as ignorant of farming as a child, but having a will and a determination to do, he became a successful farmer. He was a good man and a conscientious member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Cornelius Brink, Vreebon Bates and George Babcock all came in 1827. David Godfrey settled on section 22, in the spring of 1828. Mr. Godfrey is now living a retired life in Ann Arbor. Mr. Beck and Mr. Roys also settled the same year on section 27.

The settlement of the township was quite rapid from 1828. From 1829 to 1831 came Miller, Paul, Bissinger, Laubengeyer, Case, Yeoman, Hancock, Courtwright, Morris, Sloah, Richardson, Croman, Lacey, Seydam, White, Blood, Gregory, Phelps, Bingham, Mains, Smith, Swift, Rosier, Foster, Crane, Wing and others.

In 1832 Capt. Hays, who settled on section 8, contracted with Clark Sill to build his house, which he described to his neighbor as follows: "She is to be built after the most approved model; her bulwarks are to be large trees; and she is to be seven feet lower deck, and five feet upper deck, with port-holes in the upper and lower decks, with scuppers on the upper deck. She is to be altogether sea-worthy." Captain Hays had an adventurous life. He was born in Cape Ann, Massachusetts, a few years before the Revolutionary war, and enlisted as a sailor when but a mere youth. He followed the sea until just prior to his removal to Washtenaw county. He was a privateer during the war of 1812, and captured more prizes from the enemy than could be cared for. He was twice taken prisoner by pirates, on one occasion of which his crew was given seven days' rations and told by the pirates to keep out of their way, for if again taken they would all be slain. The rations were divided so as to last a month, instead of a week, before the expiration of which time they fell in with a friendly vessel and were relieved. After the war the Captain entered the merchant service. As already stated, he moved here in 1832, and both himself and wife will long be remembered by old settlers. They were a remarkably kind-hearted couple and had one son and daughter. On one occasion the Captain attended divine services at a church in the neighborhood. A protracted meeting was in progress, with some excitement. One individual was very much excited and prayed long and loud, and exhorted sinners at once to repent. The Captain sat in silence during the whole service, never raising his eyes from the floor. This excitable person, witnessing his down-cast looks, went to him, and placing his hand upon his shoulder, said: "Well, Captain, what do you think?" Raising his eyes for the first time, and looking square at the questioner, he replied: "Think! Why, I think a steady helm is best in a storm!"

WATER-COURSES.

This township is well watered by the Huron river, Mill creek, Honey, and their tributaries. The Huron river, in its serpentine course, flows through the two northern tiers of sections, and is crossed by the Michigan Central railroad six times in the township. As noticed in detail elsewhere, the water-power from this river, is well utilized at Dexter, Delhi, Scio and Farmer's. Mill creek enters this township on section 18, and runs almost due north through sections 7 and 6, emptying into the Huron river at the village of Dexter. Honey creek, with its numerous small tributaries affords excellent privileges for stock purposes.

The following very graphic description of Honey creek valley was written for this work by J. W. Wing:

In this township, and about midway between the city of Ann Arbor and the village of Dexter, is situated the beautiful and picturesque little valley of Honey creek. On either side its banks are natural meadows that look very bright and beautiful in the summer time, and where large quantities of hay are annually secured for the wintering of stock. Beyond the natural meadows, the land is very productive, especially on the northwest side of the stream. On the southeast side the land is sandy, and was originally covered with yellow and black oak timber, but on the northwest side of the stream the soil is a deep, rich, gravelly loam, and was originally comparatively free from timber, but there were many fine specimens of burr-oak and white oak to be found.

The stream itself is not large, but very beautiful. It is fed by numerous large springs, nearly all of which are in the township of Scio, and the water is so clear that the smallest fish can be distinctly seen as it glides over its pebbly bottom. It being fed by large springs so near at hand it seldom ever freezes over in winter, and is so cold in summer that it is used by the haymakers to quench their thirst while they are securing the crops that grow upon its banks. For many years after the first settlement of this county it was quite common to find in this little stream large fish that had found their way up from the Huron river, but when the Central railroad was built it was found necessary to place a large embankment at the mouth of this stream, and it greatly obstructed the free passage of large fish to its source, and now we seldom find any in its waters that weigh more than a pound or two. This stream derived its name from the large number of bees and bee-trees that were found in its immediate vicinity, when it was first settled by the whites.

The plains for several miles up and down the stream on either side before they were disturbed by man were one vast flower bed during the summer season, which made a happy hunting ground and a fine field for labor for these little industrious and far-seeing creatures, and it is said upon good authority that single trees were found in that locality by the early settlers from which were taken more than 300 pounds of honey; and those containing from 100 to 150 were quite common. These acquisitions to the stores of the pioneers were of great benefit to them, for fruit was scarce and sugar dear; but nature seemed to have prepared this portion of the State, and especially this little valley, for the settlement of civilized man in a pre-eminent degree. The natural meadows furnished hay for their stock; the deer that roamed plentifully over the plains, and the fish that were numerous in the streams furnished them with provisions; cranberries were obtained from the native meadows, and honey from the flower beds was stored away in the trees of the forest, apparently waiting their coming.

The land in this valley was mostly located by the pioneers in the year 1826-'7. They have nearly all passed away. There are a few yet remaining—J. W. Wing, Geo. A. Peters, Robert Popkins, and Mrs. Samuel Holmes, all of whom removed to this locality with their parents when they were very young.

The people of this neighborhood for some years after settlement here went to a French settlement on the Rouge river for fruit. Three or four of the neighbors would club in and go with their teams for apples and be gone some days. The children were so anxious for the return of their parents with the rare fruit that they often went two or three miles to meet them.

SCHOOLS.

The first school-house was of logs, and was erected in 1829, on section 14, and was known as the Arnold school-house. Here assembled the boys and girls for many miles around, and were drilled in the rudiments of a common-school education. As the country became settled other school-houses were erected and districts organized and re-organized to suit the conveniences of the patrons of the schools. At the present time there are nine whole and fractional districts in the township.

MILLS.

Mill interests in the early history of the county were considered of much greater importance than at present. The easy communication between neighborhoods, towns and cities by means of the railroad has revolutionized almost everything, but nothing more than that of transforming the grain into flour or meal. To the early settler one of the most important items in his calculations was the grinding of his grain. There were no steam mills then, and a site for a water mill was an important thing. The pioneers were all poor, and, although mill sites might have been plenty, they could not improve them, therefore numerous devices were invented to convert wheat and corn into bread. A few were possessed of hand-mills not greatly unlike those in use some thousands of years ago, and to which allusion is made in the Bible (Matt. xxiv: 41): "Two women shall be grinding at the mill," etc. The first mill in Scio was that of Judge Dexter, at the village of Dexter. This mill was followed in due time by one at Scio, two at Delhi and one below Delhi, in Scio, known as Osborne's mill.

PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.

Scio Grange, 329, P. of H.—This grange was organized by L. R. Brown, March 12, 1874, and has had a very flourishing existence. Those composing its charter members were Sampson Parker, Daniel Lyon, Geo. A. Peters, Wm. C. Foster, Jacob Tremper, George E. Peters, Albert Tremper, Arthur S. Lyon, Harvy Allmendinger, Henry E. Peters, Frank Linten, Richard Lebbs, Tobias Holmes, John H. Haines, George Sebolt, Charles Dixon, Israel Kuhnle, James M. Hill, David Allmendinger, George Allmendinger, James W. Wing, August Sebolt, Samuel W. Holmes, Mrs. Geo. A. Peters, Mrs. William C. Foster, Mrs. Albert Tremper, Mrs. Harry Allmendinger, Mrs. Henry E. Peters, Miss Bell Holmes, Mrs. Charles Dixon, Mrs. Israel Kuhnle, Mrs. James M. Hill, Mrs. George Sebolt, Mrs. Samuel W. Holmes—in all 34. Its first officers were Tobias Holmes, Master; Sampson Parker, Overseer; James W.

Wing, Lecturer; Arthur T. Lyon, Steward; Samuel W. Holmes Assistant Steward; Daniel Lyon, Chaplain; Israel Kuhnle, Treasurer; George A. Peters, Secretary; Henry Allmendinger, Gate Keeper; Mrs. George A. Peters, Ceres; Mrs. Charles Dixon, Flora; Mrs. James M. Hill, Pomona; Mrs. Tobias Holmes, Lady Assistant Steward. Present officers: David M. Finley, Master; Arthur S. Lyon, Overseer; James W. Wing, Lecturer; Tobias Holmes, Steward; Charles Dixon, Asst. Steward; Mrs. Tobias Holmes, Chaplain; Daniel Lyon, Treasurer; George A. Peters, Secretary; Harvey Allmendinger, Gate-keeper; Mrs. Charles Dixon, Ceres; Mrs. Harvey Allmendinger, Pomona; Mrs. Foster Litchfield, Flora; Mrs. George A. Peters, Lady Assistant Steward.

Since its organization 26 members have been added, making a total of 60. Of this number one-half have withdrawn or have been suspended, leaving its present membership 30. Of those withdrawn, the most of them have removed from the vicinity. Those holding the position of masters since organization have been Tobias Holmes, Sampson Parker, James W. Wing, George A. Peters, Foster Litchfield, A. Y. Case and Daniel Lyon. In relation to this grange a member thus writes: "The grange in this locality has had a very favorable influence upon its members, and we think that influence has extended to many outside the order. It has shown the farmer the importance and necessity of system and science in his business, it has made him a thinker, it has enlarged his views, it has developed his talents, aroused his social nature, made him better morally, brightened his life and beautified his home, increased his income, kept his boys and girls on the farm, and has given him that honored place among men to which his intelligence and the importance of his vocation justly entitles him."

TOWNSHIP OFFICERS.

In consequence of the loss by fire of the early records of the town, a complete list of its officers is not obtainable. The following comprises the list of supervisors, clerks, treasurers, justices of the peace and school inspectors since 1843:

MISCELLANEOUS.

There are eight cemeteries in the town, known as the Dexter, Scio, Popkins, Catholic, Phelps, Lutheran, Methodist and Allmendinger cemeteries.

The record of Scio in the Rebellion is a subject of pride. Every quota was filled without resort to draft or the issuing of bonds by the township to pay bounties.

From the various railroad stations in this township, the following shipments were made in 1880: Delhi Mills, flour, 41,000 barrels; Osborne's Mills, flour, 9,425 barrels; Osborne's Mills, wheat, 6,500 bushels; Dexter Mills, wheat, 111,200 bushels; Dexter Mills, flour, 11,000 barrels.

The township of Scio contains one incorporated and two unincorporated villages—Dexter, Delhi and Scio, of each of which special mention is made in connection.

VILLAGE OF DEXTER.

The village of Dexter is located on the two northwestern sections of the township of Scio, within a semi-circle formed by Mill creek on the west and the Huron on the north and east. Its location is picturesque. Stretching from the plateau on the south to the river bank, it exhibits, as it were, its numerous and beautiful churches, large school-buildings, comfortable residences, and well built business houses to the thousands of travelers who pass onward by the M. C. R. R. The land on which it is located was purchased by Samuel W. Dexter, in 1824, but the village was not laid out and platted until the summer of 1830, though previous to this time several families had settled here, among whom, in addition to Mr. Dexter's family, were Dr. Cyril Nichols, Samuel W. Foster, A. D.

Crane, and one or two others. Judge Crane thus speaks of his advent in the village:

“ March 1, 1830, I came here with my wife, to whom I had been married but a few days, and I have resided here ever since. When I came I found here as residents of this village, Hon. Samuel W. Dexter, Dr. Cyril Nichols, and Samuel W. Foster, who, with their families, constituted the whole of the village, and their dwellings were the only dwellings upon the village plat at that time. Judge Dexter had been here a few years, and then owned a large tract of land, and had erected a grist and saw-mill on Mill creek. The grist-mill stood where J. H. Evarts & Co.'s flouring mill now stands, and the saw-mill stood on the opposite side of the creek. John A. Conaway and his father then lived in the log house on the rise of ground beyond the saw-mill, where Dennis Warner's farm house now stands. They kept a tavern there, and that was the only tavern west of Ann Arbor anywhere in this region of country.”

Of the three heads of families mentioned by Judge Crane, Judge Dexter has long since passed to his reward. A sketch of him will be found among the “ Noted Dead.” Dr. Nichols erected a house on the west side of the river, near where the bridge has since been built. He was a man of considerable intelligence, was very popular among all classes, and had an extensive practice throughout the whole region of country for many miles north, south and west of Dexter. He was a native of Vermont, and immigrated to Michigan at a very early day, and settled in this village in 1826. He died in 1843. Mr. Foster was a native of Rhode Island, and was a miller by profession. He was employed some years by Mr. Dexter, but finally removed and laid out the village of Scio, erected here a mill, which he ran for a time, then sold out and erected another mill at Foster's Station. Not being as successful as he anticipated, he again sold out, and when the first great stream of emigrants passed over the plains to California, he accompanied them, and when within sight of the Golden Gate, he was called to his final reward.

The first store was opened in the fall of 1830 by Charles P. Cowden, and the second merchant was Nelson H. Wing, who embarked in business here in the spring of 1831. William C. Pease was the next to select Dexter for a business location, while the fourth merchant was Richard Brower. Dennis Warner began business in 1843, as a boot and shoe manufacturer, his business gradually increasing until he finally employed 14 hands. He then commenced the business of a general merchant, continuing in the same until 1866, when he disposed of his stock. Rice A. Beal established himself here in 1847, and carried on a successful business until 1865, when he sold out and removed to Ann Arbor. Since that time many others have come and gone, some doing well, others not.

At present the village mercantile business is represented by the following firms:

Frederick Yager, grocer and baker, and dealer in liquors, Ann Arbor street; R. J. Langdon, dealer in sewing-machines; John Dolan, dealer in groceries, liquors and provisions, established in 1869; W. W. Waite, drugs, stationery and tobacco; Joe. T. Jacobs, clothing, gents' furnishing goods, hats and caps, established May, 1880; Tnomey Bros., dealers in general merchandise; G. C. Sill, dealer in hardware, tin shop in connection, established in 1861; John Croarkin, dealer in general merchandise, established in 1857; P. Fitzsimmons, tobacco and liquors, established in 1878; G. Wall, groceries, crockery, boots and shoes, established in 1865; J. H. Devine & Son, dealers in agricultural implements; J. C. R. Day, tinware and hardware, Main street; B. J. Sutton, jeweler, and dealer in watches, clocks and musical instruments, established in 1875; W. Irving Keal, druggist, and dealer in patent medicines and toilet articles; Ball & Hoyt, boots, shoes and groceries; T. C. Etchells, general merchandise, No. 5 Phœnix block; S. W. Muddock, jeweler, with Etchells; John Costello, boots, shoes, groceries and furniture; B. Alley, dry goods, groceries and crockery, corner Main and B streets; W. F. Schlenderer, dealer in tobacco and liquors; Jacob Rehm, boots and shoes, general repairing, established in 1869; Warner & Whitaker, dealers in lumber and agricultural implements, near depot.

OTHER BUSINESS.

In addition to the business of Dexter mentioned under the several heads, the place is represented by J. W. Jones, J. T. Forchue, and Benjamin Roper, barbers; Norman E. Allen, photographer; T. S. Ewing, dentist; J. Schueherle and Emanuel Jedele, meat markets. The hotels are conducted by David Blanchard, who is the landlord of "Dexter Exchange;" C. W. Guest, Western Hotel; Henry Stebbins, Eureka Hotel; James R. Joyner, Franklin Hotel.

PROFESSIONAL.

No village is complete without its professional men—physicians to cure the sick, and lawyers to settle disputes.

Physicians.—The first to minister to the afflicted in this place was Dr. Cyril Nichols, who settled here in 1826, of whom mention has already been made. Dr. Philip Brigham came next, in 1832; after two or three years' residence he moved to Ann Arbor, where he afterward died. Dr. Amos Gray was the third physician who located here. He came in 1832, and has been in constant practice ever since. A biographical sketch of the Doctor appears elsewhere in connection with the history of this village, and therefore nothing more need be said in this connection. Dr. Gray was followed by Dr. John H. Cardell some four years after. Dr. Cardell practiced his profession here until his death, which occurred in 1842. Dr. C. A. Jeffries was the next physician. Next after him came Dr. Ewing, who died here in 1879. Others of the medical fraternity have practiced their profession in the village and ministered to the sick in its vicinity, among whom were Drs. Hollywood, Dowlman and Clark. At present the profession is represented, in addition to Dr. Gray, by Drs. C. Howell, E. F. Chase, John Lee and W. E. Ziegenfuss.

Lawyers.—Its proximity to Ann Arbor has tended to keep out representatives of the legal fraternity. Calvin Smith was the first. Mr. Smith moved to the village in 1830, but did not commence a general practice until two years afterward. He was also the first justice of the peace in the village, and did more in this latter work than in the practice of his profession. In 1838 he was elected a member of the Legislature but died before taking his seat. After Mr. Smith, the next attorney was A. D. Crane, who was admitted to the Bar in 1843. A sketch of Mr. Crane appears elsewhere. James T. Hovey came next in May, 1861, and James Gorman in 1879. Messrs. Crane, Hovey and Gorman each are present members of the Bar of Washtenaw county.

Dentistry.—The dental profession is represented by T. S. Ewing, D. D. S., and S. L. Jerney, each of whom has a fair patronage.

BANKS.

There never has been a regularly incorporated bank in this village. Not even during the days of the famous "wild-cat" banking system were the people of Dexter favored (?) with a bank of issue. There has been, however, from time to time men who engaged in brokerage, accommodating the villagers with exchanges on the large cities and receiving deposits. The first broker's office was established by Rice A. Beal, who continued it a few years and then sold it to George E. Southwick & Co., who in turn disposed of it to C. S. Gregory, N. A. Phelps, and W. H. Potter, who continued the business under the firm name of C. S. Gregory & Co. for four years, when Mr. Gregory purchased the interests of his partners. In January, 1877, Mr. Gregory admitted his son, Henry C., into the business, the firm taking the name of C. S. Gregory & Son. The firm are now doing a large and safe business, buying and selling exchange, and doing all business usually done by an incorporated bank. The average deposits are about $40,000.

MILLS.

No feature of pioneer life is more indelibly impressed upon the minds of the early settlers, than their early experience in milling. In the formation of a settlement, first came the saw-mill, which was to prepare the lumber for the dwellings of the inhabitants, and also for the more pretentious grist-mill that was soon to be erected. Long before Mr. Dexter laid out his village, he built a dam across Mill creek, and on the west side erected a saw-mill which was to be run by the water-power created by the dam. This was the beginning of mills in the western part of the county. Immediately on the completion of the saw-mill he commenced the erection of a grist-mill on the east side of Mill creek, which was completed at an early day, and was a great convenience to all living in the western part of Washtenaw and in Jackson counties. This mill has had a varied existence and has been owned and controlled by a number of parties, among whom were Matthews, Bond & Millard, who succeeded Judge Dexter, Thomas Martin and others. While Mr. Martin was its owner, in 1851, it was destroyed by fire. The mill site was purchased by Thomas Peatt & Alva Alldridge, who rebuilt the mill. Alldridge ultimately sold out to Peatt's son, who sold to J. H. Evarts & Costello, who controlled it until August, 1880, when it passed into the hands of an assignee and is now run by H. J. Rogers. The mill is a three-story structure, 40x88 feet. Its present business amounts to about 47,000 barrels per year. Its custom work is quite large, as well as its merchant work. The annual shipments to Boston and Detroit are about 10,000 barrels per year. Two grades of flour are made—straight and second. A feed mill is attached which grinds 300 bushels of feed per day. Steam and water-power is used.

The second grist-mill was erected in 1836, and is known as the "Peninsula Mills." This mill is located over the river from the village in the township of Webster, but is properly a Dexter enterprise and has been owned and conducted from time to time by citizens of the village. It was built in 1836, by Millard, Matthews & Bond, and afterward passed into the hands of Jesse Millard & son, who ran it until 1855, when it was purchased by Beal, Marble & Southwick, who successfully operated it until 1865, when Charles Williams became its owner. Mr. Williams in a few months disposed of it to George E. Southwick. C. S. Gregory & Co. were the next purchasers, in 1868. In 1872, George E. Southwick & Co. became owners, but ran it only about one year. Copeland & Clements came next into possession, and soon after took in as partner Mr. Coleman, who, in 1879, disposed of his one-third interest to Mr. Gregory. Mr. Copeland sold his one-third interest in October, 1880, to John P. Marble, of Worcester, Massachusetts, while Mr. Gregory sold one-half of his one-third interest to the Clements' estate. The mill is 40x60, three and one-half stories in height and was erected at a cost of $40,000. Six men are employed in the mill. Its capacity is about 200 barrels per day. The mill was rented in August, 1880, to James Lucas. He is at present making large shipments direct to Europe, and has a large patronage in the New England States.

MANUFACTORIES.

The manufactories of the village, though not extensive, are yet creditable to the place. The grist-mills have already been mentioned. Next comes the woolen mill of Luther Palmer & Son. This mill was erected in 1838, by Jesse Millard & Son, who operated it some 12 years, when it was sold to Rice A. Beal & Co., who ran it a few years and then sold it to Thompson & Palmer, who remained in partnership one year, when Mr. Palmer became the sole owner. This was in 1869. In 1879 Mr. Palmer took his son into partnership with him, the firm name being changed to Luther Palmer & Son. The mill has 216 spindles, is run by water-power, and uses about 10,000 pounds of wool annually. Of stocking yarn, 3,000 pounds are manufactured each year, the rest of the wool being woven into blankets and satinets. The firm has at present a contract for manufacturing for the State's prison at Jackson. The sales of the mill are about $10,000 per year. Six hands are constantly employed, which is increased in busy seasons to 12. The mill is 26 x42, three and one-half stories high.

Run by the same power with the woolen, is a saw-mill, which was erected at the same time by the same men and has successively passed into the hands of the purchasers of the woolen mill. The general use of pine lumber has affected the work of this mill for many years, and but little is being done, it running only about two months in the year.

A cider and planing mill was erected in 1871 by Phelps and Sill Bros., but was burned down four years after. The ground was then sold to B. B. Williams, who erected and commenced operating a planing-mill. The manufacturer of sash, doors, farm rollers and moldings was carried on, while the cider mill was not rebuilt.

Albert Guest, in 1840, commenced the manufacture of harness in this village, and has been in successful operation to the present time.

In 1876, Bross, Crampton & Miller commenced the manufacture of wagons and carriages, in connection with a general repairing shop. In a short time Mr. Bross retired from the firm, his interest being purchased by his partners, who continued the business until September, 1879, when Mr. Miller disposed of his interest to Mr. Rieder. The firm employ seven hands, and in 1879 made 31 carriages. The average sales of the firm are $7,000 per year. The building occupied by them is 40x60, and three stories in height.

John Bross also commenced the manufacture of wagons and carriages in 1876, and is at present actively employed.

A cooper shop was established as early as 1850, by Alexander Souler, who carried on business for many years. He is now in Detroit. The next of any extent was Everts & Costello; then a cooper shop was established here in 1870, by Silas Thrasher, who is actively engaged in the manufacture of flour and slack barrels.

About the year 1850, Isaac V. Wakeman built a blast furnace in the village, and carried on a flourishing business for several years. About 1865 he sold out to Hicks & Ludden. In connection with the furnace was a manufactory of agricultural implements, employing quite a large number of hands. It was finally destroyed by fire, about the year 1870.

In 1880 there was erected by Charles Caldwell a fruit-drying establishment on A street. This is in active operation during the fruit season, employing 10 to 15 hands, and is quite an important acquisition to the business of Dexter.

HOTELS.

In the early day almost every pioneer had to throw open his doors and welcome the tired traveler, but as the stream of immigration enlarged and settlements were formed, some one whose cabin was a little larger, or who desired to turn an honest penny, was designated as the inn-keeper, to whom all travelers were directed.

The first hotel in the village was built by Edward Torrey for Judge Dexter in 1831. There was, however, a tavern kept by John A. Conaway, on the west side of Mill creek, in a log house. Prior to this, Mr. Torrey gave the building over to Joseph Arnold, who was the landlord for some time, when he gave way to Richard Brower. Captain James B. Arms was the next landlord. Several others besides those mentioned "kept hotel" until it finally passed into the hands of Nelson J. Allport, during whose occupancy it was destroyed by fire. This was the only hotel in the village for many years. The next hotel was that of Nathaniel Goss, which stood on the lot now occupied by N. E. Allen, on block 20. This hotel was also destroyed by fire, in 1836. Following this was the Goodrich House, also burned, in 1848. The next was built by Hiram E. Fields, on a lot east of the park. Another hotel, known as the "Bentley House," was destroyed by fire in 1863. Other houses of entertainment have been opened, run for awhile and closed. In this year of grace, 1881, the village is represented by four hotels—The Dexter Exchange, by E. B. Blanchard; the Weston Hotel, by Charles M. Guest, opened in 1873; and the Eureka House, by H. Stebbins, opened in May, 1880, and the Franklin House, opposite the railroad depot, kept by James R. Joyner.

FIRST THINGS.

The first blacksmith in the village was A. D. Crane, who opened a shop in 1830.

George P. Page was the first tailor, in 183—.

Cornelius Osterhout was the first carpenter who worked in the place, while Edward Torrey was the first resident carpenter. He came to the village to reside in 1831.

Erastus Ranney was the first wagon-maker, in 1830.

Orin J. Field was the first shoemaker, in 1832.

Henry Vinkle was the first cabinet-maker, in 1832.

Julius Ranney was the first tanner, about 1834 or 1835.

ADVENT OF THE RAILROAD.

No event in the history of a village is longer remembered than the advent of the first train of cars. Says Judge Crane, in a well written article on the village of Dexter:

"The 4th day of July, 1841, was a day long to be remembered by the people of Dexter. Early in the morning of that day the people of the surrounding country came pouring into the village on foot, on horseback, in carriages and wagons, not only to celebrate the anniversary of the nation's birthday, but at the same time to celebrate the completion to our village of the Michigan Central railroad. By nine o'clock in the forenoon a large concourse of people had assembled at the depot, awaiting the arrival of the cars, which were to bring the visitors from Ann Arbor and other eastern villages along the line of the road. We had but a few minutes to wait before the shrill whistle of the iron horse was heard, and instantly the train came in its grandeur and majesty around the curve into full view, and thundered up to the depot, when the air was filled with loud huzzas and shouts of welcome, and everybody was happy. The train brought a large delegation of visitors from the East, and as soon as it was stopped, the Washtenaw Guards (who were invited guests), about 50 strong, filed out of the cars and into line under command of their gallant Captain, E. S. Cobb, who lost his life on the ill-fated steamer Erie, early in the following August. The guards were handsomely equipped, well disciplined and made a fine appearance. After marching to the bank of the river, near the bridge, where they fired a fue de joie, the Captain placed himself and company under the orders of the marshal of the day, when a grand procession was formed, and, escorted by the Guards and their band, marched to the place appointed for the exercises of the day and the occasion. Here they were welcomed by an eloquent and stirring speech from our much esteemed friend and neighbor, Hon. Samuel W. Dexter, which was responded to by Franklin Sawyer, of Ann Arbor. The Rev. Lorenzo Davis was the chief orator of the day, and gave us a very fine oration, suited to the day and the occasion.

"On this day everything was harmonious, and everybody was happy and joyful, for we had been placed in communication by rail with the city of Detroit, which communication was soon to be completed through Canada to the Eastern States. The day passed off without accident, or anything to mar our happiness. The Washtenaw Guards remained with us over night, having brought their camp equipage with them for that purpose, and camped on the open space which now constitutes the village park, where they established a regular military camp. After guard mounting in the evening, the citizens were invited by Captain Cobb to visit the camp and witness the routine of camp duty. If I may be pardoned for so doing, I will mention one or two incidents that occurred to the Guards during the night. In the middle of the night, when all the citizens were at their repose, one of the sentinels discovered fire issuing from an ash-house, which was contiguous to a very fine dwelling near the camp; and considering the dwelling to be in danger, the sentinel gave the alarm to the Guards, whereupon the officers ordered a squad of men to repair to the fire with their camp pails and extinguish it. The men at once repaired to the well of the man on whose premises was the fire, but found the bucket locked, so they could get no water. Their efforts to obtain water aroused the man of the house, who raised his window and peremptorily ordered them off his premises; but the Guards, not willing to let the fire go unextinguished, went with their pails a distance of twenty rods or more, to a well where the bucket was not locked, and procured a sufficiency of water and extinguished the fire, thus saving the citizen's property from destruction.

"Along in the after part of the night some of the guards came to the conclusion a little milk punch was quite desirable, and that they could procure the requisite milk from some of the village cows that were lying on the green; so one of their number was detailed to go on a foraging excursion for milk, and taking his camp pail he started forth; but the next question was, how to pass the guard, as he was not in possession of the countersign, and the sentinel had not been let into the secret of the enterprise. But, nothing daunted, he approached one of the sentinels on duty, who hailed, 'Halt! who comes there?' 'A friend.' 'Friend, advance and give the countersign.' He advanced to the point of the sentinel's bayonet, and holding up the camp pail to the sentinel, he said, 'So, bossy, so!' which was received by the sentinel as the countersign, and he passed without the line and went and found one or more cows, to which he gave the same countersign, procured his pail full of milk and returned to the same sentinel, and by the same token passed within the line. The boys had a good time with their milk punch, not forgetting the sentinel who had accepted the countersign."

FIRES.

The first building that was ever burned in the village was a dwelling house, built and owned by Calvin Smith. It stood where the house of Norman A. Phelps now stands, and was then owned and occupied by Thomas Martin. This occurred about 1837 or '8. Since that time Dexter has had more than its share of destruction from the devouring element. Four hotels have been consumed and innumerable other buildings. The first great fire occurred on Sunday, Nov. 24, 1844, where a block of 12 buildings, on the north side of Main street, was totally destroyed, the loss being estimated at about $30,000. A singular thing in connection with this fire was that a rumor was current in Ann Arbor, and also at a village west of Dexter, on Saturday noon previous, that this block was burned, and that the fire originated in Henry Vinkle's cabinet shop, the place where the fire did eventually begin.

The block was rebuilt and again burned in 1848. The loss by this fire was heavier than in the first, the buildings all being of a better character. Dennis Warner had a very narrow escape from being burned in this fire. He was sleeping in the upper story of his store room when the fire broke out. When awakened the lower part was in flames, and all escape cut off. Raising a window, he threw out a chest of valuable papers, and then jumped out, thus saving his life.

Again, for the third time this block was partially destroyed by fire, in April, 1877. Five fine brick buildings were destroyed, the loss being estimated at $20,000.

The south side of the street began its series of fires in 1847, destroying three buildings. The loss was small.

On the 2d day of February, 1860, two buildings were burned, including the old Dexter Hotel.

The third fire was on Christmas morning, 1866, with a heavier loss than on either of the previous occasions.

In addition to these fires innumerable smaller ones have occurred, including the building where the planing-mill now stands.

SCHOOLS.

The village of Dexter, and its immediate vicinity, was first settled by those who appreciated the value of an education. As soon, therefore, as a sufficient number of children were in the neighborhood to form a school, a suitable building was erected and a school commenced. This was in 1830, and the building was on B street, near where the Baptist church now stands. It was a small frame, and for some years was used for religious services by all denominations of Christians, and also for all public gatherings. A Mr. Gleason was the first teacher. This house did good service until 1843, when it was replaced by a larger and better edifice of brick. As the village grew, this, in turn, became too small to accommodate the pupils, so, in 1857, the present substantial Union school building was erected at a cost of about $10,000. This house is 40x60, three stories high, with six rooms. As soon as the building was ready for occupancy, the graded system of public schools was adopted. Prof. Lawton, in 1857, was the first principal. Since then the school has been under the following principals: Duane Doty, Messrs. Thomas, Bowen, Crouch, Davis, Miss Alvord, Messrs. Kratz, Field, Hill and Cook, the present incumbent.

RELIGIOUS.

The first citizens of Dexter and vicinity were a God-fearing and God-loving people, and the pioneer ministers of the gospel were welcome at all times. Holding different religious views, an agreement could not be reached at once for the formation of a Church.

The Baptists and Methodists early occupied the field, the former organizing the first Church.

Baptist Church.—This church was organized August 16, 1831, by Elder E. Carpenter, who had been preaching at stated periods in the vicinity for more than a year. The constituent members of the Church were Elder Eber Carpenter and wife, David Layton, Joshua Secord, William Youmans, David Case, John Hancock, William Lennon, Lydia Secord, Mrs. Putnam, Catherine Case, Hannah Hancock, Esther Quackenbush, Amanda Hurd, Anna Force, Catherine Clements. The congregation worshiped for several years in the school-house, and in private houses. In 1840 they erected their first house of worship and dedicated it to the service of Almighty God in the month of June, 1840. This house was a small frame structure 24x36, and was used until 1866, when, becoming too small for this growing congregation, it was replaced by a handsome brick edifice, erected at a cost of $5,000, and dedicated in May, 1866, Elder F. Curtis preaching the dedicatory sermon. During the existence of the Church a number of precious revivals have been held, the Church being greatly strengthened thereby. The greatest degree of prosperity was enjoyed by the Church during the pastorate of Elder Baker. The following named have served as pastors: Revs. Eber Carpenter, William A. Bronson, George Walker, James Piper, Stephen Yocum, Edward Tenny, Charles Peterson, J. L. Smith, Nelson Eastwood, H. A. Brown, Dr. Wilson, J. C. Baker, H. L. Bower, C. E. B. Armstrong, C. A. Clark, L. L. Gage. The present membership of the Church is 77. The Sunday-school has a membership of 100 average attendance, with A. Y. Case, Superintendent.

Methodist Episcopal.—Rev. E. H. Pilcher, of the Ohio Conference, who was stationed at Tecumseh, preached a sermon in the west room of Judge Dexter's house in the month of November, 1831. It was proposed to organize a class or society; this was done, all desiring to do so retiring to the house of Dr. Nichols, where the class was organized. It consisted of 10 persons, two men and eight women. Wm. H. Brockway and John D. Doane were the male members; the first was appointed the leader. Mrs. Allen and her daughter, Miss Allen, Mrs. Kingsley, Mrs. Dunlavey (a warm-hearted Irishwoman) and Miss Eleanor Alexander (who worked for Judge Dexter) are all the names now known. In May, 1832, Evander Cooper (who still lives and is a leader) came, and sometime after, he and his wife, Martha, joined the society. In August, 1833, Wm. H. Brockway, who had been away teaching school, was recommended to be licensed as a local preacher and also to join the Ohio Annual Conference on trial. He was received and traveled as a minister of the Church for many years. He lives at Albion, and is the agent of the college there.

The following named have served as pastors of this Church: Henry Colclazer, 1831; E. H. Pilcher, 1831-'2; E. S. Gavit, 1832; A. Billings, 1833; A. B. Elliott, 1833; H. Colclazer, 1834; A. B. Elliott, Gillett, 1839; Lorenzo Davis, 1840-'1; Resin Sapp, 1842; Hiram M. Roberts, 1843; John A. Baughman, 1844; T. C. Gardner, 1845; W. H. Collins, 1846-'7; John K. P. Davis, 1878-'9; W. J. Campbell, 1880.

Congregational.—This Church was organized Jan. 5, 1836, by Rev. C. G. Clark, as the First Presbyterian Church of Dexter. Those comprising the original organization were: Charles P. Cowdin, David Dutton, Vashti Dutton, Charles M. Smith, Mahitable F. Cowdin, Roxana Whitcomb, Abe Spaulding, Timothy Dutton, Catherine Conklin, Richard Peterson, Elizabeth Peterson, Julia Ann Tuttle, Ann Northam, Dennis Warner, Harriet N. Warner, Jerusha T. Baker. Charles P. Cowdin was elected Elder. After the expiration of three years the Church government was changed to that of Congregational, and the body was known as the First Congregational Church of Dexter. The congregation for some years worshiped in private houses, in school-houses, and in a church building fitted up by the Episcopalians, but never consecrated by them. In 1845 a frame church was erected, in size 38x50, at a cost of $2,000. For many years the Church was quite prosperous, but finally, on account of many removals and deaths, those remaining became discouraged, and their church house was sold in 1873, and in 1874, after meeting for a time in Warner's Hall, the organization was disbanded. A total number of 339 members were from first to last enrolled on the Church books. The following named have served as pastors: Revs. H. H. Northrup, William C. Dennison, Gustavus L. Foster, Joel Boyington, G. W. Newcombe, Clark Lockwood, Lewis Bodwell, Robert Robinson, John B. Fiske, E. W. Borden and A. S. Kedzie.

St. James' (Episcopal) Church.—There is no record kept of the early time of this parish, but from the most reliable sources it is learned that in 1825 Mr. Sylvanus Noble, formerly of New York, came to Dexter, and by his exertions had this place appointed a "missionary station." The first clergyman of the Church who preached here was Rev. Mr. Cadle, who spent one Sunday here. Then Rev. Mr. Freeman, of Cleveland, Ohio, bought a farm a few miles from Dexter, and occasionally held service and preached to the few Church families here, in the log school-house one mile west of Dexter. Not long after, he left the ministry, and removed from the neighborhood; about this time the Bishop of the Diocese, passing through Dexter, stopped and preached to a few persons hastily gathered together.

In 1835 Rev. Samuel Marks, missionary at Ann Arbor, came over to Dexter once a fortnight and preached in the village school-house. Mr. Marks brought with him Rev. David J. Burger, who was serving his diaconate as a missionary; Mr. Burger pleased the people so well that they urged him to remain here for a time. St. James' Parish was organized under this Rev. David J. Burger, with the following gentlemen as Vestrymen: Barnabas K. Dibble, Pierrepont L. Smith, Nathaniel Noble, William A. Jones, Alexander D. Crane, Dr. Amos Gray, James Cunningham.

The first persons known to have been baptized here were Barnabas K. Dibble and Mary Dibble, Aug. 13, 1837, this sacrament being administered by the Rev. David J. Burger.

Subsequently, the parish was under the charge of the Revs. Darius Barker, M. Hirst and A. S. Hollister. The Rev. Caleb A. Bruce was appointed a missionary in charge of this parish and the parish in Hamburg, Livingston Co., in 1852 or 1853, and remained here till October 1, 1854 when he resigned the position and went to Fort Wayne, Indiana. Under his ministry the present church edifice was commenced, and through his exertions, a considerable portion of the funds for its erection was procured. When he left this parish the building was enclosed, roofed and shingled. He was succeeded by his father, the Rev. Nathaniel F. Bruce, during whose ministry the church edifice was so far completed as to be used by the congregation on all occasions of public worship, preaching, and the administration of the sacraments, and the other rites of the Church. The church was opened for divine service on the third Sunday after Trinity, it being also St. John's Day, the 24th of June, 1855. At the morning service, prayers were said by Rev. Lewis Noble, of Chicago, Illinois, and the sermon was preached by Rev. Nathaniel F. Bruce, from the 93rd Psalm, 5th verse: "Holiness becometh thine House, O Lord, for ever." Evening prayer was said by Rev. Nath. L. Bruce, and an appropriate sermon preached by Rev. Lewis Noble. The congregations were large at both services, notwithstanding a cloudy day and some rain.

The subsequent rectors of this parish were Rev. William King, Rev. Wm. Kelly, Rev. A. C. Lewis, Rev. V. Spaulding, Rev. Aug. Bush, Rev. O. E. Fuller, and the present rector, Rev. James H. Magoffin.

Two of the former rectors died while residents here, Rev. Nathaniel F. Bruce, and Rev. Wm. Kelly, the remains of the latter lying in the village cemetery, those of the former being taken at his own request to a small country grave-yard to whose quiet and restful appearance he had been attracted while performing the rite of burial some time before for a loved parishioner.

The parish register shows the names of 297 persons baptized, 160 confirmed, 178 married and 170 buried.

The last Annual Report to the Diocesan Convention, June, 1880, shows that there were at that time in this parish 51 families, making a list of parishioners of 186. Of this number 58 are communicants holding full membership in the Church. The present value of church property in the parish is reported at $3,500.

The present vestry of St. James consists of Charles S. Gregory and Jacob Krause, as Wardens, and Jesse O. Hoyt, Dr. Charles Howell, John H. Everts, Lorenzo H. Jones, (Secretary and Treasurer), George S. Crampton, James McDonald, George Lyon.

Catholic Church.—The first church of this denomination was erected in Dexter tp., about five miles northwest of Dexter village, in 1840 or 1842, under the superintendence of Father Cullen (now deceased) who was the pastor, and assisted by Father Hennesy, afterward pastor at Marshall, Mich. It was a small frame building, and the congregation was composed of only seven or eight families. The building was shortly after destroyed by fire, and the members, assisted by Father Hennesy, immediately erected another frame building, at a cost of $4,000, on the site of the present structure at Dexter village. Father J. Pulsers became the first resident pastor, and erected the present pastoral residence. He was succeeded by Rev. J. Van Jennip, who remained nearly 15 years, and under his administration the present fine brick edifice was erected. He laid the corner-stone, and superintended the erection of the building, although it was completed under the direction of the present pastor, Rev. T. F. Slattery, who took pastoral charge in August, 1874. The church was dedicated Jan. 3, 1875, by Bishop Borgess, of Detroit. The building when completed cost about $27,000, and is one of the finest in the county. The congregation number nearly 600, and are free from debt.

Rev. T. F. Slattery was born Jan. 27, 1847, in Monsia Parish, county of Tipperary, Ireland, and was the son of Michael and Nora Slattery. He commenced his Latin studies at Ennis, county of Clare, and completed his preparatory course at Ninagh and Hilla-loe. He entered All Hallows College, Dublin, in 1865, where he remained two years. He then came to the U. S., and entered St. Bonaventure College, at Allegany, Cattarungus Co., N. Y., graduating from that institution in 1871, and Oct. 14 of the same year was ordained a priest by Rev. Bishop Borgess, at Monroe, Mich. After officiating for different periods of time, at Bay City, Bunker Hill, Ingham Co., and Detroit, he was appointed to the charge at Dexter, where he has since labored in a faithful and earnest manner. Father Slattery is well respected by all his charge.

MASONIC.

Washtenaw Lodge, No. 65, F. & A. M., of Dexter, was organized under dispensation granted to Jesse Millard, W. M., Fred. Carlisle, S. W., and John Crossman, J. W., June 30, 1854. A charter was granted January, 1854, and at its first election the lodge elected Frederick Carlisle, W. M.; John Crossman, S. W.; George W. Hays, J. W.; Osborne Aldrich, Sec.; Thomas Peatt, Treas.; H. H. Noble, S. D.; O. M. Smith, J. D.; Marquis Peatt, Tyler. In 28 years the lodge has had only six W. M's.; in addition to those mentioned were George H. Lyon, A. D. Crane, John W. Spoor and A. W. Gleason. The lodge has had a prosperous existence, now numbering 54 members. The officers for 1881 are A. D. Crane, W. M.; Marquis S. Cook, S. W.; Jacob Rehm, J. W.; N. A. Phelps, Treas.; A. Lathrop, Sec.; George Crampton, S. D.; Henry Ide, J. D.; Frederick Lathrop, E. R. Doane, Stewards; James Harris, Tyler.

THE VILLAGE OF SCIO.

In 1835 S. W. Foster, who purchased a mill site and erected a mill on section 9, laid out and platted the village of Scio. At one time it was thought the village would be a prosperous one, but its proximity to Dexter and the establishment of a rival village two miles below, now called Delhi, all three being within eight miles of Ann Arbor, served as a barrier to its growth. To-day it numbers about 15 or 20 houses, has a store, flouring mill and postoffice, Mr. Geo. A. Peters acting in the capacity of postmaster, having been appointed by President Grant, under his first administration and continuing to the present time.

At the village of Scio is said to be the best water-power on the Huron river, having a fall of some ten feet.

VILLAGE OF DELHI.

This pleasant little village is situated on the Huron river, about midway between the city of Ann Arbor and the village of Dexter. It was surveyed and platted July 25, 1836, by Jacob Doremus. The plat was recorded under the name of Michigan Village. The name, being regarded as too lengthy, was soon afterward changed to the short one by which it has ever been known—Delhi.

In 1842 all unsold lots in the village plat passed into the hands of N. C. Goodale, a man whose memory is cherished by all who were so fortunate as to be numbered among his acquaintances. The village has always been regarded as a model one with respect to morality and good order. One of the conditions made to every deed to each lot sold was that no intoxicating drinks should ever be sold upon the premises, under forfeiture of the lot and all improvements made thereon. Thus the great promoter of vice and immorality has never been permitted to obtain entrance to the village. While the village has never attained any special degree of prosperity so far as numbers are concerned, it has ever been a neat and attractive place. Every house in the village, with all its surroundings, exhibits a pleasing and inviting appearance. Its proximity to Ann Arbor has retarded its growth, the country not being advanced to that degree enabling two or more large villages or cities to exist and prosper while being within such short distance of each other.

The two large flouring mills have always been the main stay of Delhi, their home business being quite large and shipments extensive to all parts of the country. At present there is, in addition to the flouring mills, one general store and cooper shop.

The postoffice was established in 1868, with F. W. Goodale as the first postmaster. Mr. Goodale has been re-appointed after the expiration of each term.

They are both members in good standing of the Episcopal Church. He is a Republican.

Hon. Alexander D. Crane, attorney at law, Dexter, was born in Cayuga county, N. Y., in 1809, a son of Stephen and Keturah A. (Topping) Crane natives of New Jersey. At a very early date in the history of our country, two brothers came from England, and settled in Connecticut. In order to make a distinction in their names, one called himself Craine, and the other went by the name of Crane. Alexander was a descendant of this latter one, and was reared to manhood in his native State. He spent his early life on a farm until he was 16 years of age, at which time he was apprenticed to a blacksmith. In a few years he gained a thorough knowledge of this useful "art," and continued to follow it until 1832, when ill health caused him to abandon it. On Nov. 24, 1827, he first entered Washtenaw county—a region in which he was to gain for himself in the near future, honor, fame and reverence from all classes of its citizens. Notwithstanding his limited education, in 1832 he commenced the study of law, and at the same time was elected Constable, and subsequently Deputy Sheriff and Collector of Taxes, which latter position he filled for 10 years. He was engaged in mercantile pursuits for about 18 months, at the expiration of which time (1843) he was admitted to the Bar, and licensed to practice in the legal profession. He continued at his chosen calling until 1849, when he was appointed Postmaster of Dexter, by President Fillmore. During the time of his official career he was elected as Justice of the Peace, which office he satisfactorily filled till the close of 1853, when he resigned his Postmastership to accept the office of Prosecuting Attorney, which had been proffered him by the majority of the voters of "fair Washtenaw." Four times in succession he was called upon to preside over the business of the Circuit Court as its Judge, and in 1873 he was appointed Judge of the Fourth Judicial District of Michigan, embracing the counties of Jackson, Ingham and Washtenaw, which seat he filled with honor and credit for three years. Since that time he has almost retired from active life, as the frosts of many winters have passed over his noble head, leaving behind them traces of old age and whitened locks, which prevent the Judge from accepting any of those fatiguing duties which were constantly showered down upon him in younger days. He still practices as an attorney, and his opinion on matters public and private are eagerly sought after by his numerous friends and clients. Like other pioneers of any section of this State Mr. Crane has had a war record, but so brief as to need only a slight mention in this sketch. In 1861 he raised a company of 101 men, and entered the service of the United States as their Captain. After three short months, ill health and an injury received in the service, compelled him to resign, which he did with reluctance, and sustained by the hope that he might possibly do as much good in words and actions at home as he would have done while fighting in the many battles that were chronicled in the pages of history. On Feb. 6, 1830, in Detroit, Mich., Mr. Crane married Nancy Smith, who was born in Erie county, Pa. There were 6 children born to this union, 1 of whom is living—James M., a telegraph operator of Grand Rapids. Mrs. Crane departed this life Sept. 13, 1842, and in 1843 he married Mrs. Julia A. Tipping, who was born in Germany in 1799. The angel of death once more laid his cold and clammy hand on the wife of his bosom, and on June 21, 1862, Mr. Crane laid her away in the tomb while his heart was heavily laden with sorrow and pain. Time passed on, and believing it was best that man should have a companion in this world, in February, 1863, he married Helen L. Palmer, a native of New York, where she was born April 15, 1823. In the years that have come and gone this couple have been gladdened by the gift of 3 children—Charles F., born Dec. 28, 1863; George and Stephen, twins, born Dec. 28, 1865. Mr. Crane was present at the birth of the Republican party, at Jackson, Mich., in 1854, and at that time and place solemnly resolved to cast his fortunes with the new party, and followed its teachings and precepts through the stormy days of the Rebellion, and when its martyred President freed from bondage the 4,000,000 slaves within the borders of the Union, none were more thankful than the subject of this sketch, and in its welfare and prosperity none have taken a deeper interest than Mr. Crane. He was a member of the Soldiers' Convention that nominated Gen. Grant for President of the United States, and his vote was recorded as one in that vast majority which placed the "Hero of Appomattox" in the highest seat in the nation. Hon. Alexander D. Crane is a man of sound judgment, quick perception, full of genuine humor, frankly abrupt in speech, of a warm and deeply affectionate nature, attaching his friends to him with peculiar devotion, and making himself, all unconsciously, a general favorite in the community which has so long known him.

Sidney R. Crissy, operator, M. C. railroad, Delhi Mills, was born in Washtenaw county in 1853. His parents were James and Luna W. (Kellogg) Crissy, the former a native of New Jersey, and the latter a native of New York. He obtained his education at the Pontiac High School, and the State Agricultural College, at Lansing. He was married May 24, 1877, to Jessie E. Buck. This union has been blessed with 2 children—Myron S. and Winfred R. His wife is a member of the New Jerusalem Church.

Benjamin Culy, farmer, sec. 8, Scio tp.; P. O., Dexter; was born in England in 1818, and is the son of Benjamin and Ann (Ward) Culy, both natives of England. He came to America in 1835, and to Washtenaw county the same year, and settled where he now lives. He was a farmer's boy, and was given his education in the common schools of his native country. In 1847 he was married to Sophia Kehle, a native of Germany. William Henry, Benjamin, Abraham (deceased), Israel and Sophia Matilda are the children who have been born to them. Mr. C. and wife are members of the M. E. Church. He owns a good farm of 78 acres.

Abram Davis, employed in the Delhi Mills, was born in New York in 1830. His parents were Abram L. and Nancy (Carter) Davis, natives of New Jersey. He was reared and educated in Washtenaw county, and learned the trade of miller, which occupation he has followed the greater part of his life. He was married in 1857, and 1 child, Delos, born Sept. 27, 1863, has been given to them. Mr. Davis is the happy possessor of a well-improved farm.

James E. Davis, cooper and farmer, was born in New York in 1819, and is a son of Abram L., and Nancy (Carter) Davis, natives of New Jersey, the former of English descent, and the latter of German ancestry. In 1845 he married Mina Plow, and 5 children have been sent to them—Henry, Emanuel, Orville, Carrie L. and Louisa. Mr. Davis came to this county in 1854, and has worked at the cooper's trade for 25 years, 20 years of that time foreman in the shop at Delhi Mills. He was Road Commissioner one term. Mr. Davis owns 93 acres of good land, situated on sections 2 and 11, his residence being in the former. Politically he casts his vote for the Democratic candidates.

James Henry Davis, farmer, Scio tp., res. Delhi Mills, was born in New York in 1849, and is the son of James E. and Mina (Plow) Davis. He received his education in the States of New York and Michigan. He learned the cooper's trade, and worked at it for seven years. He was married in 1873, to Helen Laura Bucklin, a native of Michigan and a daughter of Charles Bucklin. They have 1 child, born Nov. 27, 1879. Mrs. Davis was born May 1, 1853. Mr. Davis came to this county in 1856, and in his farming operations has been financially successful.

John Dawson, Dexter, was born in Ireland, Dec. 20, 1832. He is the son of James and Mary (Cunningham) Dawson. His father was an old pioneer of this county, coming to Ann Arbor in 1844. John was married in 1849, to Margaret Burns. They have had 4 children—Mary and Sarah, deceased, and Maggie and Nellie. Mr. and Mrs. D., are members of the Roman Catholic Church. He is the owner of 180 acres of good farm land.

John H. Devine, merchant, Dexter, was born in 1856. He is the son of John and Mary (Finnegan) Devine, the former a native of New York, the latter of Michigan, and both of Irish descent. J. H. received his education in Webster township, and the Ann Arbor High School. He was married Feb. 1, 1878, to Catherine L. Denn. They have 1 child, Francis Henry. Mr. Devine is engaged, since 1876, with his father in the mercantile business in Dexter, of which they are making a success. He is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and politically is a Democrat. He is also Deputy Clerk of Scio township.

John D. Doane, retired farmer, Dexter, was born in Franklin Co., N. Y., July 8, 1810. He is the son of Joshua and Polly (Sauburn) Doane, both natives of Vermont, and the former of French descent, while the latter was of Irish and English parentage. He received his education in the common schools of the town of Shorcham, Vt. He is an old pioneer of Washtenaw county, coming here Oct. 14, 1831, and so poor that he had to hire out to different persons to get money with which to live. He lived on sec. 15 in Dexter township for over 40 years. Mr. D. was a First Lieutenant in the Black Hawk war, but since then has performed no military duty. In 1832 he was married to Emily Cooper, and 1 daughter, now the wife of a Mr. Crane, was the fruit of this union. Mrs. Doane died two years after marriage, and he was married again to Ann Mower, who has borne him 10 children, 4 boys and 6 girls. He is the owner of 80 acres of well-improved land, also has property in Dexter, where he now resides. Mr. D. told the writer a story of his early pioneer life in this section, and had we the pen of a Washington Irving we could put it before the many readers of this volume in a graphic style; however, we will do the best we can: Mr. D. had been some distance from home on business, and seeing he could not get back before dark, he resolved to go to an Indian village not far away, and pass the night there. He came to the place, but the "red men" had departed, and not a trace of their present whereabouts remained. Night was fast coming on, and Mr. D. not wishing to remain out on the prairie all night, concluded the best thing he could do was to try and get home. He started, but had not gone very far when a wolf's howl slowly resounded through the wild, falling like a death dirge on the ear of this lonely man. He immediately started on a run, but ere long another, and then another of those unearthly yells, foretold the presence of a pack of these animals who delight to feast off the bones of such pioneers as have chanced to be lost on these Western prairies. In a few minutes they were at his heels, but resolving to sell his life dearly, he backed up to a tree, and drawing his tomahawk made a lunge at the foremost one but did not hit him. They kept at some little distance, as though sure of their prey and in no hurry to begin the feast. He watched them for some time, as it was a bright moonlight night; as he was a God-fearing man, he concluded to get down on his knees and pray for deliverance. This he did, and when he arose, it was with renewed feelings of hope, and being so happy he commenced singing. He soon saw that whenever he did this, the wolves were afraid to come near him. He then started toward home, a distance of 14 long weary miles, and he was forced to sing almost the entire distance. On the homeward march he got very thirsty, and coming to a small stream of water he knelt down to quench his burning thirst. He had hardly taken one swallow, before a howl startled him, as if to admonish him not to entirely ignore the savage beasts on the bank near him. He would then take a sup and stop and sing a strain; this he repeated till he had drank all the water he wished. This water was so dear to the tired wanderer that he resolved to name the stream Dear creek, which name it still bears. Continuing his journey homeward, in the same way as before, he arrived all safe and sound, and very thankful for his deliverance from a horrible death. In the morning his father came to his house early and saw seven of the pack still prowling around the house. The remainder had disappeared, but Mr. Doane is confident there were more than 150 following him that long distance. Mr. Doane is a consistent member of the M. E. Church and was the first Class-leader of that denomination in Dexter village.

When Mr. Doane was first married, he met with what was quite a set-back at the time; he with his wife and team of oxen and wagon started for Dexter to buy things suitable for housekeeping, including crockery, window-glass, groceries, window sash, etc. etc., spending some $30. for crockery, and other things in proportion. After procuring all these necessities in town and loading them into the wagon, Mrs. Doane started on ahead a-foot while Mr. D. drove down to the grist-mill to get a grist that he had brought to have ground. He drove up to the mill, jumped out, and went to the door, calling for his grist, when the miller called out, "Your oxen are running," and on his looking around the oxen, wagon and everything it contained were upset in the mill-race; and although finally the oxen were taken out alive, many of the necessary articles they had bought were destroyed, barely saving enough of the crockery for him and his wife to eat on; this was quite a severe loss at this time, as they had not the wherewith to procure more at that time.

Norman Dwight, farmer, sec. 11, Scio tp.; P. O., Dexter; was born in Massachusetts, in 1815, and is a son of Oliver and Mehitable (Keep) Dwight, natives of Massachusetts, and of English descent. Mr. Dwight received his educational training in the common school, and in 1838 came to Washtenaw county, where he has since resided, engaged in farming. He has been thrice married. His present wife's parents settled in this county in 1835. Mr. D. started in life a poor boy but by energy and perseverance he has succeeded manfully, and at present owns 100 acres of tillable land. He has 4 children, 1 son and 1 daughter being married. The daughter married David V. Cowden, a cooper residing at Delhi Mills. Mr. and Mrs. Dwight are members of the Congregational Church in Webster tp., in which body, Mr. D. has been Deacon for some time. He is also Superintendent of the Sunday-school, and endeavors to the best of his ability to walk in the straight and narrow path. When he was 21 years old he learned the milling business, and in 1862 came to Washtenaw county and formed a co-partnership with Mr. Costello, in the above mentioned business. Trade flourished for quite a period, the firm being estimated, at one time, as worth $30,000; but ruin fell upon them, leaving each with barely nothing. Mr. Evarts has leased the Scio Mills again, and is now engaged in his chosen occupation. In 1852 he married Martha E. Wing. They have 2 children—Frank and Minnie E. Frank married Mary Willey, and is engaged in mercantile pursuits in Kansas City, Mo. Mr. Evarts is a Democrat in politics, and has been Trustee of Dexter, and member of the School Board.

He was sent to the district school of his native State, and finished his education in an academy. He was endowed by nature with considerable talent, and as a doctor or lawyer would have stood high in the profession. But he chose farming as an occupation, and it has been a financial success to him, as he now owns and farms 400 acres of rich alluvial land. He was married at Geneseo, Livingston Co., N. Y., Oct. 26, 1856. Mr. and Mrs. Finley are members of the M. E. Church. When a boy, his father and brother were civil engineers, and Mr. F. gained a good knowledge of surveying, so when elected as Drain Commissioner of Washtenaw county, he put his knowledge to a practical test, and with very satisfactory results. He served eight years as Secretary

He has been elected several times to represent his township in the County Board of Supervisors, and has filled several local offices. Politically he is a firm believer in the principles of the Democratic party. In his early days John came to Illinois, and hired out to Mr. Bradford, of that State, to labor in the field. When his day's toil was ended, Mrs. Bradford would teach him the letters of the alphabet, and how to spell, and he soon became so proficient as to be able to read and spell for himself. He has added to this early knowledge from time to time, and at present can read and write as well as if he had been educated in the public schools. In 1860 he removed to Michigan, where he worked on a farm till he was 25 years old. In 1863 he enlisted in the Union army, and served three years fighting for the star-spangled banner, being engaged in four great battles, and twice wounded, once a prisoner, and when escaping brought away also a contraband. His father was a farmer, and Mr. G. worked on the farm in summer, and attended the district school in winter, till he was 19 years of age, when he commenced to teach school, though still assisting his father on the farm during the months of vacation. In a few years he went to Rochester University, where he studied faithfully for some time, finishing his literary course in 1854, and graduating from the Theological Seminary in 1856. This same year he was married to Cornelia A. Hill, who lived only a few months after their nuptials were celebrated. In October, 1861, he was again married—this time to Angie M. Vedder, who has proved a faithful wife to him through many a weary year. The fruits of this marriage are 2 children—Frank B., born in 1862, and Nellie L., born in 1868. Elder Gage had united with the Baptist Church of his native place when but 18 years of age, and believing he could assist in his feeble way to build up the cause of Christ, he was ordained to preach in 1856, and shortly afterward emigrated West, and settled in Tama City, Iowa. In his new field of labor he worked incessantly for the good of the cause he represented, and had the satisfaction of seeing a Church organized with a membership of 50, and a building erected for public worship. He afterward removed to Dexter, where he has since resided. —N. C. and Fred. B. Mr. Goodale is Postmaster of Delhi Mills, and Justice of the Peace. He once served as Constable.

Norman C. Goodale (deceased), the founder of Delhi Mills, was born in Amherst, Mass., Feb. 11, 1813, and was a son of Levi and Harriet (Church) Goodale, natives of Massachusetts, and of English descent. He received a common-school education, and when 14 years old was so unfortunate as to have one of his arms crushed, depriving him of the use of it ever after. He early learned the milling trade, and in 1835 came to Washtenaw county and bought a saw-mill, where now stands the village of Delhi Mills, paying for it $50, the entire amount of his ready money. Many prophesied his financial ruin, but, strange to say, he prospered, and soon started the flouring mill, which still makes a first-class quality of flour. He owned the land thereabouts, and such were the feelings toward whisky and its attending evils, that before selling any of the ground, he made each and every one sign a contract never to sell any intoxicating drinks on his or her premises, and this agreement has been respected up to the present time, the consequence being that the people of Delhi Mills are all comfortably settled in life, and crimes and brawls are seldom seen. He married Apparna Burnett, but death came to her release, and some time after he was joined in marriage to Ruth E. Smedley. The destroying angel once more claimed a victim in this happy household, and Mrs. Goodale was laid at rest in the tomb. His next marriage was to Amanda M. T. Smedley, and this union was blessed with 1 child—Frank W. Mrs. Goodale was the youngest of a family of 13 children, and born in Pennsylvania in 1832. Her parents were of Welsh descent. Mr. and Mrs. Goodale were members of the Congregational Church, and in politics he was a Republican. He was a man who always stood firm for the right, and was a kind and needy counselor and friend to all with whom he had acquaintance. As before stated, he was comparatively poor when he commenced business in this county, but by economy, thrift and perseverance, he acquired property whose estimated value at the time of his death was $200,000. He died in 1877, and was lamented by a large circle of friends and neighbors. Even in his last will and testament, he did not forget the poor, but made them handsome presents.

Mr. P. is one of a family of 5 children, 3 boys and 2 girls, the latter being dead, and was sent to the Chelsea common school, where he received his primary education. He worked on his father's farm till 18 years of age, when he met with an accident which deprived him of one of his strong arms. Soon after he was sent to the Michigan University, where he graduated in 1876, with high honors. He then entered the law office of Hammel & Parkinson, Jackson, Mich., where he remained for some time. He was Assistant Prosecuting Attorney of Jackson county for two years, and then opened an office of his own. He remained in Jackson till Nov., 1879, when he came to Dexter and soon afterward was elected by the Democratic party to the office of Justice of the Peace, and in 1880 to the honorable position of member of the Legislature from Washtenaw Co., which position he now fills with honor and credit to himself and the many citizens of his native county.

He taught school seven winters, and then entered a medical college in Vermont, and graduated from college at Pittsfield, Mass., in 1830. He came to Michigan in 1832, and settled in Dexter village the same year. When the cholera broke out in Calhoun county, Dr. Gray was one of the first physicians called, and remained with the sufferers till the epidemic had passed. Dr. Gray was an allopathic physician the first 17 years of his medical life, but at the expiration of that period he was converted to the other school, and up to 1875, was a homeopathic physician of great prominence. Since that time he has mostly retired from active practice. Dec. 11, 1833, he married S. Jenetta Noble, born in Otsego Co. N. Y., May 13, 1813. Six children were born to them, 4 of whom are living—Charles G., Helen, wife of J. B. Farrand, Fort Harrison, Mich.; Emily S., wife of Samuel C. Cook, of Grand

Dr. Gray is the oldest practicing physician in Washtenaw county, and assisted in organizing the Episcopal Church of Dexter about 1840, officiating as Trustee of that body until 1876. He was married before arriving at his 21st year to Margaret Vannest, and began married life on a rented piece of ground, even going in debt for a team of horses and a wagon. He worked this land on "shares" for three years, and then bought a quarter section of wild land, and moved upon it. This union has been blessed with 6 children, 5 of whom are still living—Nancy S., John V. N., Elizabeth J., Mary L., Henry C. and Olive Leland, the latter dying on May 30, 1874. Mr. Gregory and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church, in which Mr. G. holds an official position. In politics Mr. G. is a Democrat, and has been connected with that party ever since he became of age to vote. He has been honored with the office of member of the Michigan Legislature, which he held for three years, also has been Supervisor of Scio tp. for four years and Trustee of Dexter High School 18 years. Mr. G. has been blessed abundantly in a financial way, and is to-day probably the wealthiest man in Dexter.

Mr. Gregory first came to the Territory of Michigan Sept., 1834, and located with his father's family on sec. 20, Scio tp., he then being about 18 years of age. Mr. Gregory's parents lived in this county for nearly 25 years. They had a family of 7 children—only one, the subject of this sketch, coming to Michigan with them. Their names were Abigail, Henry, Curtis, Olive, Ezra, Almond and Chas. Seymour. In 1859 Mr. and Mrs. G. went to live with their son Henry, who was then President of Devaux College at Niagara Falls, which was under the auspices of the Episcopal Church of New York, he being a clergyman. Here they lived until 1859, when Mrs. G. succumbed to the consumption, a disease with which she had been afflicted for many years. She died Dec. 13, 1859, aged about 78 years. Her husband returned to Dexter and resided with the subject of this sketch, at whose house he died Jan. 11, 1869, aged 90 years, 5 months and 10 days.

His father was a blacksmith in the early part of his life, but was farming when Mr. G. was born, and the subject of this sketch had the advantage of being raised on a farm, and commencing life in a hard and rugged way, for which he was very thankful afterward. He was allowed to attend school in the winter, and received his early education in the primitive methods taught in the "deestric skules" of that day. In 1841 he was united in marriage to Catharine Waldo, and she bore him 2 children, 1 of which, a son, is still living, and is at present a successful portrait-painter in the city of Chicago, Ill. His wife was called away from her earthly home in 1848, and in 1849, Mr. G. was married to Ellen Muscott, a lady of more than ordinary culture and refinement. She is also a native of New York, and the fruit of this latter marriage is 1 child, a daughter—Ella H., born July 7, 1852. She was married to Edmund C. Hoyt, a bookkeeper and stenographer of good ability. Mr. Guest commenced to learn his present trade (harness-making) at the age of 16, and has faithfully adhered to it since, with the exception of two years (from 1851 to 1853) when he was forced to go to California to regain his lost health. He has operated his trade in Dexter for over 40 years, and has been very successful withal, owning a neat shop and a neat and substantial residence in the village.

John Henley, of the firm of Goodale & Henley, proprietors P'elhi Mills, is a native of New Jersey, and the only member of that family in this region of country. He was thrown upon his own resources at the early age of 10 years, and the only schooling he received was two months at Ann Arbor. At the age of 14, he entered a grist-mill at Ann Arbor, and learned the trade, continuing in that business through life. In 1862 he married Harriet

He did so and left a hole in the roof to let out the smoke, not having time to build a chimney. He had so much labor to do, that Tobias, although only 13 years old, was set to work, and did not have time to attend school, only in the winter months. Schools, like chimneys, were scarce in those pioneer days, but in a few years they became plenty, and Tobias received a good common-school education. The Warners were of English origin, and the Rockwells from Scotland. Dennis' grandparents, Philip Warner and John Rockwell, were pioneers of the Green Mountain State. Jared Warner had a family of 6 children, 4 sons and 2 daughters, whose names, in their order were—Horace, Willis, Lucy (who married Amos W. Davis), Dennis (the subject of this sketch), Anna (who married Lucius L. Cooper) and Jared.

When Dennis was 13 years of age his father died, and he was then (March, 1827) bound out until the age of 21 to Warren Spaulding, a farmer in the town of Shoreham, Vt., with the privilege of attending school one month each winter. Three years afterward Mr. Spaulding failed and came west to Michigan, leaving Dennis free to take care of himself. The latter then (in the spring of 1830) let himself to a Mr. Julius DeLong, of Cornwall, Vt., to learn the tanning, currying and shoemaker's trade. After working about one and a half years, faring hard and being poorly clothed, he left his situation and worked two months with Squire Aaron Lawrence, at Shoreham, earning money sufficient to buy some good clothes. He then attended Newton Academy in Shoreham a term of three months, working for his board and going in debt for his tuition. By this time his clothes had become too shabby for service at the counter, and he determined to make a venture. He accordingly presented himself to a stranger, a merchant in Shoreham named James Turrell, described to him his situation and asked for credit. Mr. T. promptly replied, "Yes; I know you will pay me, from the looks of your face." A prouder, happier boy never breathed than Dennis at this time, and this reply of the stranger exerted an influence upon the mind and heart of youthful Dennis which has run through all his life.

His sister made his clothes for him, and he then engaged as clerk in the store of Matthew Watson Burchard, at Watch Point, on the shore of Lake Champlain, at $3 a month. Here he worked for two years, so economizing as to pay all his debts. He was now of age, and desired to emigrate to Michigan with his sisters and brother-in-law, A. W. Davis, who had caught the "Western fever." His employer was anxious to retain him two years longer and then make him a partner. Until his relatives got ready to start, two months afterward, Mr. W. worked on a farm for Levi O. Burchard, a brother of his former employer, at $12 a month, with which money he could defray his traveling expenses. The parties started West about Sept. 1, 1833, by the steamer Phoenix, from Larrabee's Point on Lake Champlain to Whitehall, N. Y., by the canal to Buffalo, thence by steamer to Detroit, where they hired a team to take them 50 miles through the woods to the town of Sylvan, where lived Arnold Davis, a brother of A. W., who had come West the year previous. They arrived about the last of September.

At this time Mr. W. had but a "five-franc" piece (94 cents) in his purse. Being eager to secure some land near by on sec. 13, at the Government price, he borrowed $100, at 14 per cent., and at once seized an offered job of cutting rails from the standing trees, at 50 cents per 100. Many a night found the honest and ambitious youth with aching arms and blistered hands, so recently from behind the counter, determined that, if a will would work out a way to bring him a competence and independence in future years, it should not be wanting. He made a little money at this heavy business, and learned also to make shingles and with them roof the numerous log houses which rapid immigration found necessary. At first he made shingles for a Mr. Thomas Sill, at $12 a month, and afterward took contracts, working busily from early morn till late at night. He would rise two hours before the sun, walk seven miles, and before noon have one side of a roof covered with shingles, working all alone.

Thus he was soon enabled to repay his borrowed money; and after selling his 80-acre piece at an advanced price, he purchased two 80s, in the town of Lima. He had 10 acres broken, rolled up a log cabin, and prepared for housekeeping by marrying Miss Harriet N. Wines, daughter of Squire Mahlon Wines, Feb. 1, 1835. In order to obtain the means for purchasing farming utensils, he had hired out, a week before his marriage, as clerk for a year for Charles P. Cowden, a dry-goods merchant at Dexter, at $18 a month and house rent. By the close of the year he had saved enough to buy a cow, a yoke of oxen, and a few implements for farming; and April 1, 1838, a happier couple never took possession of a palatial home.

As an illustration of the difficulty of breaking the original soil, we may state that six yoke of oxen were required, and the plowshare had to be sharpened every morning. For the latter purpose Mr. Warner had to put it into a bag, and carry it over his shoulders a distance of three miles. He would return in time to do a day's work before night.

The first season of Mr. W's farming operations the crops failed, and the terrible financial crisis of 1837 set in; and the "last pound that broke the camel's back" in Mr. Warner's affairs was the loss of one of the oxen, for this caused him to leave his farm, rent it out, and move into Dexter to retrieve his lost fortune. Here the first winter he shoveled gravel on the embankment across the creek, for the track of the M. C. railroad; then he resorted to shoe-making; after a few months he borrowed $100, at 18 per cent. interest, and bought a stock of leather, employed a hand to help, and soon another hand, and another until in a few years he had 14 in his employ.

The numerous wants of so many people, and some with families, suggested to Mr. Warner the idea of bringing on a stock of general merchandise, and he went to New York city, somewhat after the same plan as he went to buy clothes when a boy; although a stranger to the dealers he was trusted by them, and he brought home a fine stock of dry-goods, groceries, boots and shoes, hardware, leather and findings, etc., etc. The $100 which he had borrowed was paid within a year, and the Dutchman of whom he borrowed it was anxious to lend him more money, even at a lower rate of interest, saying, "Vel, I lets you have it at 15 per cent." This was the last money which Mr. W. ever borrowed. However, during his business career he was often in debt, but he never allowed an obligation to pass the time of its redemption. He carried on this mercantile business for 23 years, his patronage increasing so that he went to New-York twice a year, and sometimes to Boston, Buffalo and Detroit, for supplies. His sales sometimes amounted to more than $30,000 a year.

At the close of this 23 years of active business, he began to feel old age creeping over him, and he concluded to sell out and take the remainder of life easy. He is therefore now enjoying the fruits of his life's labors, being the owner of much valuable business property in Dexter and three good farms, one of which consists of 150 acres, adjoining the village, and on which are surveyed lots. He contributes a great deal to benevolent objects. Last year he gave $550 to Olivet College. He has also suffered many severe losses, especially by fire, and was often discouraged. Twice was the whole block consumed in which his stores were situated, losing two stores by each fire, which swept away nearly all his possessions. The little insurance he had, proved to be in worthless companies. He also lost his family one by one until he was left alone. His first wife died April 28, 1847, the 2 children having died previously. For his second wife he married Mrs. Martha M. Ellis, formerly Murdock, April 14, 1855. There is now 1 son, Charles Henry, who is living at home. Mr. Warner is a member of the Congregational Church, and in politics is a decided Republican. He has served his township in various local offices.

Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Warner will be found on pages 858-9.

Martha M. Warner was born in Framingham, Mass., Jan. 20, 1825, the eldest daughter of a family of 7, by her father's second wife. Her father, Samuel Murdock, was of Scotch descent and was born in Westminster, Mass.; her mother, Nabby Stone, was born in Framingham, Mass. The family came to Rochester, N. Y., in 1828, living there and at Penfield, a few miles out of the city, until 1839. The year previous, 1838, her mother died and was buried at Mt. Hope, Rochester. In the spring of 1839, the family came to Ypsilanti, Mich., to place his daughters in the family of an old friend, and under the instruction of Miss Eliza Clark, formerly of Derry, N. H., a graduate of Mount Holyoke, Mass., whom he afterward married. With her the subject of this sketch began pursuing her studies preparatory to, and an application was made for an entrance the following year at Holyoke; but owing to losses in her father's business, with long sickness and death of her step-mother, and brother Henry Martyn, changed her plan, and she assumed the place of housekeeper for her father, instead of fitting herself for teaching, as had been her intention. She was married to John C. Ellis, of Ypsilanti, May 1, 1845, coming immediately to Dexter. He died Feb. 25, 1848. Kate, now Mrs. W. H. Morehouse, of Emporia, Kansas, was the only child of this union. Subsequently she was married to Dennis Warner, April 14, 1855. Charles H., still with them, is their only child. Mrs. W. united with the Presbyterian Church at Penfield, N. Y., at 12 years of age. On coming to Dexter she united with the Congregational Church, as there was no Presbyterian Church here. Only two besides herself remain of the family of 7: S. W. Murdock, of this place, and Mrs. J. B. Smith, of Jacksonville, Ill. Two died in infancy and were buried at Framingham, Mass., a brother at Ypsilanti, and a sister, Mrs. D. C. Whitwood, at Elwood, Detroit. By her father's first marriage the only child, Mrs. T. D. Eames, of Jacksonville, Ill., still lives.

Hon. William Warner, lumber and hardware merchant, Dexter, was born in Connecticut in 1806, and was a son of Curtis and Eunice Warner, of Scotch descent, and natives of Connecticut, where the former died. In 1826 Mrs. Warner and William immigrated to Washtenaw Co., and settled in Dexter tp. In 1844, in Wayne Co., Mich., he married Helen A. Holmes, born in New York, in 1821, and daughter of Rosecrantz and Sallie Holmes. They had 4 children by the marriage, 2 of whom are living—Eva W., wife of Nicholas Macken, of Minnesota, and Anna L. Mary H. and William H. are deceased. Mr. Warner was elected to several local offices, and in 1851 was nominated by the Republican party to represent Washtenaw county in the Michigan Legislature, and the following autumn was elected by a handsome majority. He filled the office with honor to himself and credit to his constituents. He is the happy possessor of 290 acres of nicely cultivated land, and also owns a half interest in 440 acres of land left by his deceased brother.

Byron C. Whitaker, of the firm of Warner & Whitaker, dealers in lumber and machinery, Dexter, was born in Yates Co., N. Y., May 30, 1835. He is the son of Isaac and Achsah (Cushman) Whitaker, both natives of New York, and of English descent. Mr. W.'s parents came to Washtenaw county when he was a baby, and he was raised in the State. He went to the common schools for a while, but finished his education in the Ypsilanti High School, which institution he attended two years. He farmed it for several years in Lima tp., and while residing there served as Township Treasurer and Supervisor. He traveled as salesman for the Champion Reaper Co., from 1875 till 1879, and was very successful in this line. At the latter period he entered into partnership with William Warner, and the firm now does a successful business in lumber and agricultural implements. He was married Dec. 17, 1861, to Lucinda Holmes, and 1 child, Anna May, is the result of this union. Mrs. Whitaker is a member of the Baptist Church.

Murray S. White was born in Washtenaw Co. Dec. 18, 1848. The grandfather of Mr. White came to Washtenaw county in 1824. His parents were Henry K. and Martha (Stone) White, and 6 children were born to them. Murray S. received a common-school education, also attended the Ann Arbor High School. In 1872 he married Sarah A. White, who was not a relative. In politics Mr. White is a Republican.

Mrs. Mary A. Willcox was born in Ireland in 1825. She is the daughter of James and Mary (Ferguson) Henning, both natives of Ireland, and old pioneers of this county, coming here in 1833, and before Michigan was admitted as a State. They settled on sec. 9 in Scio tp. Mrs. W. has 2 sons—Edward G., born April 19, 1856, and David Tracy, born March 2, 1861. She is the proud possessor of 160 acres of fine farming land, and resides there, while her sons work the farm. The youngest son, David Tracy, has been attending the Michigan University. Mrs. Willcox has one sister who has been quite a proficient teacher for many years.

B. B. Williams, manufacturer, Dexter, was born in New York, in 1831. He is the son of William T. and Amanda (Burnett) Williams, both natives of New York, and of English and Irish descent. Mr. B. received his early education in the district schools of his native State, and when a young man came West to seek his fortune. He worked at the carpenter's trade in Ann Arbor the first six years he was in the county, and then turned his attention to farming, and worked a farm in Webster tp. for the next 10 years. Getting tired of this and thinking he could better his condition at his old trade, he came to Dexter and started a sash, blind and door factory, which he has operated since. He owns one of the best manufactories of this kind in the county, and has the reputation of turning out good and substantial material. He was married in 1860 to Clarissa C. Cooley, and 2 children were born to them—Herbert A. and Anna L., both living. In politics Mr. W. is a Republican.

J. W. Wing is a prominent farmer of Scio tp., and a worthy member of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw County. His ancestors are traced back to the 16th century on his father's side, when they emigrated from England and settled near Massachusetts bay; those on his mother's side, whose name was Lee, were from London, England, and settled near Ipswich, Essex Co., Mass., in 1635. His father, Benjamin Wing was born at Hardwick, Mass., Oct. 22, 1774, and his mother, Rebecca Lee, was born at Barre, Mass., March 24, 1780. They were married Feb. 24, 1800. Mr. Wing was born upon a farm near Sullivan, Madison Co., N. Y., Sept. 14, 1820. When 12 years of age he accompanied his parents to Michigan, and settled on a farm in what is now Scio tp., Washtenaw Co. His early educational advantages were limited, but in 1837 he attended an academy at Ann Arbor where he remained one year. Hon. John Farnsworth, of Illinois, and Hon. Orlando Loomis, were two of his classmates. While at school Mr. Wing studied surveying and civil engineering, and subsequently assisted in laying out a large portion of Ann Arbor city. In 1838 he commenced to teach school in Livingston Co., Mich.; in 1842-'3, he taught school at Howell, Mich., where he prepared several teachers for duties in a school; in 1838 he bought 120 acres of land in Livingston Co., which he sold in 1844; he then removed to Ann Arbor city, and in 1851 purchased the Capt. Perkin's estate, in Scio tp., comprising 240 acres, where he has since resided. Mr. Wing was married May 22, 1843, to Matilda Judson, who departed this life in 1849. In 1854 he was united in marriage to Harriet Bradford, a native of New York. They have 3 children—Minnie, born May, 1858; George, born May, 1861; and May, born May, 1867. Mr. Wing has never used liquor or tobacco at any time in his life, and is also a prominent member of that progressive order known as the Patrons of Husbandry, an organization which has, perhaps, done more to advance the science and success of agriculture in the United States than all others put together. He is a man of enlarged religious, political and educational ideas, and has served his fellow men in different official positions. Mr. Wing and his brother, Hon. Washington Wing, of Elgin, Ill., a former member of the Michigan State Legislature, are the only living members of the family of eight who came to Michigan in 1832.

Charles C. Zahn (deceased) was born in Germany in 1831, where he received his education. He accompanied his parents to America in 1846, and 10 years later was united in marriage to Catherine F. Realy, a native of Germany, who immigrated to America in 1844. Seven children were born to them, all living with their mother. Mr. Zahn was in political sympathy with the Democratic party. He died Feb. 26, 1876, leaving to his wife a valuable farm of 85 acres.

Dr. William E. Ziegenfuss, physician and surgeon, Dexter, was born in Pennsylvania Aug. 8, 1854, and is a son of George and Catherine Ziegenfuss. William came to this county in 1876, and entered the medical department of Michigan University, graduating in June, 1878. He located in Dexter in the autumn of 1879 where he has since resided in the practice of his profession. The Dr.'s early educational facilities were rather limited, but he obtained sufficient knowledge to enable him to teach school, at the age of 17. He also attended State Normal School of Pennsylvania, three terms. Dec. 23, 1879, he married Hatie L. Sill, born near Fort Huron Oct. 19, 1851, and daughter of George S. and Sarah B. (Peatt) Sill, of English and French descent. Dr. Ziegenfuss and wife are members of the M. E. Church. The Dr. in the short time he has resided in Dexter, has gained quite an encouraging practice.

ANN ARBOR TOWNSHIP.

This township contains about 21,300 acres of land, the greater portion of which is under cultivation, divided into 224 farms, or 95.09 acres per farm.

The Huron river enters the township at the southwest qr. of section 7, flows southwesterly, passing through the northeast quarter of Ann Arbor city, and leaves the township at the center of the eastern boundary of section 36, below Geddesburg. The Michigan Central railroad runs through the valley of the Huron, crossing the river at the western town line. In section 17, there are two railroad bridges, one in section 27, one in section 28, and one in section 36, at Geddesburg. The Toledo, Ann Arbor & Grand Trunk railroad bridge spans the river in section 20. The villages are Geddes in the southeast, and Foster in the northwest part of the town. Throughout the township the homes of the people tell of prosperity and progress.

The town of Ann Arbor has within its limits one city—Ann Arbor—and two villages, that of Newport, better known as Foster's or Cornwell, and Geddes. Newport is the location of the Cornwell Mills, and is situated on section 7. Geddes is located on section 36 and comprises about a dozen houses, and also a paper-mill which does a large business. The village is located on the Robert Geddes' farm. A paper village was laid out at an early day on section 17, to which was given the name of Barton. One house comprises the entire village.

ORGANIC.

The town of Ann Arbor originally comprised that part of Washtenaw county included in the surveyed townships 1 and 2, north of the base line, in range 6, and townships 1, 2, 3 and 4, in range 6, and townships 3 and 4, in range 5, south of the base line. The first township meeting was ordered held at the house of John Allen. The limits of the township were abridged from time to time, until finally it only embraced township No. 2 south, of range 6 east.

The first town election was held, according to statute, at the house of John Allen in May, 1827.

Since the organization of the town, it has been represented in an official capacity by the following named:

The first purchaser of land in what now comprises the town of Ann Arbor was James McCloskey, of Detroit, who purchased all of that part of section 26, south of the Huron river, the 25th day of April, 1823. Orrin White was the next purchaser, July 24, 1823. Robert Fleming next, Sept. 9, 1823. This was all the land purchased during that year.

In 1824, on the 12th day of February, John Allen and Elisha W. Rumsey purchased the site of the present city of Ann Arbor. Nathaniel and Sylvanus Noble, George W. and Ira H. Allen, Asa Bushnell, Titus Bronson, Eber White, Isaac Markham, Thomas Chambers, Seth Markham, Robert Fleming, George W. Noyes, Samuel Camp, J. B. Mason, William Brooks, Samuel D. Wagoner, Jones Noyes, Nathan Thayer, George Rash, Elnathan Botsford and E. Matteson purchased tracts of land. Of the foregoing the most of them settled on the land purchased of the Government, and became identified with the place. The last purchase of Government land was on June 16, 1835, by Daniel Donnelly, who purchased part of the southeast quarter of section 7.

EARLY SETTLERS.

The following is an extract from a paper prepared by John Geddes, which deals with the early settlement of that portion of the township known as "School District No. 8:"

Orrin White, his wife Ann, and three children were the first settlers. They moved into a shanty on the northwest fractional quarter of section 26, July 4, 1824. They came from Palmyra, Wayne Co., N. Y., near where Mr. White was born. Mrs. White was born at Tioga Point, Pa., and her maiden name was Thayer. Next was George Rash, his wife Fanny and five children, and a bound boy, Levi Bunt. They settled on the northeast quarter of section 25, in September or October, 1824. Mr. Rash was born in Massachusetts; his wife, whose maiden name was Galloway, was born in Pennsylvania. They came from Perry, Genesee Co., N. Y.

Elnathan Botsford and his wife Eliza came in May, 1825, and settled on the north part of the northwest fractional quarter of section 36. In 1827 they moved upon the west half of the southwest quarter of section 25. They were a newly married couple. Mr. Botsford was born in Milford, New Haven Co., Conn.; his wife, whose former name was Smith, was born in the State of New York. They came from Perry, Genesee Co., N. Y.

Robert and John Geddes came June 14, 1825, and settled on the south part of the northeast fractional quarter of section 36. They were unmarried. Robert came from Romulus, Seneca Co., N. Y., and John from Londonderry township, Chester Co., Pa., where they were both born and raised.

Amos Hicks and Mary his wife moved into the district in October, 1825. They had seven children. They finally settled on the east half of the southeast quarter of section 26. Mr. Hicks was born in Massachusetts; his wife, whose maiden name was Love, was born in Ireland. They came from Parma, Monroe Co., N. Y.

Moses Clark, his wife and family of seven children came and settled down on the northeast part of the northeast fractional quarter of section 35. Mr. Clark was a Baptist minister, and was born in the State of New York. Mr. Clark sold out to Elnathan Botsford in the spring of 1832, and with his family left the township. Two of his children died before he left. Mr. Clark was 48 years old when he came here in 1825.

Amos Hicks died April 16, 1835, aged 59 years. Eliza Botsford died Dec. 24, 1847, aged 44 years and 25 days, of consumption. Elnathan Botsford died Jan. 6, 1853, of congestion of the lungs, aged 53 years and eight months. George Rash died Oct. 9, 1855, of paralysis, aged 67 years. Fanny Rash died May 31, 1859, of liver complaint, aged 71 years, 7 months and 26 days. Orrin White died Feb. 18, 1864, aged 69 years, 3 months and 24 days. Robert Geddes died March 11, 1866, aged 68 years and three months, of typhoid pneumonia. Mary Hicks died Oct. 6, 1868, aged 76 years, 5 months and 9 days, of old age and paralysis. Ann White died Dec. 1, 1871, of inflammation of the lungs, aged 71 years and 8 months. Elnathan Botsford died in the fourth ward of Ann Arbor, and Orrin and Ann White in the fifth ward. The others died in school district No. 8. They were all buried in said district, except Orrin and Ann White, whose remains lie in Forest Hill Cemetery, Ann Arbor. The first adult person that died in the district was Prosper Paine Clark, a son of Rev. Moses Clark. He went out one morning to chop rail-cuts, and not coming home to dinner, he was found by his father lying on his face, on the ground, with a rail-cut on the back of his neck, dead. This was in March, 1828. He was about 25 years old. Levi Bunt enlisted in the Mexican war, and died in New Orleans on his way to Mexico.

The history of the city of Ann Arbor is given in full, and as the history of the town is so interwoven with that, it necessarily embraces the town history. The first births, deaths, and other matters of interest transpired within the city limits. The reader's attention is therefore called to the city's history.

ANN ARBOR CITY.

From that day in February, 1824, when Allen and Rumsey arrived on the spot where the city now stands, progress has been made, unequalled in some respects, and exceeded only in a few instances. The locality has had every advantage; nature made it beautiful, the American pioneer made it useful. The former conferred upon it a rich soil and a great water-power; the latter utilized each, transforming the soil into well ordered gardens, and turning the waters of the river into channels of industry. The change, which has marked the years of progress, is one in which the people must take an especial pride. Few of the early occupiers live to realize this change; the greater number of the old settlers do not regret it; but there are yet among them men and women who look back to the never-forgotten past, and mourn the by-gone times, when contentment waited on the workers of the cradle, plow and spade, when pastoral industry was rewarded by peace and plenty, and primitive happiness ruled within the rude but comfortable log-houses of the pioneers. Old-time manners and customs have been revolutionized, a new order established, and the labor of the modernizers made to manifest itself in everything.

The citizens have, from the earliest period, paid much attention to educational matters. From the pioneer era to the present time the school has been the theme of gossip and inquiry. A love of education formed the leading characteristic of the people; it has always been fostered and cherished by them. It has been raised up from a very humble beginning to the greatest heights, until at length the establishments devoted to it, the number and high order of its teachers and the multitude of its votaries render the name of Ann Arbor synonymous with learning and culture.

The varied forms of Christianity have steadily advanced, churches have multiplied until their spires are now seen in every quarter of the city. Their bells do not continue to ring out peals of discord, for the intellectual world, which they summon to prayer, has abolished religious bigotry, leaving nature to act the despot in winning the minds of men to the first truths of the Christian Church.

The literary circles of the city compare in membership and intellectual excellence with those of the great literary centers of the Union. Perfect in organization, they awaken in the minds of those who read the reports of their meeting, or who attend their literary and social reunions, a sense of what study is capable of accomplishing. They afford many instances of the dignity which attaches itself to cultivated nature in its highest form, and thus prepare the way, by precedent, for others to follow.

The Students' Lecture Association is among the first of the literary circles. In the announcement of the society for 1880-'81 such subjects as the "Landmarks of Scott," "Position of the Novel in Literature," "Alexander Hamilton," have been treated. The names of Wallace Bruce, Prof. Swing, John Clarke Redpath, Archibald Forbes and Henry Ward Beecher were given as lecturers. The Marie Litta Concert Co., Helen Potter, Bernard Listermann, Edouard Remenyi, Laura E. Dainty, and Madam Rive King performed in the University hall under the auspices of this society. The other collegiate associations, with the circles of the city, present equally entertaining programmes, so that scarcely a week passes without a literary reunion of a high order. Among those of especial note are the lectures of the Ann Arbor Reform Club.

The press of the city is well conducted. It is the exponent of American ideas, and the faithful guardian of American interests. The writers are evidently of that class who have risen above flunkeyism and deal justly by the time in which they live. They oppose their journals to innovation, when such does not give promise of good results; they stigmatize moral cowardice, and teach that from the village council room to the chambers of the National Government virtue should be doubly cherished and vice subjected to rebuke and punishment.

Ann Arbor is beautifully situated on the Huron. The river enters the city on the north and flows southeast, again northeast to the city limits. The valley of the Huron at this point presents a scene of beauty that cannot be surpassed. Throughout its tortuous course the swift current rushes forward, as it were, to mingle with the waters of Erie. On the left bank are the immense hills which lend to the northern portion of the city that physical picturesqueness so much admired. The city proper is situated on the right bank, covering that beautiful land on which the pioneers of Ann Arbor settled 57 years ago. In the valley, and running almost parallel with the Huron, is the Michigan Central railroad. At a point opposite the Chubb road is the crossing of the A. A., T. & G. T. R. R. Here also the river is spanned by the railroad bridge built in 1880 for the A. A. & T. Railroad Co.; while eastward are Pontiac and Wall street bridges.

The county court-house is located in the heart of the city; the University buildings are located southeast of the business center. The observatory is situated on the heights, overlooking the valley, northeast of the University, while on the east is the beautiful cemetery of Forest Hill.

The northern portion of the city may be called the village of the Seven Hills. There are many neat residences, together with numerous commercial buildings, combining to render it a most important section of the city.

The streets and avenues of the city are graded, shaded by a double line of thrifty trees, while ranked on each side are the neat and, in many instances, elegant residences of the citizens. Many of the churches are magnificent edifices, the school buildings are classed with the finest in the State, while the business blocks are metropolitan in character. With the exception of the M. C. R. R. depot and the hotels, the utmost effort of good taste is displayed throughout, so that it may now be classed as the neatest little city of the Union.

The original plat of Ann Arbor was acknowledged May 25, 1824, before Richard Smith, a justice both in Canada and this State at the time, whose whereabouts and commission were so wrapt in mystery that the plat is not received in evidence. Philo A. Judd made the survey and plat for Allen & Rumsey. The land platted in 1824 comprised all that tract between Allen's creek and Division, and from Jefferson street to the north line of block 4, north of Huron street.

The first addition was made by Anson Brown and Edward L. Fuller, June 25, 1832. This addition lies north of the river.

Mr. Brown came to Ann Arbor in 1827, and was a merchant and occupied a general retail store on Main street, at or near the location of Wines & Worden's store. He was one of the most energetic and thorough business men of the village, and if his life had been spared, the development and history of Ann Arbor would probably have been different in some respects from what it actually has been. He was determined the future city of Ann Arbor should be on the north side of the Huron river, and at one time he seemed likely to succeed.

The second addition—the Ann Arbor Land Co.'s plat—was made in July, 1836, by Jonathan Stratton. The tract so platted is east of State street and south of the continuation of Washington to the south line of the section. The company's land contained 330 acres, a portion of which was platted. The eastern addition was platted in 1839 on the north part of section 28. In 1836 this company set apart 10 acres, now comprised in the University grounds, for the purpose of a State-House.

The third addition was made by Caleb Ormsby and David Page in July, 1838. It extended from the river south to Fuller street.

The fourth addition was made by Davidson and Gentean, July 6, 1838.

The eastern addition was platted in 1839 and recorded in August of that year. Wm. R. Thompson, Wm. S. Maynard, Chester Ingalls and E. W. Morgan bought the land from Nowland, who sold half his interest to Thayer, who sold to Pitcher, of Detroit. The property was vested in E. W. Morgan, who directed John Farnsworth to make a survey of the tract. The old cemetery formed a part of the plat. West of this was the private cemetery, a corner of which forms the Hebrew burial ground.

Wm. P. Maynard platted a part of northwest quarter of section 29, forming a portion of his land on the Gorham railroad, Dec. 20, 1839.

Bowers' addition is bounded by Huron and North streets, and Division and State streets. The tract contains 10 acres, the survey of which was made in June, 1844.

John H. Carnish platted a small tract Nov. 25, 1845.

Danforth and Wilson's addition, block 2 south, range 8 east, was platted Oct. 18, 1845.

Wm. S. Maynard's second addition was platted April 20, 1846. It extended north from Madison to Eber White road, or Liberty street.

Lawrence and Maynard's addition, as made Aug. 25, 1848, extended north from the north line of the eastern addition to the face of the southern plateau.

Solomon Mann's addition was platted Nov. 25, 1849.

Benham's addition was made November, 1853, north of Huron street.

Travers directed the survey of a tract, west of the Huron and south of Travers' brook, Jan. 15, 1856. He platted another piece of land Oct. 20, 1857.

R. S. Smith's first addition was made in August, 1867, containing 87 lots.

J. B. Crane platted a sub-division of block 1, north, of range 12, Feb. 27, 1858.

The Wilcoxson land, north of the Huron and east of Division street, was platted for W. S. Maynard, June 16, 1858.

W. S. Maynard's second addition was made July 18, 1858, on the tract lying west and south of his first plat.

Wm. A. Benedict's addition, surveyed March 11, 1859, was located north of Brown's.

Hiscock's improved plat extended north from High street to Chubb road, and west from Spring street. It was made in May, 1859.

Hiscock's first addition, May 10, 1859, is bounded on the south by Felch street, north by Chubb road, west by J. B. Gott's addition and on the east by Grove street, with a small extension to the Plank road.

Felch's addition was surveyed May 7, 1859.

Baldwin's addition, known as the picnic grove, was made July 5, 1859.

James H. Brown's addition, made March 17, 1860, north of Brown & Bach's addition, and east of the Saline road.

Samuel Pettibone's addition was made March 27, 1861, north-east of Chubb or Hiscock's road, extending to M. C. R. R.

Thompson, Spoor & Thompson's addition was made April 6, 1861, containing 22 lots, west of Maynard's addition.

R. S. Smith's 2d addition was made April 1, 1861, containing six blocks.

W. S. Maynard's 3d addition was surveyed May 1, 1861.

Brown & Bach's addition was laid out June 17, 1861, east of the plank road, on sec. 32.

Wm. S. Saunder's addition was made November, 1861, south of Geddes road and west of township road.

James B. Gott's addition was made Aug. 8, 1862, extending west of Allen's creek and west of Mill race to north line of sec. 29 and south to Felch street.

D. Baldwin's eastern addition, made July 27, 1866, comprised the east half of southeast quarter of section 28.

Hill's addition, surveyed Nov. 12, 1866, is located south of Ann Arbor Land Co.'s property.

J. S. Weller's addition, a subdivision of a part of Maynard & Morgan's property, is bounded by Huron, Division and Grove streets; was platted July 13, 1867.

Patridge's addition, east of Pontiac street, north of the city, was laid out May 27, 1867, on the north half of section 21.

Swathel's addition was made July 10, 1867, west of State street between North and Fuller streets.

Ingall's addition was made Dec. 12, 1867, east of the eastern addition, north of the observatory.

J. H. Brown's 2d addition, made Oct. 19, 1867, west of Saline street, in the northeast quarter of northwest quarter of section 32.

James B. Gott's 2d addition, west of Hiscock's property, extended north from Felch street; this was surveyed May 30, 1868.

A. Ten Brook's addition, between Orleans street and Geddes avenue, south of Forest Hill Cemetery, east of Elm street, was made June 19, 1869.

Chapin's addition, south of Miller avenue, was made Aug. 25, 1869.

Willmot's addition, bounded by Forest Hill Cemetery, Elm street and Washtenaw avenue, was made Sept. 4, 1869.

Daniel Hiscock's 2d addition, surveyed June 16, 1870, is bounded by High street on the south, Chubb road on the north, Grove street on the west and plank road on the east.

Jewett's addition, extending south from Huron to Liberty street, and east of west line of section 29, was made May 19, 1871.

C. H. Miller's 2d addition, northeast of Washtenaw avenue on sections 28 and 33, June 23, 1871.

SETTLEMENT.

In the month of February, 1824, John Allen, of Virginia, and Elisha Walker Rumsey and wife, of Genesee Co., N.Y., met by accident in Cleveland, and soon formed an acquaintance. Both were in search of a new home in the forests of Michigan. They started for the interior of the Territory together, and on arriving in this vicinity located some lands belonging to the U. S. Government, embracing a beautiful burr-oak forest on section 29, in township 2 south, range 6 east, with the Huron river on the north and east and a small stream since known as Allen's creek, on the west.

At the foot of a hill on the east side of this creek, they pitched a tent and built an arbor, and Mrs. Mary Ann Rumsey became the mistress of the new home. This primitive home was called "Ann's Arbor," in honor of these two women, which finally assisted the early settlers to fix upon an appropriate name for their new and thrifty village.

A log house was also soon erected by Allen and Rumsey in the same locality, which stood on the south side of Huron street, near what is now known as the southwest corner of Huron and First streets, near Allen's creek. In this house Mr. Rumsey and wife kept for several years a tavern known as "The Washtenaw Coffee House." He owned 160 acres of land lying south of Huron street. Mr. Allen owned 320 acres north of this street, and built in the year 1825 a block-house on the northwest corner of Main and Huron streets, where the Gregory block now stands. He was a very energetic and intelligent citizen, of fine and commanding appearance, and was the first postmaster and justice of the peace of Ann Arbor.

The old log hotel which then occupied the site of the present Gregory House, was painted blood red, and that corner was known as the "Bloody Corners." Mr. Allen built this house, and on its completion he wrote to his wife that it contained twenty families; the wife, thinking that it was a large building, came on and was surprised to see that the only partitions between the rooms of the occupiers were blankets. In 1849 Mr. Allen visited the gold fields of California, and died there within two years after his arrival, March 11, 1851.

The following historical items were extracted from a letter written by James T. Allen, brother of John Allen, now of Chicago, to John Geddes, and contains much valuable and accurate information:

"My father, James Allen, with his family (7 in number) removed from Augusta county, Virginia, to Michigan in the year 1824. The names of the family were James Allen and Elizabeth Allen (my father and mother); Ann I. Allen, Brother John's wife, and Sarah A. their child; James C. Allen and Elizabeth M. C. Allen, children of John Allen by his first wife, and myself. There also came with us Orville Barnes, who was teaching school in Virginia, being from one of the New England States. We left our old home on Middle river in said county on the 28th day of Aug., 1824, and arrived at Ann Arbor on the 16th day of October, same year. Brother John arrived at Ann Arbor in the month of February previous. When we arrived we moved into the block house on the N. W. corner of Main & Huron Sts. I bought the house and lot of Bro. John and paid him three hundred dollars for it. When we moved into the building, John Harford had a small stock of goods in said building in the room fronting on Main street. The Block house was built before we arrived, but how long I don't know. Deacon Maynard and his family were at Mallet's Creek living in a back shanty. He had the body of a log house up, but had no roof on it. In passing through Mallet's creek with our heavy Penn. wagon we stuck in the mud, and the Deacon helped to pull us out with his oxen. My father died at Ann Arbor July 18, 1828, in his fifty-seventh year. My mother died July 15, 1861, at James C. Allen's house near Mallet's creek, lacking a few days of eighty-six years old. Bro. John Allen died in California, near San Francisco, on the eleventh day of March, 1851, nearly fifty-five years old. My sister, Mary T. Welch, died at Ann Arbor, Nov. 27, 1847, fifty-three years and eight months old; Ann Isabelle Allen, Bro. John's wife, returned to Virginia, with her daughter, Sarah A. (date not known), and died there Nov. 27, 1875, in her seventy-ninth year. Her daughter, Sarah A., married and is now living in New Hope, Va. Elizabeth M. C. Allen married Wm. Wilson; they are now living in Mackesaw village in Green county, Wisconsin. I was born March 4, 1804; I enjoy very good health. I lived in Ann Arbor 32 years, and in Chicago 22 years next Nov. 4th."

The same spring, after the arrival of Allen and Rumsey, Asa L. Smith with his wife and one child came to Ann Arbor on foot through the woods, bringing on his back all their property, and having on his arrival here but one shilling in his pocket. He was a carpenter by trade, and built a house a short distance west of the present Gregory House. A few years afterward he built the brick building now occupied by Mr. Lodholz for a bakery and residence, situated on the corner of Broadway and Canal streets in the Fifth ward of this city.

In 1825 there were nine small houses in Ann Arbor, located and occupied as near as can be now ascertained, as follows:

Elisha W. Rumsey occupied the "Washtenaw Coffee House," and John Allen, the block house before mentioned. A log house with a frame addition stood on the northeast corner of Main and Ann streets. Two small houses stood on the opposite side of Main street, near the spot where Duffy's store now stands, and were occupied by two brothers, James and George W. Noyes. A frame house stood on Huron street near the "Cook House," and was built and occupied by Cornelius Osterhaut, a carpenter and joiner. Another log house stood near the northeast corner of Main and Washington streets. Farther south, on Main street, up in the woods, was another log house, occupied by Alva Brown. Such was the appearance of Ann Arbor as viewed by Capt. Charles Thayer, in 1825.

Two years later Ann Arbor had become a village of considerable importance and boasted of three stores which were well supplied with a general assortment of merchandise, and three new taverns had also appeared as rivals of Rumsey's "Coffee House." Andrew Nowland, the father of John S. Nowland, accommodated the public near the north end of State street, a short distance above where the railroad crosses the street. Samuel Camp kept hotel on the southwest corner of Main and Huron streets, and Ira W. Bird on the southeast corner of Main and Huron, directly opposite that of Mr. Camp, while Oliver Whitmore had succeeded Mr. Rumsey at the Coffee House near the creek.

Merchandise and supplies of nearly every kind were procured at Detroit, and brought through the woods and mud in wagons by way of Plymouth, or by boats pushed up the Huron river to Rawsonville (then called Snow's Landing), and conveyed in wagons the remainder of the distance to Ann Arbor. The population of the village at this time was about 150, and there were between 20 and 30 dwellings. Previous to 1832 there was but one small grist-mill here, with one run of stone, and built near the present dam on Huron river.

Henry Welch was also among the more prominent of the earliest settlers of Ann Arbor. He came here in 1826 with his family from the vicinity of Harrisonburg, Virginia. He was for several years one of the most prominent and successful merchants in the village, and occupied a store on the southwest corner of Main and Huron streets. He was a gentleman of the Virginia school, and possessed excellent business qualities.

In August, 1827, Elisha W. Rumsey died in the house built by Mr. Osterhaut, and the tavern was occupied about this time by Oliyér Whitmore. Mr. Rumsey was captain of the first militia company organized in this county, and the first training by the militia was in 1825. One small company then comprised the entire militia of this county. His brother, Judge Henry Rumsey, bought 80 acres of land from James Noyes, in 1825, including the grounds of the University of Michigan.

The plat of the village of Ann Arbor was recorded May 25, 1824, in the Register's office at Detroit. The village became the county seat in 1824, on condition that a block of the village plat should be donated, on which the court-house should be erected, and also a block for a jail. John Allen gave the required land for the court-house (where it now stands), and Mr. Rumsey gave a block for a jail. This block is now occupied for a lumber yard on Liberty street. A small building for a jail was built there with funds contributed by the citizens, and Israel Branch was the first jailer. This building burned down several years after.

In the summer of 1827 several hundred Indians arrived at Ann Arbor and occupied three camps, nearly surrounding the village. Rumors had preceded them to the effect that they were on the war path and intended to burn the village and scalp the inhabitants. But the Indians proved to be peaceful, and quietly left the next day. It was, however, an anxious night for some of our early settlers. It was afterward explained that some of these Indians had been to Malden to draw their annual presents from the British Government for services in the war of 1812, while other bands were on their way thither, and accidentally met at Ann Arbor those returning. Small bands of Indians frequently visited the village to trade with the settlers and exchanged berries, venison, furs and maple sugar for dry goods, and "scuta waboo," or fire water.

GROWTH OF THE VILLAGE.

The population of Ann Arbor in 1834 was 830, and at that time there were several stores, taverns and other business houses there. In 1838, it contained a court-house, jail, a bank, two banking associations, four churches,—Presbyterian, Baptist, Episcopalian and Universalist,—two printing offices, which issued two weekly newspapers, a book store, two druggists, a flouring mill with six run of stone, a saw-mill, woolen factory, carding machine, iron foundry, an extensive plow factory, two tanneries, 17 dry-goods stores, 11 lawyers and nine physicians. It had also a flourishing academy with about 70 pupils. Population, 2,000.

FIRST BIRTH.

Elisha Walker Rumsey Smith, son of Asa L. and Syrena Smith, was the first white child born in Ann Arbor. He was born Nov. 27, 1825. This son was named Rumsey, at the request of that gentleman, who promised him a village lot in token of distinction as the first child born in Ann Arbor. He died in April, 1827. This is a disputed point, the honor being claimed by John S. Nowland, who was born June 13, 1826. Mr. Nowland has the evidence of the family record to substantiate his claim. The records in the other case are not to be obtained.

MERCHANTS.

John Harford was the first merchant in Ann Arbor. He began business in 1824. Cyrus Beckwith came soon after. In May, 1827, Edward Clark came to Ann Arbor and opened a store of general merchandise, occupying a building on the east side of Main street, near Washington street. The following year he built and occupied a frame store on the opposite side of the street. The old two-story building torn down a few years since to give place to the new one, was the same building erected by Clark in 1828. David and Jonathan Ely were also merchants here when Clark arrived. Hethcot Mowry opened a store here in 1830, and Edward Mundy and John Thompson opened stores in 1831. Wm. S. Maynard soon after opened a tavern in John Allen's block-house, and a store in the frame building adjoining the block-house.

MILLS.

In June, 1824, George W. Noyes commenced preparations for building a grist-mill above where the city mill now stands. The frame was raised the first of August, 1826. At the raising were the following first settlers of the county: Capt. Dix, from Dixboro, John and Robert Geddes, Col. White and many others from Ann Arbor town; Judge Dexter and Mr. Arnold from Dexter; Horace and Virgil Boothe and others from Lodi; Orin Parsons and others from Saline; Whitmore, McDowell, Maynard, Parsons and Carpenter from Pittsfield; and a number from Ypsilanti—nearly all of the then settlers of the county. And there was a general time of rejoicing that flour could be obtained short of Detroit. The mill was soon in running order and well patronized. Considerable grain was raised that year; wheat could be bought for 75 cents per bushel. On the 23d day of November following, Mr. Noyes was killed at the raising of a house for Mr. Nowland (located south of the railroad crossing, on the east side of State street). The building was raised by posts and beams, a bent at a time. Not being sufficiently stayed at the time Mr. Noyes went up on the frame to adjust the plates, the whole structure fell, killing him instantly. In 1829 Anson Brown purchased of Andrew Nowland the land now comprising a portion of the fifth ward, and soon after built the dam across the river and a grist-mill where now stands the large flouring mill of Swift & Co. These were the pioneer mills of Ann Arbor. They were small but met the requirements of the time.

HOTELS.

The pioneer in the hotel business was E. W. Rumsey, who, in 1825, established the "Washtenaw Coffee House." W. S. Maynard, shortly after, engaged in the same business in a large log house where the Gregory House now stands. In 1830 Solon Cook came to the village, opened the "Cook House," and for 37 years continued to minister to the comfort of the traveling public. In 1831 Chauncey S. Goodrich purchased a block of land east of the courthouse square, and erected a building which he occupied and used as a hotel for many years. The building is yet standing and being used for mercantile purposes. In 1832, in the lower town, William R. Thompson kept a hotel known as the "Washtenaw House."

Since the foregoing dates many public houses have been erected, flourished for a time, and then passed away. The "Cook House," rebuilt and greatly enlarged, is upon the old site; the "Gregory House," built in 1864, upon the southwest corner of the square, is a fine, convenient and popular house, which was purchased in December, 1880, by Nelson Booth. This house was first opened by E. M. Gregory. The "Leonard House" is upon West Huron street, and doing a good business.

THE FIRST PUBLIC BALL

was held in Rumsey's Coffee House. A part of the guests were from Ypsilanti. An old gray-headed man, the father of John Allen, played the violin. Much praise was bestowed upon the excellent supper and Mrs. Rumsey's culinary skill. This was in the winter of 1824-'25. The second ball was held in 1825, at the same place, on Independence Day. The third was held in the winter of 1826, on the occasion of the inauguration of a Masonic lodge. The coffee house stood on the south side of West Huron street, near a house afterward owned by Erastus Root. The Masonic ball was held in a double log house, owned and kept by John Allen. There were guests from Detroit, Ypsilanti, Superior and Dexter. The several distinguished guests were Gen. Cass, Judge Witherell, Gen. Larned, Gen. Schwartz, Col. Pray and Judge Dexter. Miss Venus Whitmore, said to be the belle of the party, led the first dance with Gen. Cass. They had a rare supper of wild fruits and meats: their wines and brandies were brought from Detroit.

POSTOFFICE.

The postoffice was established in 1825, with John Allen as postmaster. At this time there was no regularly surveyed road between Ann Arbor and Detroit, and Bethuel Farrand, who was the first mail-carrier, followed the Indian trail between the two places. For his services he was to receive one hundred dollars per year. The trip required three days, and was often attended with danger and great exposure. There were no bridges over the streams, and in the spring of the year they were always greatly swollen, and in fording them it was often at the risk of life.

In 1832 Anson Brown obtained the appointment of postmaster and removed the postoffice to the lower village. This movement caused great excitement among the upper villagers. He brought up the mail in his hat and distributed the mail to the people on the streets. A meeting of the citizens of the upper village was held in 1834 for the purpose of recommending to the Postmaster General the appointment of another postmaster, not because there was any personal objection to Brown, but in order to secure its return to the upper village. That meeting recommended Charles Thayer. The petition was sent to Washington for his appointment and it was received Sept. 30, 1834. A short time previous to this, Mr. Brown had died of cholera, and Thayer took possession of the post-office and soon after removed it to the upper village.

Among those who had since held the office of postmaster are Mark Howard, George Danforth, F. J. B. Crane, Caleb Clark, Henry D. Bennett, John I. Thompson, Richard Beahan, C. B. Grant, H. S. Dean and C. G. Clark.

CEMETERIES.

The first cemetery was located at the head of East Huron street, and was donated by Andrew Nowland in 1832. It now contains about five acres. The land was purchased by Andrew Nowland from Thomas Chambers, June 6, 1826.

Anson Brown gave a plat of ground on a hill northwest of the Washtenaw House for a cemetery, which is still in use. Elizabeth Thompson, mother of Wm. R. Thompson, was the first person buried there.

Forest Hill Cemetery was dedicated in 1859. This burial ground was laid out by the master gardener for the proprietary. In later years the gate house was added, vaults erected and additions made to the drive ways; improvement has followed improvement, until now, throughout its entire area of 40 acres, there is nothing to remind the visitor of this home of the dead, save the elegant monuments raised to their memory. The cemetery is located on the eastern side of the city, and is another monument to the civilization of our time.

Among the monuments in Forest Hill are those erected to commemorate the names of Henning, Blake, Swift, Millen, Fasquelle, Hunt, Bach, Sackett, Wheeler, Spaulding, Godfrey, Howard, White, Gillespie, Chase, Gregory, Behr, Richards, Molony, Gerner, Bender, Welles, Sinclair, Pond, Maynard, Greenville, Scott, Osborn, Goodale, Boyden, Beal, Brakey, Treadwell, McIntyre, Morgan, Ellsworth, Lund, Cheevers, Read, Loomis, Danforth, Gerner, Searman, Risdon, George. In the older cemeteries, the marble perpetuates the names of many of the old settlers who died previous to 1859.

REMINISCENCES OF JOHN THOMPSON (deceased).

I was born in Waterford, Saratoga Co., N. Y., Feb. 21, 1798. I came to Ann Arbor Dec. 24, 1831. The country was beautiful beyond description; the spring following was early, and the Michigan roses grew and bloomed plentifully; the wild grape vines clambered over the wild plum trees.

The village was small at that time. I rented of Mr. Asa L. Smith a one story and a half house on Main street, on the ground where Mr. Widenmann's store now is. After getting settled, I opened a small store in my house. I had to go to Detroit for supplies with an ox team, which in those days took nearly one week to accomplish. I purchased one barrel of apples, one box of candies (the first one ever brought to Ann Arbor for sale), and $25 worth of groceries, which was, to my mind then, quite an outfit. Mr. A. Brown, who had been in the village some time before me, had a store where Philip Bach now sells goods. There was a tavern on the corner where the Ann Arbor Savings Bank stands. There was also a log tavern, which had been clapboarded, and stood on the spot now covered by the Gregory House.

The Presbyterians had a low wooden building, about in the center, or on the southeast corner of the land now occupied by the same society. The Episcopalians held their services in a school-house. The Methodist and Baptist Churches worshiped God alternately in the old red brick school-house, which was where Mr. McCreery's house is. We had good and true ministers then, as well as now, and the names of Beach, Twist, Gavet, Pilcher and Colclazer will not soon be forgotten. An amusing incident, I remember, occurred in Mr. C.'s ministry, which I will relate. Bro. Colclazer went north of our village 30 miles to attend a quarterly meeting; and in those good old days we had a sermon on Saturday afternoon, and friends from a distance, and neighbors, came to attend that service, as well as to be on time for the love-feast on Sunday morning. Well, Bro. C. was to stay with Bro. Boutwell, and he, of course, took pleasure and pride to have all things pleasant at home, and the school-house in apple-pie order, for his guest. There were also many brothers and sisters "in the Church" stopping with Bro. B. Saturday night came, and Mr. B. took the man of God to his room for the night, which was at the head of the ladder, in a log house, with sheets hung up for partitions. Mr. Colclazer thanked his friend for his good bed. Mr. Boutwell said good night, and "We shall all want to get up early in the morning." The minister prepared for bed, took off his wig (although quite a young man) and hung it on the bed-post at the head of his bed, and composed himself to rest. As it was such a rare occasion in Mr. B.'s life, he could not sleep, for he feared all might not pass off as he wished. So he rose up early in the morning, at break of day, and stepped up the ladder, loudly called his daughter "to get up quick, for they had so many to get breakfast for." No sooner had he said that, when he beheld the poor wig on the bed-post, and it being the first one he ever saw, he was very badly frightened, and thought the Indians had scalped the minister. So he hallooed: "Oh, the Indians! the Indians!" At this moment the minister, awakened out of sound sleep, was alarmed too, and raised up quickly in bed, forgetting his bald head in his fright. This was too much for Mr. B. He now was sure that the Indians had been there, and, scared almost to death, screamed "Murder! murder!" at the top of his voice, which brought all the family from below, and guests from above, to the scene. As Mr. B. was in his night-clothes, he made a strange appearance. When all was explained, and the wig placed in its legitimate place, all were merry at Bro. B.'s expense. Poor man, he was so chagrined and troubled that he rushed below, and did not appear at breakfast, love-feast or school-house.

John Allen was postmaster at Ann Arbor; my brother, Hiram Thompson, postmaster at Jackson. I carried the first United States mail from Ann Arbor to Jackson. The mail was small then, consisting of about six letters, which I carried in my hat. What kind of a hat would it take to carry Ann Arbor's mail now? The postage was 25 cents per letter. I went once a week with the mail, for three months, always on foot, and following the Indian trail. The journey took four days, for which I received 50 cents per day. There were no bridges then, and I was obliged to ford the creeks the best way I could. The walk was a long 40 miles, some parts of it pleasant to recall; not so much so, however, the howling of the wolves near by, and I a long mile from a tavern. I used to see a great many deer, roaming at their will over the oak openings. After a while the mail was carried in a lumber wagon.

My brother, Wm. R. Thompson, went into the Washtenaw House, Lower Town, in 1833. He was one of the commissioners of the first railroad from Detroit to Marshall, and one of five of the pioneers who gave 40 acres of land to our Michigan University. The names of those men were: Judge Rumsey, Charles Thayer, Gov. Mundy, Wm. S. Maynard and Wm. R. Thompson.

My mother, Elizabeth Thompson, came with my family to Ann Arbor in 1831, and died in November, 1833. Mr. Anson Brown gave a plat of ground (which is still in use) on the hill just back of Washtenaw House, for a resting place for our dead; and as my mother was the first person who was buried in that ground, it was bounded by her grave.

I was drafted for the Toledo war. Judge Crane, of Dexter, was appointed captain, and Peter Slingerland, colonel. I have lived through the Toledo and Black Hawk wars.

REMINISCENCES OF LORRIN MILLS.

My first visit to Ann Arbor was in June, 1826, to visit several brothers who lived two miles east of the town. Messrs. John Allen and Walker Rumsey, the proprietors of the town, had been here then about two years and a half. As I was then living in Buffalo, I saw Mr. Allen there before he ever came here. He was from Virginia. He got acquainted with the man I was living with, and told him he was going West to find a place to start a town, and when he got located he would let him know where he was. On his way up the lake he stopped at Cleveland and there for the first time he saw Mr. Rumsey. He found that Mr. R. was going on the same business, and they agreed to go on together.

They came to Detroit, and from there came to a place called Woodruff's Grove, one mile east of Ypsilanti, but I believe it is now included in the corporation. From there they came to this place, it being 10 miles beyond the last house. This I think was in February, 1824. Mr. Rumsey had his wife with him, so she was the first white woman here. They took their boxes and blankets and made a kind of a tent on the ground now owned by Weil brothers, between Huron and Washington streets, near Allen's creek, as they called it. There they found a good spring. They soon put up a log house just east of their tent on a little higher ground. Where the main part of the town now stands was a beautiful burr-oak plain. As Mrs. Allen's name was Ann and Mrs. Rumsey's name was Mary Ann, they agreed to take the Ann from their wife's name and put the Arbor to it and make the very pretty name of Ann Arbor; and I believe there is not another town in all the world by that name. As I was well acquainted with both these men and their wives, I have often heard them tell how the name was born.

When I first came here from Buffalo in 1826, it took a steamboat three days to get from Buffalo to Detroit. Upon landing there I found the only way to get to Ann Arbor was by stage, which was a lumber wagon, driven by Deacon Bethuel Farrand, who also carried the mail. We started from Detroit early in the morning and traveled all day, and at night we had got as far as Swartsburg, a few miles east of Plymouth. As we had got through the timbered land and the roads were better the rest of the way, we arrived in Ann Arbor the next day about 4 p. m. Where the lower town now is, was then all woods, what was called timbered openings.

We forded the river as there was no bridge; I think there had never been a bridge then across the river anywhere. There was a small grist-mill on the river just above where Swathel's mill now stands, and a race running from there to a point below Hooper's brewery, where there was a saw-mill. My first stopping place was at Mr. Allen's hotel, which was a two-story log house, logs hewed, and clapboarded on the outside, and stood where the Gregory House now stands.

The first Sabbath I spent here I attended meeting in a logshouse used as a school-house, which stood where Edward Duffy's store now stands. As there was no minister the sermon was read and a Sabbath-school of about 30 scholars was held immediately afterward. There was no Church organized in the place at that time. The first Church organization was that of the Presbyterian Church, which was effected in August, 1826. I think that of the 16 original members there are still two living; Mrs. Deacon Farrand, of Detroit, and Mrs. Camp, in Grand Rapids, Mich. While making my visit here I made up my mind to make this my home; I returned to Buffalo and remained until October, and then came here and opened the first tailor shop west of Detroit, so that between my visit here in June and my return in the fall the Presbyterian Church was organized. The first Sabbath-school that gathered west of Detroit, was in the summer of 1825, by Miss H. G. Parsons (afterward my wife). She had just come from Connecticut. It was held in the woods about half way between Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti. For seats they put slabs on some logs. She gathered about 12 scholars.

When I came to Ann Arbor there was one house at Dexter. That was the jumping-off place, for a wagon had never been beyond that place. The next winter I saw three men start with a one-horse wagon to go where Jackson now is, to stick the stake for the next county seat west of this. The name of two of these men was Blackman; I do not remember the name of the other. The next year another company started for the next county seat, Marshall, and so emigration has gone on west until it has reached the Pacific Ocean. I put up the first brick house that was built in Ann Arbor, my brother making the brick about two miles east of the town. It was on the corner of Main and Liberty streets, where it still stands; it was built in 1830. I have a good picture of the house, which I will present to the Pioneer Society when I get through with it. Where the University now stands and 40 acres west of it was enclosed for a farm, with a small house on it. But a small part of it was under cultivation. It was owned by Judge Henry Rumsey, brother of Walker Rumsey.

REMINISCENCES OF REV. THOMAS HOLMES.

Among the earliest settlers of Ann Arbor was Asa L. Smith, with his wife and one child. Asa L. Smith was born at Boston, Mass., May 12, 1792.

Sarah Syrena Irons was born Oct. 22, 1798, at Unadilla, N. Y. These were married July 12, 1822, at Gates, N. Y. The fruit of this marriage was seven children, five daughters and two sons, only two of whom will need particular mention in this work. The oldest child, Lettice, was born May 8, 1823, at Rochester, N. Y. The second, E. W. Rumsey, was born November 24, 1825, and died April 5, 1827, at Ann Arbor, Mich.

THE EMIGRATION.

Respecting Mr. Smith's emigration to Ann Arbor, the following facts are well authenticated. On the 8th day of May, 1824, the day Lettice was one year old, he left Rochester, with his family, for Michigan, at that time the objective point of northwestern emigration, not knowing definitely where he would locate. A man, whose legitimate (?) business was smuggling goods from Canada into the States, furnished them means of transportation from Rochester to Buffalo. From Buffalo they made the passage up Lake Erie on a sail boat, whose name is forgotten, that had been down the lake with a cargo of fish. After a few days' delay at Detroit, where they fell in with Messrs. Rumsey and Allen, the founders of the new settlement of Ann Arbor, persuaded by their glowing descriptions of its advantages and prospects, they shipped their goods on a flat-boat up the Huron, and left Detroit on foot, about 2 o'clock, p. m. of the 27th of May. That night was spent at Ten Eyck's. The next day brought them to Ypsilanti, and the third, May 29th, to Ann Arbor.

LIFE IN THE NEW SETTLEMENT.

Previous to the arrival of Mr. Smith, no white woman, except Mrs. Rumsey, had set foot in the new settlement; hence, on their arrival, Mr. Smith's family was immediately taken into Mr. Rumsey's house that Mrs. Smith might do the cooking for several men employed in building a mill. Here they spent about three weeks, within which time several others arrived. The first shelter Mr. Smith constructed for his own accommodation was made by supporting an inverted wagon-box on poles driven into the ground, and suspending blankets to its edge. This rude covering protected it partially from the chilly night air, though they did not shut out the music of the wolves that frequently serenaded the settlers with notes of questionable welcome. This kind of tabernacle soon gave place, as civilization advanced, to a hut constructed of poles and covered with bark peeled from the forest trees; which was, in its turn exchanged, about the first of October, for a log house, which Mr. Smith had erected on Main street, north of court-house square, on the spot now occupied by a small, ancient frame, owned by J. & P. Donnelly. A dispute arising respecting the lot, Mr. Smith sold this house and built another on the south side of Huron street, corner of First, now owned by Weil Brothers. This was the house of the family for several years, and two of his children were born there. In the summer of 1828, as nearly as I have been able to determine, Mr. Smith erected a frame house on the spot now occupied by the shoe shop west of the postoffice, and moved his family into it.

During these early years of enterprise, toil and hardship, Mr. Smith, being a mechanic, built many of the residences of the incoming settlers, frequently selling the one in which he was living and building another for himself. In this way, within seven years, from 1824 to 1831, the family exchanged one home for another 13 times. Among the buildings erected by him was the first school-house, standing on the site now occupied by Zion's Lutheran Church. This school-house was also the place where the first public religious assemblies were convened. It was the cradle of both the Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches that now bless the city. While spending his days thus in building houses, many of his evenings, and some whole nights, were spent in manufacturing bedsteads, which he sold at $2.50.

In 1831, a settlement having been made on the north side of the Huron, it being the prevailing opinion with some that business would tend in that direction, Mr. Smith purchased the lot and erected that portion of the Huron block, now known as the estate of G. Ludholtz, and, while the family occupied one part, opened a store of dry goods and groceries in another, and a cabinet shop above. These comfortable quarters were sold in 1836 to Ingalls and Morgan, and a two-story frame standing a few rods north of the Washtenaw House, and owned, at the present time, by A. Herz, was purchased of John Evarts. This building was used as both store and residence until 1837, when the house standing on the corner of Brown and Travers streets, now owned by Mrs. Irish, was purchased of E. W. Morgan for a residence, where he spent the remainder of his life, and died Feb. 13, 1844.

Four years after the death of Mr. Smith his widow removed to Augusta, Kalamazoo county, where she married Mr. C. McKay, with whom she lived until his decease in 1860, since which time she has resided with her youngest daughter, Martha Ann Hickman, wife of George Hickman, in Battle Creek. Mrs. McKay is now in her 79th year. Her memory of the events of her pioneer life is still perfect, and, though sight and hearing are somewhat impaired, both mental and physical powers are still vigorous and active. She has been able to walk about a quarter of a mile to church nearly every Sabbath during the past winter. Unless some one knows that an earlier pioneer than she is still alive, we claim for her that her advent in Ann Arbor antedates that of any other person now living.

ANN ARBOR'S FIRST BABY.

One of the interesting questions respecting the early history of an American town is: Who was the first child born there? For many years this question, as it regards the town of Ann Arbor, has received no satisfactory answer. Into these lists, confident of an easy victory, we bring the name of Elisha Walker Rumsey Smith, son of Asa L. and Syrena Smith, born Nov. 24, 1825. This distinction, I am informed, has been claimed for Mr. John L. Nowland, but Mr. Nowland was born, as I learned from his own lips, June 13, 1826, and in such a case the family record must decide. Respecting the claim that Mrs. Rumsey had a son "born in the early part of the year 1824, and named in honor of Territorial Governor Lewis Cass Rumsey," as is stated in Evarts & Stewart's Historical Atlas of Washtenaw county, I have only to say that it is unfortunate that no family record can be found of such an event, that might lift it from the uncertainty of mere rumor by establishing for it a definite date. Mrs. McKay has no recollection of it, though she does remember that Mrs. Rumsey had a son a short time subsequent to the birth of her own. Moreover, this son of Mrs. Smith was named after Mr. Rumsey by his request, and he promised him also a village lot, as a token of the distinction that he was the first child born in the town. These facts have never been brought forward before, because the mother of the favored boy was never aware until about a year ago that any question respecting this priority of birth had ever been raised. When informed of the fact of such a dispute, she made the above statements without hesitation or reserve; and we have no doubt of their reliability.

THAT LITTLE GIRL.

It would not be fitting to close this paper without some allusion to the little one-year-old girl he brought in his arms from Detroit on foot over the Pottawatomie trail. For some time after their arrival, she was the only child, "the bright particular star," of the settlement. The incidents of her childhood, though full of interest to her and appropriate in the family circle, must, of course, be omitted on an occasion like this. One, at least, must suffice. Being one day, with other children, on Hiscock's hill gathering strawberries, some wolves were seen approaching them, from which they escaped only by the nimbleness of their feet, to which their fright seemed to contribute not a little. The graver events of later years that served to fit her for a field of great usefulness and honor, and make her worthy to-day of the University City of the State, were, briefly, the following: Spurred on by a lofty and noble ambition, at a time when the ability of woman to cope with men in classic strife was doubted, and under circumstances superlatively adverse and discouraging, in 1847 she took the degree of Bachelor of Arts from Oberlin College, Ohio; and, in 1850, the second degree, Master of Arts, from the same institution. In 1856, having taught Latin one year with masterly success in the preparatory department of Antioch College, Ohio, she joined her husband (the writer of this paper, to whom she was married in 1847) in Europe, from which foreign tour she did not return until 1861, having spent five years and a half in the pursuit of modern languages, painting, history, etc., under circumstances advantageous and encouraging. After her return, her eminent qualifications would not permit her to remain long simply a pastor's wife; and, in 1865, after much persuasion, she was induced to take the professorship of modern languages in the Union Christian College, a new institution, founded six years before, in Indiana. The next year, means for endowing professorships being scarce, by her own request, Latin was added to her department, and for nine years she taught from five to seven hours a day, with such dignity, efficiency, and success as to place her among the best teachers in this country. I have never seen her surpassed in the professor's chair.

OLD OKEMOS.

In May, 1859, Old Okemos, nephew of Pontiac, the Chief of the Pottawatomies, passed to the Indian heaven. He is remembered by the early settlers of Ann Arbor by his regular visits to town, his fine horsemanship, and the long train of squaws and ponies in single file following at his horse's tail, laden with the fruits of the chase, and the endless mocook of Indian sugar, ready for a trade for all sorts of traps and edibles. Even the females of the early settlers were quite willing to allow the old Chief, with his numerous progeny, a quiet smoke by the fireside, or a wabunk upon the kitchen floor, as an offset for the convenience of this traveling market of suceasee and pokamin (venison and cranberries), the staple article of his trade, for the Chief was merchant, as well as the governor, judge, jury, and general depository of the secrets of his tribe.

Old Okemos, though terrible in battle—as his cloven skull and numerous scars are proof positive that he had seen service—was gentle as a child when off duty. He made himself extremely interesting to the Chomokoman papooses who always gathered around him, and lost no opportunity of initiating them into the mysteries of the pure aboriginal language.

The evidences of aboriginal universal knowledge are extremely rare, because such knowledge is deemed among them a tribal secret which is felony to disclose. These evidences are, however, much more numerous than the public are aware of, from the fact that American archæologists have grouped the various evidences of Indian skill, labor, or ingenuity, and upon these evidences have founded the visionary theory that the American continent was inhabited by a semi-civilized race, long since extinct.

Old Okemos was never known to forfeit his word or betray his friends but once, and then only when gratitude for numerous favors had induced him to betray his tribal secrets.

In the fall of 1827, Brown & Co. established at Ann Arbor a store for the sale of general merchandise. Old Okemos, after having bestowed upon the senior Brown the Indian christening of Tichisquie (Long-legs) became a regular customer. By virtue of being the principal trader, the Chief received numerous presents, and was allowed to spread his blanket and pass the night upon the store floor, while N. I. Brown, the clerk, slept near by. Upon one of these occasions, when the village had retired to rest, Okemos called up young Brown and informed him that he had a great secret to tell him. Holding to the light a silver half dollar, and pointing to the northwest, he proceeded to state that away in that direction, six days' travel, there was plenty of silver in the earth. Brown listened to him and agreed, upon his next visit, to purchase of him a horse and accompany him to the place of silver in the earth. Some two weeks after, Okemos came down alone, leading an extra horse. Necessary preparations were made during the night, and at day-light, next morning, Brown with blankets and provisions, and the Chief with an extra keg of fire-water, were on their way to the silver mine.

Taking their route to the northwest, toward the copper region, where silver has been found in small quantities, nothing of interest occurred until the third day, when the old Chief became moody and cross. Just before sunset he seemed to awake from a deep reflection—making the woods ring with his yells, and putting his horse to the top of his speed, was soon out of sight. Brown pursued until night, when dismounting, leading his horse and keeping the trail with his feet, he kept on his course. Late in the evening he came upon an Indian camp with Okemos in the center, and all of them intoxicated. Brown passed on a short distance, and, holding his horse by the bridle, passed the night. Going to the camp in the morning, he found the Indians in a sulky mood taunting Okemos with his treachery, and calling him a bad Indian. The old Chief, with numerous threats and flourishes with his scalping knife, ordered the "papoose" to wachee wigwadm.

Brown, aware that the game was up, mounted his horse and made a long reach for home. At night, after holding his horse in the grass for a feed, he made him fast to a sapling, and testing the quality of his salt provisions, and rolling himself in his blanket, was soon in a sound sleep. Worn down with his long ride and vigils of the previous night, he did not wake the next morning until the sun was high in the heavens, when his horse, unused to be kept from the herd, had broken his fastenings and left. A slight meal of raw pork and crackers answered Brown's purpose, as he figured on his position—two days out from any settlement and without a horse. There was, however, no time to be lost. Throwing his provisions over one shoulder and his blanket over the other, he took his horse's track and started in search. A few hours of eager pursuit brought him up with the horse, which he succeeded in capturing. Finding it impossible to follow, on horseback, his back trail, he gave up the attempt and was soon lost in the woods, but traveled at the top of his horse's speed, not knowing whether he was in the right direction or not.

In the early settlement of Ann Arbor, widow Stratton, with her family, occupied the farm one mile south of the city. Her second son, Samuel Stratton, then some 20 years of age, was subject to occasional fits of insanity. When the fit was upon him, he would take to the woods, and, subsisting only on berries and roots, in one or two weeks starve it out and return entirely sane.

At the time of young Brown's hunt for the silver mine, Stratton had been absent about two weeks, his friends supposing he had wandered off a great distance and probably starved. Stratton says that in the afternoon he saw Brown riding in an opening, in a circle, at full speed, and knowing, from his actions, he was lost, took his station behind a tree to give him a good scare; so, as the horse came round, he broke out after him, yelling a million murders. He then left the circle and made a straight break for the woods. The pony, equally frightened with the rider, ran into a swamp, and sinking down, stuck fast. Brown gave it up; there was the devil, for he had seen him. Turning in his saddle to take a fair look, Stratton, nude as he was born, and out-grimacing the arch-fiend of evil, was standing at his horse's tail, and with a hoarse laugh roared out: "Brown, don't you know me?"

Stratton says, that as soon as Brown was able to speak, he quietly remarked:

"Look here, Mister, do you know the way out of these woods?"

"Of course," replied Stratton.

"Well, then," said Brown, "do you just take me home, and you shall have the best suit of clothes in the store."

"Done," said Stratton. "How's the provisions?"

Stratton swept the pile, at least four pounds of pork and crackers to match, and throwing Brown's blanket over his shoulders, they took a bee-line for home. Coming to a settlement the next day, Stratton staid out, holding Brown's horse, while Brown went in, and after purchasing a suit of half worn clothes, ordered dinner for four.

"Why, do you think I'm so stingy?" said the old lady.

"Never mind," said Brown, "set on the victuals."

Afterward, when the old lady was looking on and observing the destruction of her winter stores, she exclaimed, "I shall charge for four!"

Finishing their meal they arrived in town late in the evening. Brown resumed the duties of his clerkship, and Stratton appeared the best dressed man in the streets.

Brown never abandoned his ideal silver mine, but sought it afterward above the surface. A few years after, he bought several of the most valuable locations in the Grand river valley, including the grindstone ledge in Eaton county, and the first stone coal discovered in the State; also a valuable tract of fine timber with water power upon Buck creek, Kent county, upon which he immediately erected mills, and ran the first raft of lumber on Grand river, thus commencing the Michigan and Chicago lumber trade, which has since increased to hundreds of millions.

Okemos, ashamed of his perfidy never after recognized acquaintance, or entered the store of Brown & Co., but took his netos and bartered his furs at the rival store of General Clark.

FIRST CELEBRATION OF INDEPENDENCE DAY.

Wherever he may be, on land or sea, surrounded by every evidence of civilization, home and friends, in the deserts or among the forests of the far West, every American citizen remembers the birthday of his country and desires to celebrate it in a becoming manner. In a letter by Ezra Maynard, of Ann Arbor, to his son William, of Whitesboro, N. Y., he says: "On Monday, July 4, 1825, we are going to celebrate the first Independence day in Ann Arbor. It is to be celebrated in grand style, and I am to take the lead in the public exercises. Four of your sisters are making preparations for a grand ball at the Washtenaw Hotel. John and the younger girls are as much engaged to see what will be done as any of them. I am afraid your poor old mother will be left alone in the neighborhood as M—— is president of the singing club and must be there of course." The mother adds a word a day later: "The family returned all tired out—had fine times; everything conducted in Massachusetts and New York style. Procession, prayer, reading the declaration, oration and elegant dinner; upward of a hundred people sat down to eat," etc. The subjoined item was written by Ezra Maynard: "The 50th anniversary of Independence was celebrated in as solemn and becoming a manner as I ever saw it anywhere. More than 300 dined at John Allen's. Exercises on the grounds, prayer by Dr. Maynard (himself), Declaration of Independence by Col. James Allen, oration by Samuel Dexter, Esq., together with a band of music."

SEMI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

On the 24th day of February, 1875, a celebration in honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the settlement of Ann Arbor took place in that city. Fifty years previous two hardy pioneers, John Allen and Walter Rumsey, pierced the trackless wilderness which lay between the country bordering the Huron river and the civilization of the great lakes, and pitched their tents at the very intersection of Huron and First streets in what is now the city of Ann Arbor—although not the first settlement in Washtenaw county—the country in the immediate vicinity of Ypsilanti having been settled over a year before by Major Woodruff, John Bryant, R. M. Stitts and others. These were the primitive settlers of the county seat. They soon after erected the customary log cabins, and with their families were in possession when the next settlers arrived.

In commemoration of this event, at the invitation of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw County, the gray-haired men and women, who in a great measure survey life through the loop-holes of the past, with many representatives of generations later, assembled in the parlors of the Methodist church.

Among the most interesting features of the occasion was quite a large collection of articles of various use which had been brought in by some of those in attendance, which are already regarded as curiosities, and ere long will be looked upon as veritable antiquities.

In the rear of one of the rooms was noticed a square-shaped, odd-looking instrument, which, on inquiry, was said to be a piano, though it possesses few, if any, features common to these instruments now-a-days. It was brought to Ann Arbor in May, 1827; John Anderson conveyed it from Detroit by an ox team. The teamster was somewhat fearful as to the contents of his box, which "thundered so," but was finally prevailed upon to assist in unloading it. It was first set up in the house of Harvey Austin, and is still in the possession of a citizen of Ann Arbor—Mrs. C. A. Chapin, daughter of Hon. James Kingsley.

The Tawas and Pottawatomie Indians frequently danced to its music, and on one occasion one of the chiefs was strenuous in his efforts to exchange half a dozen ponies for the instrument and its fair performer. It was manufactured in New York by John Kearsing & Son, and purchased for $75. It has only five octaves, and is the first instrument of the kind brought west of Detroit.

Among the pioneers present who experienced the hardships as well as joys of the first few years which followed the settlement of the county seat was Calvin Chipman. He came here in 1824 and assisted in the raising of the first log house, which event happened in June of that same year.

Mr. Chipman called the vote that gave the city its present name under the following circumstances: Mr. Rumsey, who then lived in a log house near the present site of the Episcopal church, had built an arbor close by. Mrs. Rumsey, whose name was Ann, remarked one day to her husband in answer to his observation, "What a beautiful arbor we have! why not call it Ann's arbor?" Mr. Chipman, who was present, in the usual manner of deliberative assemblies put the question to vote, and it was unanimously carried.

INCORPORATION OF THE VILLAGE.

On the 23d day of April, 1833, an act for the incorporation of the village was passed by the Legislative Council, and approved by the Governor of the Territory. This act made the corporate limits to be all that part of the township of Ann Arbor comprised within the limits of the village plat, laid out and recorded by the proprietors, John Allen and Elisha W. Rumsey. Under this act the first election was held on the 7th day of July, 1834, at the inn of Chaucey S. Goodrich, for the purpose of electing a president, recorder and six trustees. Nathan Thayer and Anson Brown were chosen Judges of Election, and Edward Clark, Clerk. At the election 55 votes were cast.

The first meeting of the council was held July 8, 1834, at which the President, John Allen, and David Page, Edward Mundy, Chaucey S. Goodrich, Anson Brown, E. W. Morgan and Chandler Carter, Trustees, were present. After casting lots for the classes as provided in the fourth section of the act to incorporate, the council proceeded to pass an act for the election of a treasurer, marshal and two assessors annually.

At the second meeting of the council, held Aug. 1, 1834, it was voted the sum of $300 should be raised to meet the expenses of the village for the coming year, $200 of which should be raised on the west side of the Huron river, and $100 on the east.

J. E. Field, who was elected to the office of recorder, but who had not resided in the village or Territory of Michigan one year, resigned the office, and Charles Thayer was elected by the council to fill the vacancy.

The council next turned its attention to the passage of ordinances to prevent swine from running at large, relative to dogs, shooting in the village limits, running horses, selling liquor, exhibiting cattle, hogs and other animals, prohibiting carelessness with fire, and other weighty matters that receive the attention of all law-making power.

For some two or three years, more or less, business demanded the attention of the council, and meetings were of frequent occurrence. After the year 1836, they were held less regularly. On the 30th day of July, 1840, a meeting was held at which several bills were allowed. Among others, one allowing Roswell Parsons one dollar per year "for ringing the bell in the Presbyterian meeting-house," for the ensuing year. No record is made on the recorder's books of the purpose for which this bell was rung, but "old settlers" say it was rung at 12 o'clock, noon, and at nine o'clock, P. M., the last hour being considered the orthodox bedtime. The next record reads as follows:

The annual elections for village officers were duly notified for the years 1841 and 1842, according to law, and there were not present each time officers of the Board sufficient to form a quorum, and the elections went by default.

July 10, 1842.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

There being no elections held these years named, the officers elected in 1840 held their offices over two years, the next election being on the 3d day of July, 1843, at which time a full Board of Trustees and all other officers were elected.

In 1846 the village charter was amended so the elections should be held in May instead of July each year. In addition to the officers heretofore elected were added three street commissioners, two collectors and an attorney, who were each to be elected at the same time and place as the other officers. Under this act the business of the village was transacted until the spring of 1851, when a city charter was adopted by the citizens of the village. The last meeting of the village Common Council was held Dec. 5, 1850. The boundaries of the village, under the amended act of 1846, were enlarged and were as follows: "So much of that tract of country situated in the township of Ann Arbor, in the county of Washtenaw, known as the south half of sec. 20, the southwest one-quarter of sec. 21, the west half of sec. 28, and sec. 29, lying south of the railroad, except that part of sec. 28 belonging to Dwight Kellogg, be, and the same is, hereby constituted a town, corporate by the name of the village of Ann Arbor."

VILLAGE OFFICERS.

From the organization of the village to the repeal of its charter, officers were annually elected with the exception of the years 1841 and 1842, when the elections were permitted to go by default. The following named persons served in the offices and years mentioned:

CITY GOVERNMENT.

After the varying experiences of precinct and village governments, the rapid growth of Ann Arbor required for its proper development a full and complete city government with all its powers and capabilities; accordingly the village charter was repealed by the Legislature of the State in 1851, and during the same session an act was passed and approved April 4, 1851, incorporating the city of Ann Arbor. The following is the first section of the act:

"The people of the State of Michigan enact: That so much of the township of Ann Arbor, in the county of Washtenaw, as is included in the following limits, to-wit: All of section 29, and all of those portions of the south half of section 20, the southwest quarter of section 21, and the west half of section 28, which lies southerly and westerly of the north bank of the Huron river, be, and the same is, hereby set off from said township and declared to be a city by the name of the city of Ann Arbor."

By this charter the city was divided into four wards, with boundaries as follows: First ward, all that portion of the city lying south of Huron street; Second ward, all that portion lying south of Huron and west of Main street; Third ward, all that portion lying north of Huron and west of Fourth street; Fourth ward, all that portion lying north of Huron and east of Fourth street.

The foregoing boundaries of the wards and the limits of the city remained unchanged until 1861, when the charter was amended so as to admit much other territory in the corporate limits. Section 1 of the amended charter read as follows: "That so much of the township of Ann Arbor as is included in the following limits (including the present city of Ann Arbor), to-wit: The south three-fourths of section 20; the south three-fourths of the west three-fourths of section 21; the west three-fourths of section 28; entire section 29; the north half of section 32, and the west three-fourths of the north half of section 33, in township 2 south, of range 6 east; and also so much of the east half of the southeast quarter of section 21, and of the east half of the northeast quarter of section 28, as lies west of the easterly bank of the Huron river, and north of the south line of the Territorial road crossing said river on or near the line between said sections, be, and the same is, hereby set off from said township, and declared to be a city by the name of the city of Ann Arbor."

By this act the city was divided up into five wards. The first ward comprised all that portion of the city lying south of Huron street and east of Fourth street. The second ward, all south of Huron and west of Fourth streets. The third ward, all north of Huron street and south of River Huron, and west of Fourth street. The fourth ward, all north of Huron street and south of River Huron, and east of Fourth street. The fifth ward, all northeast of the River Huron. The charter permitted the common council to alter the boundaries of the wards if by them thought expedient for the public good.

Again, in 1867, the charter was amended, the limits of the city remaining the same, but the city was divided into six wards. The first ward was to embrace all that portion of the city lying south of Huron street, east of Main street and the Ann Arbor and Lodi plank road, and west of State street, and the Pittsfield road, or State street as continued. The second ward, all south of Huron street and west of Main street and the Ann Arbor and Lodi plank road. The third ward, all north of Huron street and south of the River Huron, and west of Fourth street, extending to the river. The fourth ward, all north of Huron street, and of the line of Huron street as extended to the city limits, and south of the river and east of Fourth street. The fifth ward, all northeast of the river. The sixth ward, all south of Huron street as extended east of city limits, and east of State street and the Pittsfield road, or State street as extended.

From what we can learn of the city government, it appears to have been constantly growing in the confidence and respect of the public, and its offices have generally been filled with honorable gentlemen.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT AT ANN ARBOR.

When the thrilling news flashed over the wires, on that eventful morning of April 12, 1861, that the South had directed its soldier chivalry to fire on that feeble band of United States soldiers stationed at Fort Sumter; when, with beating hearts and flashing eye, the loyal people awaited the command of their brave and noble President to give the order to crush out and utterly exterminate this rebellious uprising, none were more patriotic and ready to uphold the standard of a free Republic than the brave citizens of the Fifth ward; and when Abraham Lincoln issued that memorable call for 75,000 men for a three-months service, out of the 140 voters in the Fifth ward, 75 nobly responded and shouldered the musket, leaving wife, mother, home, and all, with a hasty kiss, and a hearty "God bless you," and on to the Southern battle-fields, where many, very many, laid down their precious lives in grim defense of their country's honor. Some were buried on the field where the fatal minie-ball had pierced and made ghastly the quivering flesh; others were left to lie where they fell; others were tenderly placed in rude pine boxes, and forwarded to their friends in the loyal North. Of this latter number, some 25 peacefully and calmly await the resurrection day in the Fifth Ward cemetery.

In 1870, the mothers, wives, sisters, and numerous friends of these loyal dead, thought it would be but a feeble tribute on their part to contribute something to keep forever in remembrance the manly and heroic deeds that had been performed through that long and memorable conflict. A Ladies' Decorative Society was therefore formed, and on May 30 of each succeeding year, the society scattered beautiful flowers and fresh garlands over the graves of their deceased friends. Month after month rolled by, and by different methods a considerable sum of money was collected by those noble women, until enough was secured to erect a suitable monument to the fallen heroes. The monument was purchased, and on May 30, 1874, was unveiled to the view of the large assemblage in attendance. Appropriate ceremonies were held, and all dispersed to their homes, feeling that the Ladies' Decorative Society deserved the thanks of the whole people for their generous and benevolent labors in the cause of Freedom. The monument is of Amherst sandstone, composed of eight divisions, and weighs something more than six tons, is 21 feet in height, symmetrically proportioned, beautifully sculptured, and surmounted by the fitting emblem of the country—an American Eagle. The north side bears the inscriptions:—“Erected by subscription through the efforts of the Ladies’ Decorative Society,” and “Whole number of enlistments from this ward during the war, 75.” On the west side are tastefully carved a shield, two battle flags draping the national escutcheon, field cannon with balls, an olive wreath, and the following inscription:

“ Brave soldier, rest; your strife is o’er,
And you have gained a sweet release;
The bugle’s blast, the cannon’s roar,
No more shall break your spirit’s peace.”

On the east side are inscribed the words, “In memory of the Fifth-ward soldiers, who fought for the Union.” The base of the monument bears the names of the dead; a few among the many thousand of like glorious names that deserve to be immortal.

RELIGIOUS.

We are glad to be able to present histories of the various Churches in the city so full and complete. It is evident that the founders and early residents of Ann Arbor left no effort untried to affect favorably the morals of this community. From their little means, needed so much to supply daily wants and make improvements, they freely gave toward building and supporting Churches. They were inspired with zeal in the cause of the master, were aided by the most active and self-denying ministry, and could see a promise of better days when the town should become more fully peopled with families of wealth and culture. All denominations were equally active, and at this time we see the good results of the hard labors of the early Christians.

The first sermon preached in Ann Arbor by a regularly ordained minister of the gospel, was in the summer of 1825, by Rev. Moses Clark, a Baptist minister, who had a short time previous located in the neighborhood. The Methodist brethren came next, followed by the Presbyterians, the latter of whom succeeded in first organizing a Church.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This Church was organized Aug. 26, 1826. Rev. Noah M. Wells, then a minister residing at Detroit, officiated. Eighteen persons united in the organization, whose names are as follows: Israel Branch, Mercy Branch, Simeon Mills, Clarissa Mills, Bethuel Farrand, Deborah Farrand, Richard Lord, Roswell Parsons, Agnes Parsons, Harriet Parsons, James Allen, Elizabeth Allen, Mrs.

Comstock, A. Hill

Monroe, Temperance Roberts, Ann Isabella Allen, Phebe Whitmore and Mrs. Fanny Camp. All united by letter, except Mrs. Camp, who joined on profession, and was the first person baptized in Ann Arbor. More than 50 years have since passed, and as a result of those years of labor the congregation has grown to be large and prosperous, and has a Sunday-school and Bible class, a mission Sunday-school, a large and active Young People's Association, and an excellent church edifice that will comfortably seat over 1,000 people, erected in 1862 at a cost of $35,000. It is but proper special mention should be made of Israel Branch, who held the offices of elder and deacon and also served as sexton of the church. Elder Branch was a true representative of the pioneer Christian, and faithfully discharged every duty devolving upon him. He loved doctrinal preaching and was emphatically the theologian of the Church on its first organization, especially on the doctrine of election. Bethuel Farrand was another worthy of notice. He was an enterprising business man, was possessed of a noble character, and was an earnest laborer in the cause of Christ. He served as an elder for a period of 21 years, until removed by death. In addition to those named the following have served as elders since the organization of the Church: Ezra Carpenter, Gideon Wilcoxson, Charles Mosely, Lorrin Mills, Joshua M. Lindsey, L. W. Guiteau, Reuben Hall, Thomas Mosely, John Taylor, Thomas M. Ladd, Roswell Parsons, B. King, John Stetson, Robert Purdy, Solomon Mann, William C. Voorhees, H. P. Van Cleave, William R. Martin, John M. Chase, D. Leonard Wood, Daniel E. Wines, Zebedee Waldron, A. H. Hunt, DeVolson Wood, George M. Henion, William E. Anderson, John Moore, R. W. Ellis, W. H. Jackson, Warren Hamilton.

The following have served as deacons: Israel Branch, Thomas Mosely, Roswell Parsons, J. D. Williams, George M. Henion, David B. Webster, Charles G. Clark, George L. Hull, Warren Hamilton and Henry T. Purfield.

The Presbyterian Church was organized in a log school-house that stood on the northwest corner of Main and Ann streets, where services were held for a time, and then changed to the ball room of a tavern on the corner of Main and Huron streets. Another change was soon made to an unfinished room of an old frame building known as Cook's Hotel. From here the congregation moved to a frame school-house on the corner of Washington and Fifth streets. Here they worshiped until a frame church was erected in 1829 on the site of the present church edifice. It was originally 25x35 feet, with an uncovered belfry at the front, containing a small bell. No paint was used on the inside or outside of the building, but it had one coat of rough plastering. An addition to the building of about 20 feet was afterward added to supply the demand for more seats. This was the first Protestant church building erected west of Detroit in the Territory of Michigan. The first Synod of Michigan was organized in this church about the year 1834. The old frame building was abandoned when a new church edifice was erected, in 1837, farther west on Huron street. This building was also a frame and was used until the present building was ready for use. The bell of the first church was transferred to the belfry of the court-house, where for many years its musical clatter rang out, calling the people to gatherings of various kinds.

Previous to 1832, the Church had no regular pastor, but Rev. William Page and Rev. Ira Pettibone preached as stated supplies. Mr. Page came in 1826 and remained about four years, and was followed by Mr. Pettibone, who remained one. Rev. John Beach was the first settled pastor of the Church and presided at its session for the first time, Oct. 5, 1831. Mr. Beach remained until 1838, during which time there were several interesting revivals. After his retirement the Church was without a pastor for several years, but was supplied by Revs. E. T. Richards, E. E. Gregory, J. P. Cleveland and Ira M. Wead. The second regular pastor was Rev. William S. Curtis, D. D., who was installed Oct. 26, 1843, and continued to serve until April 27, 1855. He was one of the ablest ministers in the State, and excelled as a logician. During the pastorate of Mr. Curtis the Congregational Church was formed, some 46 members of this Church withdrawing to enter that organization. After the resignation of Mr. Curtis the Church was again without a pastor until Oct. 29, 1857, when Rev. Lucius D. Chapin was installed. He remained until 1863, when he resigned and the Church was supplied for three years by Revs. W. W. Wetmore and David Torrey. On the 7th of November, 1867, Rev. William J. Erdman was installed as pastor. He remained until March, 1870. For some 14 months the Church remained without a pastor and was supplied by Revs. Arthur Smith, W. W. Wetmore and Dr. B. F. Cocker of the Methodist Episcopal Church. On the 18th day of October, 1871, Rev. Samuel W. Duffield was installed pastor, and served three years. After Mr. Duffield resigned the Church was supplied by Dr. Cocker until March, 1875, when Rev. F. T. Brown arrived. He was called to the pastorate by a vote of the congregation Oct. 21, 1875. Mr. Brown served five years, and was succeeded October, 1880, by Rev. Richard H. Steele, D. D.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

Some time in the month of November, 1825, Rev. John A. Baughman visited Ann Arbor and preached a sermon in the house of John Allen, it being the first discourse by a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. After the visit of Mr. Baughman, reading meetings were established in the village as a substitute for preaching until 1826, when Rev. William Simmons visited the place and preached for the people. No class was formed until 1827, when Rev. Z. H. Coston directed Mr. Baughman to again visit Ann Arbor, and if practicable, organize a society and supply them with preaching. On the 29th day of July, 1827, a society, consisting of Eber White, Harvey Kinney, Hannah B. Brown, Rebecca G. Brown and Calvin Smith was organized. Ann Arbor was made an appointment in the Monroe circuit for the first half of the next year, beginning in September, 1827, and George W. Walker was the preacher, but for the last half of the year it was included in the Detroit circuit, John James being the preacher. In 1828 a new circuit was organized called Huron, which included Ann Arbor, and it so continued for one year. Not one of the original members of this society now remain here. He resided on a farm a little west of the city and occupied the same until his death, which occurred but recently. Harvey Kinney was a young man in the family of Mr. Brown and did not long remain here. Hannah B. Brown, a young lady of deep and earnest piety, of a strong and well-cultivated mind, in a little over a year united her fortunes and labors with Rev. John Jones, and soon after her marriage removed to Ohio. Rebecca G. Brown was a young lady of much more than ordinary intellectual ability. She was engaged in marriage with Rev. L. D. Whitney, but before the nuptials were celebrated, she was stricken down by the hand of death. She died May 8, 1834.

The first Methodist prayer meeting was held soon after the organization of the Church in 1827. The first conversion was in February, 1828—Miss Sarah J. Brown, a sister of the two ladies already mentioned.

The circuit was so arranged, in 1827, as to supply preaching here once in two weeks on the Sabbath, and continued so until 1833, when it was made into a half station. A part of the time it was supplied with one and a part of the time with two preachers, and it was so arranged that one of them should be in the village every Sabbath. This arrangement continued for two years, when it was made a full station. At the conference in 1830 the name was changed and Ann Arbor appears on the list of appointments for the first time. In 1835 it was made the head of a district and Rev. Henry Coleclazer was appointed in charge of it.

Various seasons of revival have been enjoyed from time to time, from which much good has resulted. But, perhaps, at no time has there been so extensive a work, in proportion to the population, and productive of so much good, as the one which occurred in 1837-'8, beginning in December, 1837, and running on through the year. One hundred and eighteen in all united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Among the number were Judson D. Collins, who afterward became the first missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church to China, Isaac F. Collins, afterward a member of the Kansas Conference, now deceased, and Walter D. Collins, who became a successful missionary among the Indians and in Texas. These three brothers united with the Church in Ann Arbor in the month of March, 1838, and have since died in the faith.

The building of a church was found to be a desideratum for several years, but was not undertaken until the spring of 1837, under the labors of Rev. Peter Sharp. The basement was ready for use in November, 1837, and its occupancy was followed by the revival before mentioned. The body of the church was not finished until the summer of 1839, under the labors of Rev. Elijah Crane. This year the Michigan Conference held its session here for the first time. The dedication services were held on the first day of the session. The sermon was preached by Rev. Jonathan A. Chaplin. Bishop Soule preached a most eloquent and powerful sermon on Sabbath morning. William L. Harris, now Bishop, was admitted into full connection and ordained deacon at this conference, and so was Loronzo Davis, the second Michigan convert who had entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Ann Arbor was made a station in 1835, and Thomas Wiley was appointed to it. His health was not very firm at the time, but soon began to decline, and he died on the 4th of April, 1836. The number of members returned this year was 136.

The following named men served as pastors from the organization of the society up to the present time: 1830—Rev. Leonard B. Gurly;* 1831—Henry Colclazer, E. H. Pilcher; 1832—E. H. Pilcher, E. S. Gavitt; 1833—Wm. M. Sullivan,* L. D. Whitney;* 1834—H. Colclazer, A. B. Elliott; 1835—H. Colclazer, H. Gearing, Thomas Wiley (in fall), died in the village in spring of 1836; 1836—Peter Sharp; 1837—E. H. Pilcher; 1838—Elijah Crane;* 1839—Elijah Crane (Mr. Crane's health failing during the year, Rev. Mr. Stoddard* was appointed by the Presiding Elder to fill out the year); 1840—Jonathan Hudson*; 1841—John A. Baughman*; 1842—Andrew M. Fitch; 1843—Elliott M. Crippen; 1844-'45—Samuel D. Simonds; 1846—Edward McClure; 1847-'48—Resin Sapp;* 1849-'50—Geo. Smith;* 1851—Jonathan Blanchard;* 1852—Jonathan Blanchard and D. D. Whedon; 1853-'54—Thomas C. Gardner; 1855-'56—S. Reed; 1857-'58—Elisha H. Pilcher; 1859—William H. Perrine; 1860-'61—F. A. Blades; 1862-'64—B. F. Cocker; 1865-'67—H. S. White; 1868—B. F. Cocker; 1869-'71—L. R. Fisk; 1872-'74—Wm. H. Shier; 1875—Isaac N. Elwood; 1876-'78—R. B. Pope; 1879-'80—John Alabaster.

The church is situated on the corner of State and Washington streets. The whole length of the building is 128 feet and eight inches; the extreme width 81 feet; the height of the main tower, 181 feet; the height of the small front tower, 100 feet; and of the rear tower 90 feet. The audience room is 62x90 feet, with a height of walls 26 feet, and to the apex or arch of the ceiling 41 feet. The lecture room is 38x70 feet. There is also a suit of rooms for general class-meeting, and a kitchen suitably furnished for festival occasions and the socials of the society. The floor of the main audience room is nicely carpeted. The entire cost of the building was about $65,000.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF ANN ARBOR.

The earliest recorded movement toward an organization in this county is found in the records of the Baptist Church in Farmington, by whose appointment a covenant meeting was held in Ann Arbor in February, 1827; the meeting was probably held at the log house of Rev. Moses Clark, the first settler on what is now the Botsford farm, on the north Bank of the Huron river, three and a half miles below the city of Ann Arbor. At this meeting Phebe Hiscock was received to membership in the Farmington Church, Elder Clark being the pastor there, though living here. It was then also voted by the Farmington Church to hold covenant meetings in Ann Arbor regularly from that time, and it is not known that this peculiar meeting of the Baptists has ever failed of observance here since that date.

In May, 1828, the Farmington Church dismissed, at their request, and for the purpose of forming a Church in Ann Arbor, Rev. Moses Clark and family, with some others who lived in this vicinity. June 10 ensuing the same Church appointed a delegation to sit in council for the recognition of the organization in Ann Arbor as a distinct Church. The council, embracing delegates from others of the five Churches then existing in the Territory (Pontiac, Stony Creek, Troy, Farmington and Detroit), performed the recognition, on a date unknown to the writer, in June, 1828. The names of the constituent members, so far as the Farmington record shows them, were: Rev. Moses Clark, pastor, Lucy and Sally Clark, Phebe Hiscock Benjamin Slocum, Elizabeth and Nancy Brown, Charles Stewart.

The building in which the Church was constituted was, we suppose, Elder Clark's house, or, as some think, his frame barn, the remains of which still stand on the farm. For some reason it was called the Ypsilanti Church for the first three or four years, after which its regular meetings came to be held in Ann Arbor village, and the present name was assumed.

It is a serious loss that no Church records of the body for the first 10 years of its history can be found. From its annual reports to the Michigan Association and from the recollections of members the principal facts are derived.

In 1831 or '32 the meetings came to be regularly held in the school-house on the jail lot, now the property bounded by Fourth, Fifth, and Liberty streets. The next place of meeting was in Brown's block, in Lower Town. And in 1835 the first house of worship was built, which, with enlargements, is now the mission property, in Lower Town, of the M. E. Church.

In June, 1849, the brick house of worship on Catherine street was dedicated. A building 64 feet by 44 in size, well finished and furnished. The interior arrangement was remodeled in 1856, and the rear addition was put on in 1868.

The present stone edifice on Huron street was commenced in September, 1879, and its regular occupancy dates from the autumn of 1881. It is in dimensions 100 feet extreme length, and 81 in width at the transept. Its seating capacity is about 750, and its cost as furnished, $25,000.

The times of greatest increase in the membership of the Church appear to have been in 1838, 1844-'45, 1849-'51, 1865, 1869 and 1871. Of periods of interest before there is no record.

Of the officers of the Church, Daniel B. Brown is the senior. On the day of his baptism in August, 1832, when the Church assumed Ann Arbor as its location and name, he was chosen deacon, and has held the office continuously until the present time. Deacon Samuel Crossman has also served from near the first of his residence here, which commenced in 1855. With them are now associated Deacons A. W. Britton and J. B. Cady.

The Sunday-school superintendent is J. Montgomery, and its membership 200. The ministers who have served the Church are: Rev. Moses Clark must have been the second ordained Baptist minister who located in Michigan, taking up his farm on the Huron in April, 1825. It is thought by those who were then here, that he conducted the first religious meeting held in Ann Arbor. He is well reported of, but of the facts of his life we are mostly ignorant. He is reported as pastor from 1828 to 1831, and as a minister of the Church for a longer time.

Rev. Thomas W. Merrill, in November, 1829, settled in this village, starting the first select and classical school which was held here, and continuing it, with his brother, Moses Merrill, until the next summer, when, failing to obtain the charter sought, they removed to Kalamazoo county, where Thomas W. led in establishing what became Kalamazoo College.

Rev. J. S. Twiss, from Sennett, N. Y., settled in Ann Arbor in the autumn of 1830, and was the pastor of the Church through the six years ending in the spring of 1837. He was a preacher of much strength and vivacity, and joining with these gifts the highest moral integrity, eminent practical religion, and intelligent zeal in all good causes, he filled an important place in the growth of the new community, and of his denomination in the State. Some personal eccentricities increased rather than impaired his useful influences, and made him to be held in ever fresh remembrance. He died in 1857 at Union City, where his widow still resides.

Rev. Harvy Miller, an ardent and gifted young student from Hamilton, N. Y., was the next pastor. Commencing in 1837, he labored a year and a half, deeply interesting the people, but was then called to take the place vacated by his father, a pastor in Meriden, Canada, where he spent a life of leading usefulness.

Rev. W. L. Brown followed in a pastorate of some 15 months.

Rev. A. A. Guernsey succeeded in filling the office from August, 1839, to March, 1841.

Rev. O. C. Comstock became pastor in November, 1841, continuing to serve until April, 1844, and returning again, filled the office from May, 1852, to May, 1855, with some intermissions. Well known for his ministerial and civil positions in the State, genial and dignified, of commanding presence and fine speaking and executive gifts, his ministry and life in the city were a prized blessing to all classes of the people.

Rev. Marvin Allen, one of the most useful ministers in the State for many years, was pastor here from April, 1844, to Oct., 1845.

Rev. A. Ten Brook, professor in the University, acted as pastor during the remainder of 1845, and part of 1846, and other times.

Rev. C. De Land was also employed in 1846, and Rev. Edwin S. Dunham, from October, 1847, to April, 1848.

Rev. Samuel Graves was called from being an instructor in Greek, in Madison University, in the autumn of 1848, and received ordination early in January following. His ministry continued until October, 1851, when he was called to a professorship in Kalamazoo. The period of his ministry was fruitful in many additions to the Church, and much general prosperity. Dr. Graves is the present pastor in Grand Rapids.

Rev. G. W. Gunison, was also ordained here in December, 1851, but remained as pastor only a few months.

Rev. John M. Gregory was the pastor, with slight intermissions from December, 1855, to November, 1858. Part of the time he was State Superintendent of Public Instruction, and his position and abilities enabled him to do much for the Church, while their depleted resources could make but poor financial returns.

Rev. A. L. Freeman was pastor during the year 1859, when he returned to the State of New York, where his work has been steady and successful.

Rev. Samuel Cornelius became pastor Jan. 1, 1860, and served five years. Soon after closing, his long and highly blessed ministry and life ended suddenly, at Lapeer. Able in the Scriptures, of acute and fruitful mind and ready utterance, eminently devoted to all public Christian interests, and of fine social qualities, he was loved and honored here, and throughout the State and country.

Rev. N. S. Burton was pastor nearly four years, ending Jan. 1, 1871. It was a period of steady growth, and his able advocacy of Christian truth and excellent personal influence, were of great service to the Church and denomination.

Rev. Samuel Haskell, the present pastor, commenced his work in March, 1871. The decade of his service has been marked by considerable efficiency of the Church in its work, a steady but slow growth, and a vigorous enterprise in building the new edifice.

ST. ANDREW'S (PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL) CHURCH of Ann Arbor was organized in the fall of 1827. The following were present and took part in the organization, assisted by Rev. Mr. Cadlo, of St. Paul's Church, Detroit, who kindly held services occasionally, until Rev. Silas Freeman took charge of the parish: Andrew Cornish, Henry Rumsey, Marcus Lane, Samuel Denton, Elisha Belcher, Edward Clark. The following named clergymen have served since the organization of the Church: Revs. Freeman, Dorman, Marks, Cummings, Taylor, Lumsden, Gillespie, and Hall. For a number of years after the organization of the parish, services were held in a small building on Washington street, east of Fifth street, and afterward in a brick school-house on the "old jail square;" then the lot on Division street was purchased and a frame edifice was erected a few feet north of where the present stone edifice stands. For a time the basement of the church was used to hold services in. Since its organization, the Church has had a slow but steady growth. In the summer of 1880 the old church was taken down, and a parsonage erected on its site. The erection of the new stone church was begun in 1867 and completed in 1869, the consecration taking place Nov. 10 of that year. The style of architecture is of the early English, and is 101x57 feet in size. The stone of which the walls are constructed are the common field boulders broken to form courses of from 10 to 14 inches, and is well adapted to church building. The pointed front gable has a triplet lancet window above the door, and is surmounted by a stone Greek cross at a height of 58 feet. The interior consists of a nave and side aisles, having 156 pews, accommodating 750 persons, besides a gallery above the vestibule. The lighting is by 12 lancet windows arranged in couplets on each side, and by quarter-foil stained-glass openings in the clere story. The chancel is at present formed by the recessed east end of the nave between the two small robing rooms enclosed from the east end of each aisle, provision being made for recessing it hereafter from the main building should it become necessary. The large stained-glass triplet window over the altar, with the figure of St. Andrew, a sheaf of wheat and other emblems, is from the well-known house of Friedrichs, of Brooklyn, N. Y. The ceiling is frescoed in paints, and the interior wood work is of walnut and butternut oiled, the chancel furniture being of the same material.

The plans and specifications were by G. W. Lloyd, of Detroit. The entire cost, about $30,000, except about $1,200, was raised in the parish and has been paid.

In the fall of 1880, the parish began the construction of a chapel connected with the east end of the church, and of a rectory on the north side of the latter, both of stone. These buildings are to be completed in the spring of 1881 at a cost of about $9,000. When completed there will be no more attractive or commodious group of church buildings in the State, and already the ivy gives to the main edifice its own unequalled loveliness of hue and twining tendril.

LUTHERAN CHURCH.

The first Germans came to Ann Arbor in 1830. Two years later they wrote to the Mission House at Basle, Switzerland, requesting a minister be sent them. Rev. F. Schmid was sent the same year. The society was incorporated as the Evangelical Lutheran Society of Scio, and on its organization proceeded to erect a small frame church on the land presented to them by Mr. Allmendinger, one mile west of the city, which is now used as a cemetery. At first Mr. Schmid preached in the court-house and in the old Presbyterian church. In 1844 the present church edifice was erected, and enlarged in 1863. In 1858 they purchased the first musical instrument for the church, which was a harmonicon. In 1871 Rev. Mr. Schmid, finding his health too poor to longer continue in the arduous position of pastor, which he had filled so faithfully for 38 years, resigned, and his place was filled by Rev. Mr. Reuther, who continued until 1877, when Rev. John Neuman was called to succeed him. Perhaps not a minister in the State remained as long in charge of one pastorate as did Mr. Schmid. It is to his untiring zeal and faithfulness that the Evangelical Lutheran Church owes its large membership and influence. For 38 years did he preach to, baptize, confirm, marry, and perform the rites of burial for a larger congregation than any other in the city.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

St. Thomas' Church (Catholic) was built by Rev. Thomas Cullen, in the year 1843. Father Cullen came to Ann Arbor in 1840, perhaps in the latter part of 1839. Before the church was built services were held in different private houses, and for some time in an old dilapidated building on Washington street, which stood on the spot now occupied by Mr. Fred. Sorg's paint-shop.

The congregation in 1840 was as yet very small, but during the years following it grew rapidly. In 1860 the church was much too small to contain the steadily growing congregation, and a large addition was built, which brought the church to the size in which it is now seen.

Father Cullen was the first resident priest of this city, but before his time, as far back as 1830, the few scattered families in Ann Arbor and vicinity were attended by Rev. Father Kelly up to 1835; from this time to the arrival of Father Cullen in 1840 they were administered to by Rev. Father Morrissy; both these aforementioned priests resided in Northfield. For more than 10 years, Father Cullen attended to the spiritual wants of all the Catholics living in the various towns from Ypsilanti to Kalamazoo. In the latter part of 1848, Rev. James Hennessy came to Ann Arbor to reside with Father Cullen and to share with him the pastoral labors of this wide field.

They built churches in many of the towns visited by them, as in Dexter, Northfield, Jackson, Marshall, etc. In 1852, Father Hennessy took up his residence in Marshall, Calhoun county, thus dividing their vast field of labor into an eastern and western half.

Father Cullen remained pastor of St. Thomas' at Ann Arbor up to the time of his death, which took place on the 7th of September, 1862. His missionary life had been one of great usefulness, but also one of great hardships. He lies buried under the sanctuary of the church he had built in this city.

Many of the parishes in the neighboring towns had by this time grown large enough to have resident priests, among these St. John's parish of Ypsilanti; hence, after the demise of Father Cullen, the Priest of Ypsilanti, Rev. Edward Vanpamel attended to the spiritual wants of the Ann Arbor congregation until a new pastor was sent, which happened in the beginning of May of the ensuing year, 1863. Rev. J. Stephen was the new pastor, who served the parish up to 1866. He bought a pastoral residence and made many improvements in the church.

Rev. H. Delbaer was the next pastor who labored very zealously in the parish for six years. He built an addition to the pastoral residence and founded a Catholic school, which has existed ever since and has done much good work.

Rev. J. Murphy succeeded Father Delbaer; he however remained but four months.

On the fifth of June, 1872, Rev. Francis Joseph Van Erp took charge of the congregation, a man of much experience, great learning and high administrative qualities. Under his wise management the parish prospered greatly, both temporally and spiritually. Under him the church was frescoed and new church furniture was procured. He died on the first of August, 1879, in consequence of injuries received by a fall from his carriage, on his way home from the county house, where he had held services for the inmates. The sad accident occurred on the 29th of July, two days previous to his death. On the 8th of August, Rev. W. J. Fierle the present pastor, was appointed to succeed him.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The First Congregational Church of Ann Arbor was organized March 23, 1847, by a council called for that purpose. Forty-eight persons entered into covenant with each other at that time, nine of whom are still members of the Church.

The erection of a house of worship was begun almost immediately, the Church worshipping meantime in the court-house. In about two years the society had completed, and begun to occupy, the brick church still standing at the corner Fifth and Washington streets. They continued to worship in this house for about 25 years, when they sold it to the Second Lutheran Society, and built the fine stone edifice at the corner of State and Williams streets. This building cost about $35,000, and was dedicated in May, 1876.

The first pastor of the Church was Rev. E. P. Ingersoll, who remained for about a year. He was followed by Rev. L. S. Hobert, who continued with the Church four years. Rev. William L. Mather followed him, and remained two years. Rev. Joseph Estabrook, while teaching in Ypsilanti, supplied the pulpit for a year. Rev. George Candee preached to the Church for about the same time; Rev. Samuel Cochrane, D. D., for two years. Rev. E. A. Baldwin was the pastor six years, Rev. William Smith for one year, Rev. H. L. Hubbell from June, 1869, till October, 1876; and Rev. William H. Ryder since May, 1877.

The Church has enjoyed a very constant and steady growth and has been blessed with several revivals, the most fruitful of which occurred during the pastorates of Mr. Hobert, Mr. Estabrook and Mr. Hubbell. It numbers at present about 250 members.

Mr. Loren Mills was elected deacon at the organization of the Church and still remains in this office; with him are associated J. Austin Scott, Joseph D. Baldwin, Phineas L. Page, Austin A. Wood and Charles K. Adams.

Deacon Loren Mills was the superintendent of the Sunday-school for 19 years after the organization of the Church, when he resigned and Mr. Thomas White was elected; after two years of service he was removed by death, and was succeeded by Professor Martin L. D'Ooge of Michigan University, who still remains in this office. The Sunday-school has an attendance of about 175.

THE FIRST UNITARIAN CHURCH OF ANN ARBOR

was organized January, 1867. Its first pastor was Rev. Charles H. Brigham, by whose efforts the society was established, and who served as its minister for 11 years. The first trustees of the Church were T. S. Sanford, Randall Schuyler, George D. Hill, Hiram Arnold, Moses Rogers and Henry K. White, and the first clerk, L. D. Burch. In February the society began occupying the building known as the Methodist church, on the corner of Fifth and Ann streets, and in March purchased the same, repairing, painting and fitting it up for permanent use.

In May, 1877, Rev. Mr. Brigham was obliged to vacate his pulpit on account of sickness, and in February, 1879, he died in Brooklyn, N. Y. He was an exceptionally able preacher, an extensive writer for many leading papers and reviews, and one of the ripest scholars that this country has produced. The pulpit of the church was supplied from November, 1877, to June, 1878, by Rev. Joseph H. Allen, of Cambridge, Mass.

In October, 1878, Rev. J. T. Sunderland, the present pastor, entered upon his work. The society at the present time is full of vigorous life. It has recently purchased an excellent lot on State street, central between the University and the High School, and will begin the coming summer the erection of a new house of worship, which will contain, in addition to audience room, Sunday-school rooms and parlor, a spacious and well furnished reading room. A fund has recently been created, partly by a legacy left by the late Judge Seaman, of this city, and partly by voluntary subscriptions, for the establishment of a Liberal-Religious Library, which will also be provided with a room in the new church,—the library to be accessible to all persons who desire to read the best liberal-religious thought of the age.

A Young People's Literary and Social Club connected with the Church contains over 100 members and holds weekly meetings, which are largely attended. A large students' Bible class, conducted usually by the pastor, meets every Sunday for the study of the Bible, Christian history and biography, the great religions of the world, living questions of Theology and Ethics, etc. The Sunday-school, under the superintendency of Prof. T. P. Wilson, is full of life and interest. The Church has a membership of about 60 families. The present trustees are Prof. Chas. E. Greene, Prof. B. F. Nichols, Judge W. D. Harriman, James B. Gott, A. McReynolds and Mrs. Prof. Langley; the clerk of the society is Benjamin Brown. The Church, existing not for ecclesiastical ends but for the purpose of promoting truth, righteousness and charity among men, and believing in the simple rational Christianity of Jesus, but not in the prevailing theological systems, limits its fellowship by no creed or dogmatic test, and invites to union and co-operation with it all who desire to labor in practical ways to build up the kingdom of God.

THE SECOND METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH of Ann Arbor was organized in the lower town in 1850. The first to minister to the spiritual wants of this congregation was Rev. Manasseh Hickey, who was succeeded, in the order named, by Revs. Robert Bird, Andrew Bell, Edmund W. Borden, W. Benson Ira W. Donaldson and George Taylor. Mr. Taylor received his appointment in the fall of 1859, and was the last to serve, the organization disbanding, its members being transferred to other Churches.

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN ZION CHURCH.

The first meeting for the organization of this Church was held on July 16, 1875, in the old Congregational church, situated on the corner of Fifth and Washington streets, the officiating minister being Rev. H. F. Belser. An organization was then effected with William Merkle, Philip Lohr, and Christian Mack as deacons, while Christian Hoffstetter, Louis Sleicher, Conrad Schneider, Adam D. Seyler, Frederick Hutzel, and Frederick Schmidt were elected as trustees. The Church increased in membership very rapidly, as 169 were enrolled on the records within a few weeks. It was decided at that meeting to buy the church they were then occupying, and accordingly negotiations were entered into with the Congregational Church and officers, and being satisfactory, the grounds and building were purchased at a cost of $4,300. The Church concluded to renovate the building and immediately did so, at a cost of about $2,000. The pastor, Rev. H. F. Belser, is of an enterprising and progressive nature, and under his pastorship the Church has flourished, and now stands among the leading Churches of that denomination in the State. They are entirely out of debt and have a comfortable sum of money laid by to be used when needed. The present Church officers are the same as when organized with three exceptions; Andrew Birk now fills the office of deacon in the place of Philip Lohr, while Jacob Neidhamer and Gregor Negley occupy the position of trustees, in place of Messrs. Sleicher and Schneider. A Sunday-school was organized at the time the Church was, with William Merkle, Superintendent; Frederick Schlade, Treasurer; Gustav Graupner, Secretary. The present officers are Frederick Schmidt, Superintendent; F. Belser, Treasurer; William Belser, Secretary, and with a membership roll of 295. A large library of nearly 475 volumes is owned and used by the Sunday-school. The Sunday-school is also in a fine condition, is free from debt, with a surplus of over $100.

GERMAN M. E. CHURCH.

This body was organized about 1840 or 1845, and had for its first pastor the Rev. Sethelmeyer, and for trustees Daniel Allmendinger and John Ungemach. In 1846 a house of worship was erected on the northwest corner of Division and Liberty streets, where the members have since gathered to hear the word of God. Conrad Tranker is the present pastor, and Joseph Greve and Adam Stoll-Steimer the present trustees. A Sunday-school numbers 40 members, and at the last election the following officers were chosen to their respective positions: Superintendent, Gustav Schlatterbeck; Secretary and Organist, Julius Schlatterbeck; Treasurer, Julia Gull.

AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH.

This Church was organized in 1871 by Revs. G. C. Booth and W. S. Langford, of Detroit, with 16 members. Rev. J. W. Brooks was the first pastor, and was followed by Revs. J. Bass, F. Meyers, P. C. Cooper, C. H. Ward, W. H. Gordon, L. Ratliff, H. H. Wilson and the present pastor, C. W. E. Gilmore. In 1877 a building was purchased and removed to its present location on Fourth, between Pontiac and Summit streets; fitted up, remodeled, with a total outlay of $600. The present officers are: Trustees—John White, Louis Carson and Henry Smith; Stewards—Simeon Davis, John Brown and John Britton. A Sunday-school, of the same denomination, was organized some time during the war, and has lived and prospered until the present time. It now numbers over 40 members, and is governed by the following officers: Superintendent, Henry Williams; Secretary and Treasurer, Louis Carson. An African Baptist Church was organized many years ago, and for a long period was in a very flourishing condition. They have a house of worship in the Fourth ward, but have no regular service.

SCHOOLS.

We are indebted to Prof. W. S. Perry, Superintendent of Public Schools, for the following very able historical paper on the schools of Ann Arbor:

"The first settlers of Ann Arbor, Messrs. Allen and Rumsey, arrived in 1824. The first school was opened in '25, by Miss Monroe, in a log house on the present site of Duffy's store. The furniture of the room consisted of a few very rude benches and a chair. All the light enjoyed was received through windows composed of single panes of glass 8x9 inches.

"The following year Miss Harriet G. Parsons, the late Mrs. Leoine Mills, taught in the same place. In 1829 Miss Parsons removed her school to a frame house on the site of the present Zion Lutheran church, Washington street. The same year a one-story brick building was erected by subscription for religious meetings and school purposes, on what is known as 'Jail Square,' on the southwest corner. The land was owned by the county, and about a year thereafter, the Board of Supervisors added a story to the building, which was used for some years thereafter as a 'jury-room' (court-room).

"Who taught the first school in this building cannot probably be ascertained.

"Down to this point there had been no public schools in the place; indeed, nearly all the early educational work of Ann Arbor was done by private enterprise.

The public schools began their career in 1830. In that year the township of Ann Arbor, which then included all of Pittsfield and a part of Northfield, was divided into 11 districts. District No. 1 included the village of Ann Arbor, and was similar to the present district in size, but different somewhat in shape. The first public school seems to have been taught in 1831, by whom, neither record nor tradition informs us. In 1832 the first school report, by the school commissioners, was made. The document is unique as it is brief. It contains simply these three items: 'No. of children between 5 and 15 years of age in the district, 161. Average No. in school, 35. No public moneys received.'

"For nearly a whole decade the records of the schools are missing, and memory faileth. In 1842 the township was re-districted, No. 1 becoming No. 11, with boundaries slightly differing from those of the parent district.

"A few existing school reports of this period furnish us with the following interesting facts:

	1839.	1840.	1842.	1844.
No. of children between 5 and 15.....	141	143	426	608
No. enrolled in school.....	110	139	253	365
Money raised for school purposes.....	$500	$174	$299	$300

“About this time Union schools began to spring up in various parts of the State, and the agitation of the subject struck our little village and soon rose to fever heat. In 1845 a formidable petition, which secured the names of nearly all the solid men of the town north of Huron St., the aristocratic part of the village, was presented to the school inspectors, praying them to divide the districts ‘before any expense is incurred in preparing to build a mammoth school-house, as we prefer the system which experience has proved to be the visionary and costly experiments.’ Counter petitions of those living in the south and west portions of the town were made, but nevertheless the division was made, and for eight years the town supported two schools and two sets of officers throughout. The experiment, however, was far from satisfactory.

“It is now proper to return to the private schools by which the educational field was principally occupied.

“In 1829 a ‘select school’ was opened by T. W. and Moses Merrill, in the Goodrich Block, for teaching ‘higher English and Latin and Greek.’ It was soon removed to a brick house standing where Eberbach’s drug store now is, and there it was continued during 1830 and ’31, by J. W. Merrill, assisted by Miss Charlotte Mosely. Some of our most prominent citizens were pupils in this school.

“In the fall of 1832 several leading citizens of the town requested Rev. O. C. Thompson, now of Detroit, at that time acting as agent of the Sunday-School Union in the Territory of Michigan, to open an academy. He acceded, and during the following winter taught a large and popular school in the Presbyterian church on the site of the present church. It was a school of high grade, well sustained in the departments of classics, science and higher mathematics, and was patronized by students from all parts of the Territory. There are good grounds for believing that at that time there was not another school of equally high character west of the lakes. Infant schools were maintained, at this period, in various parts of the village by Mrs. O. C. Thompson, Mrs. Merrill and others.”

In 1835 a high school, with courses of study in the classics and English, was kept by Luke H. Parsons on the corner of Huron and Fourth streets, now occupied by Cook’s Hotel.

In the same year there was established the Manual Labor School on what is known as the “Eberbach place” about two miles east of the court-house, on the south Ypsilanti road. The academic department aimed to furnish all the facilities for a literary school of high grade. It was in charge of Rev. Samuel Hair. The pupils were expected to pay for their board, in whole or in part, by labor on the farm. Three and a half hours of daily labor, or two hours of work daily and 50 cents at the end of each week, paid for three meals per day. The experiment was not successful, and after a fitful existence of three years, the school was closed.

About the same time the female seminary, conducted by the Misses Page, was started in the back part of the present Leonard House, continuing there and in other parts of the village two or three years. This school was deservedly popular. The Misses P. were scholarly women and skillful teachers.

It was also in 1835 that the famous "Old Academy" was erected on the corner of Fourth and Williams streets, where now stands the residence of Mrs. Behr. The school was opened by Mr. and Mrs. Griffin, who had previously organized a school on Duffy's corner. The academy at once offered a wide range of studies in English, Latin, Greek and the sciences, with apparatus for chemistry, philosophy, astronomy and surveying. It speedily established itself with confidence of the people, and for a number of years was the accepted and only prominent school in the place. Mr. O'Neil, and after him Mr. Mealletta, followed the Griffins in the management of the school. About the year 1845 a ladies' seminary of considerable repute was established and conducted for two or more years by Mrs. Wood, in the eastern part of the village, on Lawrence addition.

In 1844 an academical school which had some connection with the university as a preparatory department, was instituted by A. S. Welch, now President of Iowa Agricultural College. It continued three years, doing excellent work, especially in preparing students for the university.

The schools in Lower Town, Fifth ward, until their consolidation with the city schools in 1861, had an interesting history, and deserves some special mention. Like those in Upper Town, the first schools were private. One of the most eminent of the teachers there was Dr. Thomas Holmes, who taught in the M. E. Church, then Baptist, in 1838. He also taught a district school in the same place the following year.

The same year, '39, the first school-house was built of brick on Traver St., and the following winter Dr. Holmes dedicated it by teaching an excellent school.

This building served its purpose, and the people in that locality, until 1857, when the present two-story brick building was erected on Wall St. For several years, the school there was quite large and flourishing. The first teachers in it were Mr. Holden, his sister and Mrs. Mudge, now Mrs. C. K. Adams.

The most famous and most permanent of the private schools of Ann Arbor was the Misses Clark's seminary for young ladies. It was opened in the old Argus Block in 1839, but soon was removed to the corner of Fourth and Liberty streets, where it remained for three years; it then migrated to the corner of Main and Liberty, and continued its good work there for six years; it then sojourned for a short time on the corner of 2d and Huron Sts., thence it found its way to the corner of North and 4th sts., where it was burned out. The school then took quarters in the brick building on Division, where it continued for 10 years, until the death of its worthy principal, Mary Clark, in 1876, making an aggregate period for this school of 37 years.

The Misses Clark, both in school proper and in their society relations, have occupied a large place in the educational history of Ann Arbor.

Many prominent women, here and elsewhere, owe their high culture to the facilities enjoyed in this seminary. History, literature, and the lighter sciences were taught with marked success.

In botany, Mary Clark was authority, and several plants bearing her name attest her patience and ability as an original investigator. In history, especially ecclesiastical history, Miss Clark had no peer in the city, probably not in the State.

We now go back to the public schools which were conducted in two districts. Upon the division of the districts in 1845, the old academy fell into the hands of the south district, No. 12, and for the following decade was the headquarters of school operations of the districts.

Near the same time, '45 or '46, the building now known as the St. Thomas school was erected by the north district, No. 11, for a public school-house.

It is a matter of regret that during these years, up to the reunion of the two districts in 1853, the material for a school history of Ann Arbor are so meager that not even the names of the teachers have been preserved.

The following statistical items, from the reports of the two districts for 1846 and '48, will be found of interest:

	1846.	1848.
No. of children between 4 and 18.....	{ No. 11 300	499
	{ No. 12 357	438
No. enrolled in school.....	{ No. 11 278	150
	{ No. 12 180	167
Amount of money received.....	{ No. 11 $450	$800. 00
	{ No. 12 450	348. 75
Amount paid teachers.....	{ No. 11 224
	{ No. 12 90

The two districts remained separate for eight years, until 1853. They accomplished but little for the educational growth of the place, and most thoroughly failed to supply its educational necessities. It was clearly seen that proper and ample educational facilities for the city could be had only by uniting the two districts and grading the schools. But a consolidation was not to be secured without a struggle, and, although many who had favored separation, were now eager for reunion, it required all the tact and influence of such men as Erastus O. Haven, Daniel Godfrey, Edwin Lawrence, Donald McIntyre, L. S. Hobert, Philip Beach, J. N. Gott, Abram Sager and Chas. Tripp to bring together the districts, and set the school on the road to wider usefulness and prosperity.

The present epoch of the public schools began its history in 1853 by the union, under general laws, of the two districts, Nos. 11 and 12 (of the township), which comprised the limits of the city. Ann Arbor at that time had been a chartered city two years. After much consideration and no little sharp advocacy of different sites, the present site of the Central Building was purchased the same year for $2,000. The Central Building was erected in 1854-'5 at a cost of $30,000, and was opened for school purposes in 1856.

A special legislative act for the organization and government of the city schools, was procured in 1859. In 1865 this act was amended, or rather re-made, and in the form it then took, except a slight change made in '79, remains still in force.

The 5th ward, not then a part of the city, with its present buildings was annexed to the district in 1861. About this time several other annexations of contiguous territory were made to the district.

The school attendance rapidly increased; the necessity soon came for more school-room, and the ward buildings were erected in rapid succession. The 2d ward house was built in 1860; the 1st ward house in 1862; the 3rd ward house in 1866; the 4th ward house in 1869. In 1871 the Central Building was enlarged to nearly double its former capacity.

During this building period the basement of the Central Building and those of some of the city churches were used for school purposes.

The "Old Academy" was sold in 1862. In 1868 the North school building was sold to the society of St. Thomas, for school purposes, and the same year the Catholics seceded from the public schools, withdrawing about 200 pupils and establishing a school of their own.

While operating under the general law, the district had the following Directors: E. Lawrence, elected in 1853 and 1854; Charles Tripp, elected in 1855; E. Lawrence, elected again 1856; E. B. Pond, elected in 1857 and 1858. Under the special act of 1859 the first Board of Trustees was as follows:—E. W. Morgan, J. M. Wheeler, E. Mann, Philip Bach, W. C. Vorhees, E. B. Pond; J. M. Wheeler was elected President; E. B. Pond, Secretary; and Philip Bach, Treasurer.

The officers of the Board down to the present time have been as follows:—Presidents, J. M. Wheeler 1859 to 1871, Abram Sager 1872; E. B. Pond 1873 to 1876; W. D. Harriman 1878 to present. Secretaries, E. B. Pond 1859 to 1864, H. D. Bennett 1865 to 1866, W. W. Whedon 1867 to 1869, James B. Gott 1870 to 1877, J. L. Burleigh 1878 to 1879, W. W. Whedon 1880 to present. Treasurers, Philip Bach 1857 to 1876, Leonard Greiner 1877 to present.

The city has been exceedingly fortunate, almost without exception, in the character of its School Board. It has uniformly been composed of the best men of the city, men who have appreciated education and its work, and who have cared for the schools in a wise and generous way.

The first attempt at grading the schools seems to have been made in 1856 upon the opening of the Central Building, when the primary, grammar and high-school departments were established, or rather marked off. At this point the public schools entered upon a new era of prosperity.

From that time forth the Ann Arbor high school has been one of the most prominent features of the city. It is one of the largest preparatory and academical schools in the country, and its reputation has become well nigh national. Of its 400 to 500 pupils, about 60 per cent. are non-residents. Its annual tuition receipts go far toward cancelling the cost of its support, while many families become temporary residents of the city in order to secure the advantages of its superior instruction. Since 1861, the date of its first graduating class, the school has graduated 870 of its pupils, a large proportion of whom entered the University of Michigan. It is doubtful if any other enterprise of the city has contributed more, even to its material prosperity, than has the Ann Arbor high School.

The high school was organized in 1856 with J. C. Abbot, now President of the Agricultural College, as Principal. He was succeeded, two years afterward, by D. B. Briggs, with C. B. Grant as Associate Principal. After two years Mr. Briggs resigned; Mr. Grant became Principal, and continued two years, giving all the instruction in Latin and Greek.

The first Superintendent of the Public Schools was N. W. Lawton, elected in 1862. He served five years, and was followed in 1867 by Elisha Jones, who remained three years. The present incumbent, W. S. Perry, was elected in 1870.

The principals of the high school since the resignation of Mr. Grant in '62 have been as follows: Martin L. D'Ooge, appointed in '62; Arthur Everett, '64; J. D. H. Cornelius, '65; A. W. Hamilton, '67; A. H. Pattengill, '68; S. R. Winchell, '69; I. N. Demmon, '73; J. G. Pattengill, '76.

The development of the high school may be indicated as follows: At the outset of '56, two courses of study, of three years each, the English and the classical, were established, together with special courses of two years in French and German. In '68 the Latin and elective courses were added, and the other two courses considerably strengthened. The elective course proved worthless, and was soon dropped. In '70 a scientific course of two years was adopted; in '71 it was extended to three years. In '74 the French and German special courses were discontinued, French and German incorporated in the Latin and scientific courses, and all the regular literary courses extended to four years each. In '72 a commercial course of one year was organized, which, in '77, was extended to two years.

Drawing was a part of the grammar-school course from the opening of the Central Building, '56. Since '75 it has been taught in all the lower grades above the second. Painting was taught in the high school from '56 to '75.

At first, piano music was taught in the Central Building, but a few years sufficed to show that the school had higher and worthier functions than teaching instrumental music, and it was dropped. Vocal music was made a special study in all grades below the high school in '72.

Aiming to be conservative of all the good of the past, the schools of the city are ever on the alert to keep abreast of every forward movement in the educational reform, and to make practical in the school room the wisest conclusions of educational science.

The following three series of statistics taken at intervals of 10 years, are a fair illustration of the growth of the material interests of the city schools: School census—1860, 1,472; 1870, 2,268; 1880, 2,483; enrollment—1860, 1,307; 1870, 1,864; 1880, 1,877; tuition—1860, $1,202; 1870, $2,025; 1880, $4,814; salaries—1860, $5,741; 1870, $14,823; 1880, $17,651; appropriations—1860, $9,555; 1870, $16,030; 1880, $18,700.

BANKS—FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

When the Government gave to the people the privilege of organizing national banks, agreeable to an act of Congress, one of the first applications made was from citizens of Ann Arbor, resulting in the organization of the First National Bank on the first day of July, 1863. The capital stock of the new bank was fixed at $75,000, which was quickly taken by 55 of the leading citizens of the city and vicinity. At the first meeting of stock-holders, Volney Chapin was elected President, Ebenezer Wells, Vice-President; Charles H. Richmond, Cashier. This bank was the first in the State of Michigan, and was the 22d in the entire nation. At the expiration of the first quarter, Sept. 30, 1863, the following statement was made according to law:

The capital stock remained at $75,000 until July 1, 1865, when it was increased to $100,000, at which figure it remained one year, being then increased to $125,000. On the 1st of July, 1869, it was again increased to $150,000, at which amount it now remains. The banking business, for about three years, was transacted in Hangsterfer's block. In 1866 a piece of ground was purchased on South Main street, at a cost of $5,000, on which was erected a three-story building, costing $10,700. Changes in the officers of the bank have been few. In 1865 Mr. Chapin was succeeded as President by Ebenezer Wells, who has been re-elected annually ever since. R. S. Smith succeeded Dr. Wells as Vice-President, in 1865, remaining in that connection until 1869, when Philip Bach was elected, and yet occupies the position. J. W. Knight succeeded Charles H. Richmond, as Cashier, in 1866, and has been re-elected to the position at each annual election of officers. Mr. Knight has been connected with the bank since its organization, and since his first election as Cashier, he has had the general business management of the institution. To his judicious care and oversight, the fine success which has attended from the first day its doors were opened to the present time, is a great measure due. No bank in the country can show a better record of good management than the First National Bank of Ann Arbor. For 14 years not a penny was lost in the collection of the vast amount that has from time to time been loaned by the bank. In 1877 its first loss occurred from the depreciation of certain collaterals taken to secure payment of a loan. Of the 55 original stock-holders, 20 have since died, and of the remainder 30

yet hold its stock. Since its organization 178 persons have possessed some of its stock. The present number of stockholders is 85. The following is the statement made by the Cashier, Oct. 1, 1880, which is given as illustrative of the growth of the bank since its organization:

The first Directors of the bank were: Christian Mack, T. M. Cooley, W. W. Wines, E. W. Morgan, M. Rogers, C. T. Wilmot, R. S. Smith, all of whom are recognized as sound business men. Its present Directors are: Christian Mack, R. A. Beal, Daniel Hiscock, W. W. Wines, W. D. Harriman, William Deubel, W. B. Smith, worthy successors to the first Board.

Mr. Smith remained President of the bank for about three years and was succeeded by Judge T. M. Cooley, who remained at its head a year and a half, then resigned, and Mr. Smith was again elected, serving until his death, which occurred in 1876. Christian Mack was chosen to fill the vacancy, and yet remains at its head. W. W. Wines was elected Vice-President in place of Mr. Mack.

Schuyler Grant served as Cashier until 1874, when he resigned. The Board of Directors, on meeting, decided to postpone the election of Cashier, desiring to hold the position for Charles E. Hiscock, who, at the time, had not attained his majority, but who had shown fine business qualities. Mr. Hiscock was therefore elected Teller, and as soon as he reached his legal majority, was elected Cashier, and yet holds the position. Under his careful management, ably assisted by the Board of Directors, the bank shows a record of which all may well be proud.

On the organization of the bank, it was located on the southeast corner of Main and Huron streets, where it remained 10 years, when it was removed to its present location, northwest corner Main and Huron.

ARTESIAN WELL.

In 1871 an artesian well was sunk on Main street, and afterward abandoned. At a depth of 334 feet a vein of salt water was struck. The Argus, of Feb. 24, 1871, says: "The water filters clear and pure, and its strength is put at 50 per cent. The water rises in the tube to within 25 feet of the surface. One gallon of water brought up in the sand pump through 300 feet of fresh water, produced by evaporation one pound of salt."

ANN ARBOR GAS LIGHT COMPANY.

Believing the city to have groped in darkness a sufficient length of time, a company was formed and duly organized, under the general laws, on the 17th of March, 1858, for the purpose of manufacturing and supplying the citizens of the city with coal gas. An unlimited charter was granted by the city to the company to run their mains through the streets and erect such buildings as might be necessary for its business. The capital stock of the company was placed at $23,000, every dollar of which was instantly subscribed and paid up. At the first meeting of the stockholders, Hiram Becker was elected President; Henry W. Wells, Secretary; E. W. Morgan, S. H. Douglas and Charles Tripp, Directors. Steps were immediately taken for the erection of buildings and laying of four miles of street main, the contract for that purpose being awarded to James Clements for the sum of $21,000. During the summer of 1858, Mr. Clements completed his contract, and early in the fall gas was turned into the mains, and the city was lighted with it for the first time. The price of gas was fixed at $4 per 1,000 feet, and remained at that figure until 1861, when it was reduced to $3.50. In 1864, in consequence of the advance of every article of manufacture to war prices, it was raised to $4. It remained at this price until 1875, when it was again reduced to $3.50, at which figure it now remains. The first year there were about 100 consumers. At present there are 332 consumers and 66 street lamps. The first year's receipts of the company were $7,058.80; for 1879 was received $15,132.01. There is no record of the number of feet of gas consumed until 1868, when it amounted to 4,213,300 feet. This was gradually increased up to 1873, when it reached 4,855,746 feet. The hard times which commenced here the following year caused some to abandon the use of gas and return to a cheaper, though an inferior, article of light. In 1878, good times being restored, the increase in the amount of gas consumed was quite perceptible, while in 1879 it was still greater. There are now nearly seven miles of street main, 66 public lamps, and 332 private consumers. The stock in 1861 was increased to $30,000, and further increased in 1866 to $40,000. In 1871 it again became necessary to increase the stock, which was raised to $60,000, at which figure it now remains. The company early adopted the policy of using its surplus earnings, beyond a reasonable dividend, in making improvements in the works. There has already been expended in the construction of the works $67,000, some $7,000 more than is shown by the capital, which goes to prove that there is no fictitious stock in the company, and for every dollar represented there is about $1.10 worth of property. Dr. S. H. Douglas has been superintendent of the works since the formation of the company, and under his careful management, whatever success has attended is, in a measure, due to him. The present officers of the company are: J. Austin Scott, President; William H. Douglas, Secretary; Silas H. Douglas and John W. Hunt, Directors; Silas H. Douglas, Superintendent.

MANUFACTORIES.

The enterprise of a village or city is often judged by the number and general prosperity of its manufactories. While it may be true that a city can be prosperous without manufactories, it having other attractions, such as good schools, excellent churches, facilities for being a pleasure resort, yet having manufactories that supply not only the wants of its own citizens, but many from abroad, makes it very evident that it is prosperous. While Ann Arbor cannot boast of as many manufacturing institutions as some other points, it possesses at present quite a number, some of which have been in existence many years. The first manufactory of any description established in the place was that of the old tannery of G. & C. Prusica, in 1829. How long these gentlemen continued in the business is unknown. The name has long since dropped out of the directories of the city. Other firms have been established in the same business, flourished for a time and then disappeared. At present there are two firms engaged in the business, the oldest of which is that of

Henry Krause.—In 1850 Mr. Krause built a frame tannery on the corner of Second and Williams streets, and commenced to manufacture leather for the market. In 1868 his business had grown to such proportions as to make necessary the erection of a larger and more substantial building. He then built a large tannery of brick, with an engine house connected with it, the cost of which was $15,000. The tannery proper is 30x120 feet in size, and two-stories high, while the engine room covers a piece of ground some 18x30 feet. A large storage house for bark is near the main building and holds annually some 225 cords of oak bark. The tannery is fitted up with all the modern machinery, is run by steam, and furnishes labor for 12 men. About 50 vats and tanks and 4 leaches are used in the manufacture of the leather, which finds a ready sale throughout the State. The annual sales of Mr. Krause amount to about $45,000. All kinds of leather are manufactured, but principally that used for harness.

Jacob Heinzman.—In 1851 Mr. Heinzman started a tannery on the corner of Third and Jefferson streets. He erected a building 50x60 feet in size and two-stories high, and containing 30 vats and leaches. In a few years his son was taken into partnership, and the firm name was changed to Jacob Heinzman & Son. The tannery turns out a good quality of upper, calf, kip and harness leather, but principally the latter. The assessed value of the buildings are about $4,000, while the yearly sales amount to $25,000. The firm employ seven hands in the manufacture of the leather, which is sold mostly in the States of Michigan, Indiana and Illinois.

Distillery.—Among the early manufactories was the distillery establishment of Hawley, Nash & Co. The following advertisement of the firm appeared in the first issue of the Western Emigrant: "L. Hawley, Nash & Co. beg leave to inform the public that they have erected a distillery in the vicinity of Ann Arbor, which will be in operation by the 1st of December next, where they will keep constantly on hand a superior quality of rectified whisky, which they will sell as low as can be purchased in the Territory, by the gallon or barrel, for cash. Whisky exchanged for grain on liberal terms. From a long experience and strict attention to business they hope to merit a share of public patronage." This advertisement was dated Nov. 18, 1829. Whisky in those days was a legitimate article of commerce.

Ann Arbor Agricultural Company.—In 1867 Lewis M. Moore bought a piece of land on the left bank of the Huron river in the lower town of Ann Arbor, and started in the manufacture of agricultural implements, his son, Eli W., being connected with him in the business, under the firm name of Lewis M. Moore & Son. This firm made seed drills till 1869. About the same time the above firm started, John Finnegan and Frank Howard started in the same business at the crossing of Catherine and Detroit streets, in Ann Arbor proper, and ran the business successfully till 1869, when the two firms consolidated, with a capital of $13,000, and continued business in the lower town. The works increased their manufactured goods till 1873, when about $40,000 worth were sold. This same year the elder Moore died, and the business was operated by the remaining members of the firm till 1878, when the now existing Ann Arbor Agricultural Works was formed, with a stock company and a paid up capital of $50,000. The officers are J. Austin Scott, President; G. W. Knight, Treasurer; Earl Knight, Secretary, and John Finnegan, Manager. The company occupied a main building, 40x90 feet, three-stories high, erected in 1876 by the old firm; a polishing shop, 30x70 feet, one-story high; a foundry 50x105 feet, also erected by the old firm in 1874; and during 1880, the company erected two buildings, one 40x90 feet, and the other 24 feet square, which are used in the manufacture of the implements turned out by this firm. The grounds are large and extensive, covering some three acres. The company utilize the water near them to a great extent, their machinery being run by both steam and water. The "Advance" plow and an improved feed cutter are the only kind of implements manufactured, and they find a good market in all parts of the Union. The firm employ some 75 men. The stockholders have been increased to 24, and the capital stock to $75,000.

Western Brewery.—In 1861 Peter Brehm and John Reier built a brewery on West Fourth, between Liberty and West Madison streets, in Ann Arbor, and began the brewing business. For about three years this brewery was run, when, in 1864, it took fire and burned to the ground. These men immediately put up a larger and more extensive building on the same site, and started in business once more. Mr. Reier soon after sold out his interest to Mr. Brehm, and he in turn rented the property to Fred Kirn, who, after running it for some time gave it up, and Mr. Frank Ruck rented the property of the widow of Mr. Brehm (who had died in 1874) in 1875, and it was operated by him till Oct. 13, 1880, when he sold out to Christian Martin and Matt. Fischer, two enterprising young Germans of Ann Arbor. Messrs. Martin and Fischer have since operated the brewery, and are building up quite an extensive trade. Some 1,500 bushels of malt, 1,700 lbs. of hops, 225 cords of wood and 800 tons of ice are used in the manufacture and storage of the 3,000 barrels of beer turned out annually. The main building is 60x30, two-stories and a basement, while the extensions cover almost an acre of ground. The beer produced by this brewery finds a ready sale in all parts of the county.

Northern Brewery.—In 1872 George Krause built this brewery in the lower town of Ann Arbor, on Mill street. He sold out to John and Fred Frey, and in 1873 Fred sold out his interest to his brother John, who has operated it since. Mr. Frey makes about 2,400 barrels of beer annually, and consumes about 5,000 bushels of grain and 4,000 lbs. of hops in the manufacture of this beverage. During 1880 he stored up about 1,000 tons of ice.

Furniture Manufactory.—The furniture manufactory of Thomas Rauschenberger & Co. is situated on the west side of Jewett, between Huron and Liberty streets, in Ann Arbor, and was built in 1870 by John Rauschenberger, who operated the factory for about seven years, when he sold out to the present proprietors. Although a small building, only 30x40 feet, one and a half stories high, the firm does quite an extensive business and employs seven hands. The furniture manufactured was sold at Detroit for some time, but of late years the firm has sold all their furniture inside the county. The machinery is run by water-power, furnished by a race about one-fourth of a mile long, this race being fed by about a dozen springs.

Knitting Factory.—This institution is situated on Broadway street in the lower town of Ann Arbor, and is owned and operated by a German named Jacob Larmie. It was built in 1876, and has been operated only in the winters of the years following. Mr. Larmie employs three hands and uses up some 300 lbs. of wool annually in the production of knit jackets, scarfs and mittens, which find a ready sale in and around Ann Arbor.

Soap Factories.—One of these, situated on the corner of Main and Madison streets, in Ann Arbor, was established in 1855 by a German named Andrew Birk, who has since operated it. During the first year, Mr. Birk turned out some 1,500 pounds of German mottled soap, in a little building eight feet square and one-story high, but his business increased so rapidly that he was forced to enlarge his narrow quarters, and now occupies a building 93x30, and two-stories in height. He annually manufactures about 40 tons of this soap, requiring 15,000 bushels of ashes, and 100 cords of wood. Mr. Birk has also in connection an establishment for the manufacture of potash, but does not operate this part only at certain times. He has turned out from 80 to 100 barrels per year, which he ships to a large firm in New York city. For his soap he has kettles and furnaces enough to make about two tons at one time. His potash department is furnished with all the modern appliances,—has four large kettles and an immense pan, also a mammoth heater in connection. Mr. Birk has four wagons continually engaged in traveling over this and adjoining counties to secure all the ashes needed in his large and increasing business. His establishment is fed with water from an overflowing spring situated about one quarter of a mile in the rear of his building, and carried through an iron pipe to the manufactory.

Another soap factory was established in 1864, by D. S. Miller, who came to Washtenaw county in 1848. It is situated at the junction of Pontiac and State streets, in the lower town of Ann Arbor. Mr. Miller makes three kinds of soaps,—erasive, fulling, and scouring, the former of which he makes a specialty. He employs three hands in the manufactory of this useful article, and receives orders from all parts of Michigan for his celebrated erasive soap, which is certainly superior to the common soaps now being sold throughout the country.

Cigar Manufactories.—One establishment, at No. 8 Main street, Ann Arbor, was started by Louis Roland, on Dec. 22, 1880, and has been in active operation since. Mr. Roland has been in the county since 1868, and learned his trade with some of the best artists in that line, in this State; he annually turns out about 50,000 cigars, and finds a good market for them in this county.

On the east side of Main, between Huron and Washington streets, Ann Arbor, is an establishment of this kind, owned and operated by C. F. Kayser, assisted by a number of experienced workmen. Mr. Kayser started in business on the corner of Main and Jefferson streets, but since May, 1880, has been located at this place. Mr. Kayser annually turns out 150,000 cigars, and has no difficulty in disposing of them within the limits of Washtenaw county. He has lately enlarged his establishment, and in 1881 will probably manufacture about 175,000.

In 1868 Joshua Buell started an establishment of this kind in Ann Arbor, and employed five men in manufacturing the 150,000 cigars he turned out annually. For the past few years, Mr. Buell has left the business part of the city, and now makes only 75,000 per year, at his residence at 69 North Main street. He finds a sale for these all over the State of Michigan.

Organ Works.—In the year 1867 G. F. Gartner & Son established the Organ Works for the manufacture of pipe and reed organs. He employed several hands, and being from Germany and a first-class workman, he manufactured all his work by hand. He found, after some five years, that this style of work did not suit the people any better than that manufactured by machinery, and also was not as profitable a business as was first supposed. He closed up his business in 1872. In these organ works there was a young man named D. F. Allmendinger, who had entered the works when first started, and mastered the business, and when Mr. Gartner closed his business he opened the Ann Arbor Organ Works. At first the business was but small and carried on in one part of his dwelling house, but in 1880 he built a frame factory 24x40 feet, and two-stories high. He has in his employ three workmen, and turns out 25 to 30 organs per year. His annual sales foot up $2,500. Mr. Allmendinger furnished three churches in Ann Arbor with pipe organs, and they gave general satisfaction. Although only doing a small business at present, yet he turns out pipe and reed organs of a good quality. The manufactory is situated on the northwest corner of First and Washington streets.

Keck Furniture Company.—In 1879 Mr. John Keck, of Ann Arbor, conceived the idea of forming a stock company to engage in the manufacture of furniture of the latest and most improved style and quality. He immediately went to work and in the same year the stock company was formed, consisting of 15 members, with W. D. Harriman, President; Charles Hiscock, Treasurer; John Keck, General Superintendent; Paul Snauble, Assistant Superintendent, with a capital stock of $25,000. Everything now being in readiness, a plot of ground 126x198 feet on the corner of 3d and —streets, was purchased, and the buildings necessary for the enterprise were immediately erected. They consist of a factory 40x75 feet, and three-stories high. In the basement of this building is located the planing-mill and heavy machinery; in the second story the carving and turning machinery is found; in the third story the furniture is finished and put together. From the factory the furniture is taken to the packing, painting and varnishing room, where it is put into shape for shipment to the different parts of the United States. This last building is 40x20 feet in size and two-stories high, while the storage room, only a few feet distant, is also the same size. The company uses about 250,000 feet of lumber annually, consisting of walnut, ash, butternut, sycamore, cottonwood, bass and whitewood, no pine lumber being used for any purpose. The drying kiln has a capacity of 20,000 feet and is always crowded to the utmost. The machinery is run by steam, the engine used being of 35-horse power. The factory gives employment to 75 men, and the only kind of furniture turned out is bedstead and bedroom sets. The company has increased from 15 to 21 stockholders, and the business has increased so as to make necessary the erection of more buildings, which will be accomplished this year (1881). The furniture manufactured is of the latest, best and most improved styles, and find a ready sale in all parts of the Union—as far east as New York, as far south as St. Louis and Cincinnati, and as far west as Iowa.

Coopers.—In 1865, a firm bearing the name of Dodsley & Spafford started a cooper shop on Detroit street, for the manufacture of apple, flour and tight barrels. For 14 years this firm did business in the old house on Detroit street, but in 1879 Mr. Spafford sold out his interest to his partner, Mr. H. B. Dodsley, and in the spring of 1880 Mr. Dodsley moved his shop into a building belonging to David Henning, of Chicago, and situated on Pontiac street, near Michigan Central depot. Here Mr. Dodsley has since run his business and now employs some seven men, and turns out about 20,000 barrels per year, which require some 200,000 staves. His flour and apple barrels are mostly marketed in Ann Arbor, while his tight barrels find a good market in Chicago and Detroit.

MEDICAL SPRINGS.

The Ann Arbor Medical Springs were purchased by Dr. Calvert and Prof. Chas. Gatchell, in the year 1878, and refitted up in good shape. The interior of the house was handsomely frescoed and tinted, and the bathing rooms all newly painted and furnished. A large swimming bath was added—a tank some 20 feet wide, 30 feet long and six feet deep, where a person could get warm and invigorating exercise in winter time. A new spring was also opened which flowed a constant stream of water, at the rate of 3,000 barrels a day. This was inclosed in a large brick reservoir, and all the water used about the establishment was supplied from this well. The establishment was under the charge of Prof. H. P. Gatchell, M. D., during the summer of 1878, while his son was in Europe. The house was burned in 1880.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

At a meeting of the village council, held Dec. 3, 1836, an ordinance was passed organizing a department for protection against fire. The village was divided into two wards, and a fire warden appointed in each ward. There were also to be appointed by the council a chief engineer, an assistant engineer and an assistant fire warden in each ward; a captain and lieutenant for each fire or hook and ladder company. These officers were to be appointed annually. A number of changes have been made in the department since that time; new companies have been organized and the efficiency of the department been increased. At present there are three engines, two hand and one steam engine, the latter being introduced in 1879, principally through the exertions of Dr. W. B. Smith. As a slight testimonial to the doctor, the steamer was named the "W. B. Smith."

While the department has not been at all times as efficient as desired by many, yet it has accomplished great good, and on more than one occasion saved the city from a destructive conflagration.

The department now consists of Defiance Hook and Ladder Company, Protection No. 1, Engine and Hose Company, Vigilant No. 2, Engine Company, Vigilant No. 2, Hose Company, Huron, No. 3, Engine and Hose Company. The Vigilant Engine Company have charge of the steamer.

At the annual election in April, 1880, the following officers were elected: Dr. Willard B. Smith, Chief Engineer; Daniel B. Fletcher, First Assistant Engineer; Albert A. Sorg, Second Assistant Engineer; L. F. Wade, Secretary; Charles H. Worden, Treasurer.

The department is composed of 165 members.

BAND.

The first band organized in Ann Arbor was in 1827, and was composed of the Mills brothers, seven in number—Elihu, Simeon, Augustus, Timothy, Lorin, Willard and Sylvester—Townsend Branch and Mr. Mallett. Their instruments were the clarinet, haut-boy, bassoon, flute and drum. The music would sound strange to the ears of the present generation. The first time the band played in public was on the 4th of July, 1827. As long as the brothers remained together, the organization was maintained. Old settlers remember with pleasure the happy hours spent in listening to the sweet melodies as discoursed by the Mills Brothers' Band.

MILITARY.

Notwithstanding the influence of its schools and the peaceable character generally of its citizens, a military company has nearly always been maintained in the city.

The first organization was that of the Frontier Guards, in 1829. Martin Davis was chosen captain; James Kingsley, 1st lieutenant; Edward Clark, 2d lieutenant. The company was afterward commanded by Edward Clark and Charles Thayer. It had an existence of about five years, and was succeeded in 1838 by the Washtenaw Guards, the first officers of which were: Ebenezer S. Cobb, Captain; Dan W. Kellogg, 1st Lieutenant; Linas Parker, 2d Lieutenant. The company was composed of the best citizens then living in Ann Arbor, and was splendidly drilled. On one occasion it drilled in a school of company in Detroit, for a handsome prize, which it succeeded in capturing. Again at Monroe it drilled in school of company and also school of battalion, receiving first prize for both drills. The company was largely indebted for superior drill to Col. John M. Berrien, a graduate of West Point. John C. Mundy and Charles H. Cavvel also commanded the company at different times. It had an organized existence for seven or eight years.

The Steuben Guards were next organized in 1859, under the command of Capt. William Roath. On the first call for troops in the war of the Rebellion, Capt. Roath and a portion of his men enlisted, and were in the first Bull Run battle. The City Guards were also organized in 1859, under command of John S. Mills. It was a short-lived company.

The "Porter Zouaves" were organized on the 21st day of September, 1868, with Byron R. Porter, Captain; Warren E. Walker, 1st Lieut.; Henry J. Vohn, 2d Lieut. In 1872 Captain Porter resigned and Warren E. Walker was promoted to fill vacancy. Samuel B. Revenaugh, Benjamin F. Knowlton and Thomas D. Bailey also, at different times, held commissions as Lieutenants. In 1874, under the law of the State requiring all militia to be uniformed alike, the Zouave organization was abandoned or merged into Company B,—Regiment, Michigan Militia. A new election for officers was held, and the following named elected:—Samuel B. Revenaugh, Captain; J. William Hangsterfer, 1st Lieut.; William Kay, 2d Lieut. The company retained its letter until 1877, when the militia of the State was re-organized. Being then the oldest organized company in the State it was made Co. A. January 1, 1879. Captain Revenaugh resigned, and Frank Emerick was elected to fill vacancy. In July, 1879, Captain Emerick resigned, and Charles H. Manley was elected to fill vacancy. Captain Manley was elected July, 1880, for the full term of two years. J. F. Schuh, 1st Lieut.; Charles E. Hiscock, 2d Lieut.

MASONIC.

Masonry was first introduced into Ann Arbor in 1826. On the institution of the lodge, several of the eminent men of the Territory honored the occasion with their presence. A ball was given in the evening at which were present Gen. Cass, Judge Dexter and others. The disappearance of Morgan shortly after was the occasion of many denouncing the order and using their influence against it. The Emigrant, established in 1829, was a strong Anti-Masonic paper. The excitement became so strong in this country it was deemed best to surrender their charter and await developments, the friends of the order believing that when the passions of men subsided the order would stand out in clear relief and above reproach. In the winter of 1845-'6 Oriental Lodge, No. 15, was organized. This was abandoned, and its place taken by Ann Arbor Lodge, No. 85, which flourished until 1871.

Golden Rule Lodge was chartered in 1856. Its first Master was the Hon. Chas. H. Richmond, who has been succeeded by Robert J. Price, A. T. Brengle, William A. Lovejoy, J. Roath, C. M. Jones, I. C. Handy. The present officials are: W. M., J. Roath; S. W., E. D. Lewis; J. W., John A. Gates; Treasurer, B. F. Watts; Secretary, N. D. Gates; S. D., Charles S. Fall; J. D., S. B. Revenaugh. Present membership about 116.

Washtenaw Chapter, No. 6, was organized October 15, 1849. The following is a list of its officers:—Ezra Platt, H. P.; Gilbert C. Bedell, King; David Tyler, Scribe; Martin Davis, C. H.; Wm. G. Tuttle, P. S.; Erastus Root, R. A. C.; Gilbert Shattuck, M. 3d V.; Hiram Becker, M. 2d V.; Robert S. Wilson, M. 1st V. Present officers are: B. F. Watts, H. P.; C. M. Jones, King; I. C. ODD FELLOWS.

This benevolent order, which has so rapidly spread over this country, was first established in this city in 1845, since which time it has had a prosperous career.

Washtenaw Lodge, No. 9, I. O. O. F., was organized March 27, 1845, with James E. Platt, James M. Welch, N. H. Eggleston, M. D. Howard and William J. Wells as charter members. No lodge in the country, in the same length of time, can show a more faithful record, it having but seldom ever missed a session on its regular lodge nights. The lodge has also numbered some representative men, having been represented by officers in the Grand Lodge of the State, and some of its number representing the State in the Grand Lodge of the United States. Norton R. Ramsdell and Jonathan Sprague, members of this lodge, have both been members of the Grand Lodge of the United States. Mr. Sprague has also been Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of the State two terms, and Grand Patriarch of the Encampment one term; Conrad Krapf was also Grand Patriarch one term. Washtenaw Lodge is the parent lodge of several, among which are Wyandotte, No. 10; Huron, No. 30, at Dexter; Tonquish, at Plymouth; Wolverine, No. 197, at Milan; Saline, No. 272; Otsenigo, No. 295, at Ann Arbor. The lodge has always paid sick benefits and exercised a watchful care over the families of deceased members. Its present officers are James H. Rogers, N. G.; A. W. Chase, V. G.; H. F. Morton, R. Sec.; J. Sprague, Per. Sec.; D. Cramer, Treas.

Otsenigo Lodge, No. 295, was organized in 1876, and has had a prosperous existence.

ANN ARBOR GERMAN AID ASSOCIATION.

This association was incorporated under the general law of the State, Nov. 2, 1865, and was organized for the purpose of aiding its members when suffering from disease, infirmity or necessity. Males not less than 21 years of age and not over 45 living within the city of Ann Arbor can become members on the conditions required. Since its organization it has had 241 names on its roll of membership, the number July 1, 1880, being 116. The association has received $11,020 from various sources, and expended $8,701.29 in supporting the sick and needy and in burial of the dead. Four dollars per week is allowed in case of sickness. Christian Hoffstetter is President; August De Fries, Recording Secretary; John G. Grossman, Corresponding Secretary.

MÆNNERCHOR.

This society was organized in 1868, its object being the improvement of the members in vocal music. Among those comprising the original membership were: Gottlieb Kutz, C. Schmid, John Eisele, Anton Eisele, August Grauff, Frank Nebel. Gottlieb Kutz was chosen Director and yet holds the position. The society at first met in a room of the Directors', and later in a room which they hired and fitted up for their own use. They now occupy nicely furnished rooms on the corner of Main and Liberty streets. The membership is about 70. Conrad Krapf, President; George Groesman, Vice-President; Christ. Lutz, Secretary; George Koch, Treasurer.

BEETHOVEN GESANG-VEREIN.

This society was organized April 27, 1880, for the purpose of the improvement of its members in artistic music. It has 14 active and 40 honorary members. Charles Miller, President; George Haller, Secretary; Prof. Reuben Kenepf, Director.

ANN ARBOR TURN-VEREIN.

This society was organized with the object of promulgating fellow feeling, and the encouragement of athletic exercise. The society prospered, and in 1873 purchased a tract of land comprising several acres, and located one-half mile southwest of the city. The price paid was $1,400. This park was fitted up for the purposes of the society, and a bowling alley, 65 feet in length, a gymnasium, swings, etc., were dispersed throughout the grounds.

On "tree planting" day in 1876, the society, aided by the citizens of Ann Arbor, planted numerous and beautiful trees to live and flourish and to perpetuate the memory of the Ann Arbor Turn-Verein throughout the future ages.

TEMPERANCE.

We do not profess to write a full history of the temperance work of Ann Arbor, as our space is too limited. The materials exist for a history of this matter that shall be of intense interest and of great local importance. Furthermore, while these materials of history exist, they are very difficult to obtain. The cause of temperance is like that of the Christian religion in this respect,—that it is found in a great variety of shapes and methods; in other words, it has taken upon itself the most remarkable form in the way of organizations. But unlike Christianity, which is historically traced through the various sects and societies, the cause of temperance seems to run through the more wonderful changes. As soon as one particular form of labor has lost its interest to the public, the friends of temperance re-organize, and are found laboring in a different manner. This makes it exceedingly difficult to give a true and accurate account of the wonderful work done by the temperance organization of Ann Arbor. We shall therefore give a brief history of the work from the first to the present time.

In 1828 or 1829 a grand wave of temperance swept over the whole land. In every city, village and hamlet the enthusiasm was caught, and although the signing of the pledge prohibited only the use of alcoholic liquors, wine, beer and cider not included, yet it was the saving of hundreds of men from drunkards' graves, and restored many men to the bosom of their families, who would have undoubtedly perished from the direct or indirect effect of the vile monster rum. A Mr. Page, of Ann Arbor, who came to the village in October, 1826, the first Presbyterian minister in the place, had occasion to visit Detroit, and while there drank in no small amount of the enthusiasm that was raging among the friends of the good and true. Upon returning to his humble home he conceived the idea of forming a temperance organization in this quiet little hamlet, and therefore a meeting was called in the Presbyterian church, then a small log house, and 12 persons responded to the appeal of the village pastor. Of the 12 persons present, Lorrin Mills and three of his brothers formed one-third of the small assemblage. An organization was effected, and named the "Temperance Society." This society met with great opposition at first, as it was customary at house and barn "raisings" to always have a jug of the "ardent" on hand, and nobody thought of assisting at such an occasion unless their spirits were kept up by pouring "spirits" down. These persons, and there were very few who did not coincide with them, considered it utterly impossible to dispense with whisky on such occasions, and therefore for several years the society had only a very feeble support from the general community. A couple of incidents relating to the effect this organization had on the custom and habits of the village and vicinity may be of interest to the readers of this volume.

When Mr. Page came back from Detroit filled with enthusiasm and energy for this great movement, he chanced to meet Simeon Mills, who had come from New York a year previous, and had brought with him a barrel of whisky to keep off the "shakes and ager." They were discussing the question of the effect that this vile stuff had on the mind and constitution of man. Mr. Page remarked that he could get along well enough without whisky, and needn't drink one drop to assist him in his ministerial or worldly labors. This was a surprise to Mr. Mills, who had always supposed that whisky was an essential element of a person's diet, but believing firmly in Mr. Page's veracity, and about half persuaded in the justice and feasibility of carrying out the projected movement, he grasped his friend's hand, and spoke with earnestness the words: "Mr. Page, if you can get along without whisky, I know I can," and he forthwith proceeded to turn his whisky into vinegar. This vow Mr. Mills faithfully kept, and was a prime mover in all matters relating to the advance of the temperance cause.

On another occasion, that sturdy pioneer, Horace Carpenter, wished to raise a barn, but thinking he would try a new experiment on the much-talked-of temperance movement, he went around to each and all of his neighbors, as was the custom, and invited them to the raising of the barn, but was sure to tell each and every one that the raising should be accomplished without the aid of any whisky. This caused each to open his eyes, and wonder if "Uncle Horace had gone clear out of his senses," as such a thing was unheard of, and surely couldn't be done. Nearly every one said that they would go, but "didn't guess anybody else would." Mr. Carpenter made almost the same reply to these remarks by saying: "This barn is going to be raised without whisky, or the timber may lie there and rot." The day for the raising came, and also the neighbors. The wonderful feat was successfully accomplished, and Horace Carpenter had the honor of raising the first building in Washtenaw county without the aid of ardent spirits.

In 1840, the "Washingtonian" wave was ushered into Ann Arbor with as much zeal as elsewhere in this broad land. Meetings were held nightly in the court-house, and different churches, and the cause ably sustained by the best citizens of the village. The Sons of Temperance, Maine Law and the Women's Crusade were all pushed forward with earnestness and perseverance. The next great blast of temperance that swept over the land was called the Red Ribbon movement, and Ann Arbor did her full share of duty in the wonderful cause.

The following review of the city temperance societies as they exist in 1881, must be of special interest:

W. C. T. U.—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Ann Arbor, is the oldest in the city, having been founded in March, 1874. Its members are quiet but indefatigable laborers in this great field, and maintain a weekly prayer-meeting besides conducting one service each month on Sunday afternoon, at the Opera House. The following are the officers, whose terms expire April 1, 1882: President, Mrs. J. F. Bishop; Vice-President, Miss M. S. Brown; Secretary, Mrs. Phebe Steele; Asst. Secretary, Mrs. E. N. Gilbert; Cor. Secretary, Miss Sarah Fletcher; Treasurer, Mrs. M. J. Dygert.

Ann Arbor Reform Club.—This famous organization came into existence March 26, 1877, and has been one of the hardest working societies of any kind ever organized in the city. Its power for good has been felt near and far, and its fame spread to the utmost confines of the State. Some of the most eloquent temperance speakers and workers in the nation have been brought to the city and county through its exertions, and strong temperance sentiments planted, which are growing vigorously. The club has furnished speakers and maintained meetings for four years in nearly every township in the county where the people have taken any interest in the work, and much good has been accomplished through their efforts. The officers and workers are largely composed of men who have turned from an intemperate life, and consequently can appeal to intemperate people with great sympathy and feeling. The club is officered as follows: President, John Schumacher; 1st Vice-President, Chas. M. Jones; 2d, Fred Esslinger; 3d, Chas. Boylan; Recording Secretary, Jas. B. Saunders; Financial Secretary, B. J. Conrad; Treasurer, David J. Fisher; Steward, Wm. Copeland; 1st Marshal, Chris. Schumacher; 2d Marshal, Wm. Copeland; Sergeant-at-Arms, Wm. Mathews; Janitor, Wm. Fisher.

St. Thomas Society.—In the spring of 1877, shortly after the Red Ribbon boys organized, Father Van Erp, whose memory is green with good deeds, took hold of the temperance work in his Church and organized the St. Thomas Temperance Benevolent Society. While its founder lived the society flourished, having at one time a membership of 100. Members who have maintained good standing for six months are entitled in case of sickness to $3 per week for a period of 13 weeks. The following are the officers whose terms expire Jan. 1, 1882: President, Andrew Norton; Vice-President, John Flynn; Treasurer, Dan J. Ross; Financial Secretary, Peter Dignan; Corresponding Secretary, Frank O'Hearn; Counselors, John O'Grady, sr., and William Clancy, sr.; Marshal, John O'Hara.

University Temperance Association.—This society was organized in the fall of 1878, with Prof. E. Olney as President. The main object is to obtain signatures to the total-abstinence pledge among the students, and it has been eminently successful, 600 names being obtained the first year. Committees are appointed by the society for the various departments, and from the law alone during 1880-'1, 180 names are reported. During the visit of Mr. Bain to the city in the fore part of 1880-'1, 170 students signed the pledge. It is thought 800 of the students have given their names to the temperance cause within the year. The following is the list of officers: President, Prof. E. Olney; Secretary, Prof. T. P. Wilson; Treasurer, Prof. W. J. Herdman; Chairman Ex. Committee, Prof. J. B. Steere, with two members from each department.

U. of M. W. C. T. U.—The lady students of the University, about 1878, organized a branch society known as the University of Michigan Woman's Christian Temperance Union, having in view the same objects as the unions all over the country. Several prominent lady speakers delivered addresses under its auspices in University Hall. This organization has a membership of 35, and is officered as follows: President, Miss Mary Clark; Vice-President, Anna Underhill; Secretary, Fanny P. Andrews; Treasurer, Mary Harding.

A. A. H. S. T. A.—Which translated means the Ann Arbor High School Temperance Association, came into existence in November, 1878. It has a membership of 250 students, and has held public meetings at various times, but its principal object is to keep the high-school students enrolled under the temperance banner. Its officers are: President, E. A. Jenkins; Secretary, Carrie W. Frazer.

Juvenile Temperance Union.—This organization is the bottom round of the ladder. Its object is to take the little ones as soon as they are able to understand, and enroll them in this temperance army. It is a training school, as it were, for the next round above, the high school society, and so on up the ladder. It meets every Tuesday, and is under the immediate supervision of the Christian Union. The following are the officers:—President, Mrs. R. E. Frazer; Vice Presidents, Ernest Perry, Nellie Ames; Secretary, Mrs. D. M. Tyler; Assistant Secretary, Hattie Barnett; Treasurer, Mrs. W. Thomas; Assistant Treasurer, Willie Thomas.

Royal Templars, Ann Arbor Council.—This is a new organization in the city, a branch of the society known as the Royal Templars of Temperance, whose object is life insurance, and allowing none but strictly temperance people in its membership. It was organized Monday evening, Jan. 31, 1881, with 24 charter members, and the following elected officers:—Select Councilor, C. B. Davison; Vice Councilor, H. E. H. Bower; Past Councilor, L. B. Kellogg; Chaplain, E. A. Spence; Recording Secretary, J. B. Saunders; Financial Secretary, Geo. W. Moore; Treasurer, Nelson Sutherland; Herald, David Fisher; Guard, L. D. White; Sentinel, Henry Richards.

The first anniversary of the Ann Arbor Reform Club commenced in Ann Arbor, on Wednesday, March 27, 1878. The exercises were opened by the reading of the history of the club by R. B. Pope, and this being followed by a poem by D. Bethune Duffield, of Detroit. On Thursday evening, Jerome Murray, of Toledo, Ohio, told what he had passed through while leading an intemperate life. Mr. Murray spoke with a tone of voice that carried conviction to every heart. He presented the temperance cause in such a light that at the conclusion of his remarks, many names were enrolled on their pledge. Friday evening came, and although the weather was rainy and disagreeable, the attendance was so large as to turn many away, there being not even standing room in the building. The speaker for the evening was the Rev. Mr. Hildreth, of Grand Rapids, and he made one of the most eloquent and persuasive appeals for the cause which leads men to be more true to themselves and family, than ever was heard before in the city. At the close of his clear and forcible argument, some 65 men were added to this noble band. On Saturday eve. Joshua W. Smith, of the Detroit Reform Club, and Prof. Dickie, of Albion College, delivered eloquent addresses in behalf of the cause they loved so well. Mr. Duffield, by special request, read a poem written for the Detroit Club, that was read at their last anniversary. Again the pledges were laid upon the desk, and 42 more men were willing to “dare to do right.” Sunday evening was the crowning glory of this extended temperance feast. The Regents of the University kindly lent the society the University Hall, and when evening came, a very large audience, estimated at 2,500 persons, were present to listen and take part in the exercises. Mr. R. E. Frazer was the orator, and well and nobly did he do his duty. He caused such an enthusiasm among that large audience that when he closed nearly 250 persons were convinced that “truth will prevail,” and were glad to enroll themselves on that ever-increasing pledge. Election day then came, and the ladies of the White Ribbon Club and their many friends gave the members and such others as wished, in fact to almost every body, some good and substantial refreshments, for which they were duly thanked. In the evening another public meeting was held, and Joshua Smith, Barney Morrison, Mrs. Mary E. Foster, and R. E. Frazer made addresses. When the roll of names to the pledge was added up late at night, it was found that 134 had "put their shoulder to the wheel," and intended to help along the good cause. On Tuesday evening the last meeting was held, and addresses made by local speakers, and the members of the club. About 33 more names were added to the pledge, that they will never be ashamed of as long as life lasts, making a grand total of 566 names, and increasing the membership roll to 1,866. Thus ended the first grand anniversary of the Ann Arbor Reform Club. An important feature of the club is the semi-monthly lectures, which are well attended, and given by the most learned and experienced professors of science and religion throughout the State.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

On subsequent pages are given personal sketches of many of the most prominent citizens of Ann Arbor city and township, which will be found of interest equal to the more general history.

Eugene B. Abel, junior member of the dry goods house of Bach & Abel, at Ann Arbor, Mich., was born at Glen, Montgomery county, New York, in 1854, where he spent his earlier years. In 1868 he entered Ann Arbor high school, where he pursued his studies three years, when he returned to New York. On the death of his brother, in 1877, he came to Ann Arbor to continue his interest in the business, and became a partner in the firm of Bach & Abel, the firm name continuing as before. Although one of the young business men of this city, Mr. Abel has become one of the first, and in his connection with the house has done a large amount of business.

Charles K. Adams, LL. D., Professor of History in the University of Michigan, was born Jan. 24, 1835, at Derby, Vt. His parents, Charles and Susan M. Adams, moved to that State from Massachusetts a short time before his birth. His early education was obtained in the common schools and the Academy of Derby. Having a special fondness for mathematics, he acquired considerable proficiency as a surveyor. In 1855 he went to Iowa, where, after a year of preparatory study at the Denmark Academy, he entered the University of Michigan as a classical student. In 1861 he received the degree of A. B., but remained in the University during the following year, pursuing a post-graduate course in history. In 1862, during Professor White's absence in Europe, Mr. Adams was appointed instructor in history, with roll charge of the classes in that branch of study; the following year he was appointed Assistant Professor of History and Latin, and when, in 1867, Professor White resigned, he was appointed to the Professorship in History, which he has since filled. On accepting this position he obtained leave of absence, for one year of study and travel in Europe, and visited the principal universities in Germany, France and Italy. His lectures at the University have been largely attended. Professor Adams has been a frequent contributor to the North American Review, and other literary journals. In 1874 he published Democracy and Monarchy, in France, a work which was received with great favor by the scholars of Europe and America. He is the author of a Syllabus of 2 courses of lectures on Modern History; one on Eng. Gov't., and one on the Rise of Prussia; also Questions and Notes on the Const'l Hist. of England. He will soon publish a Bibliographical Manual, descriptive of the best historical works, for the use of students, general readers and librarians, containing sketches of about one thousand works and giving three courses of reading to be followed. In 1879 the University of Chicago conferred on him the honorary degree of LL. D. At the Psi Upsilon Convention held at Michigan University, May 26, 27, 1879, with the Phi Chapter, Professor Adams was made the President of the convention. In 1880 he was elected Dean of the faculty of Literature, Science and Arts of the University of Michigan. In August, 1883, he married Mrs. A. D. Mudge.

Robert K. Ailes, machinist and manufacturer, Ann Arbor, was born in Lancaster county, Pa., in 1819, and son of Amos and Elizabeth Ailes. At an early age Robert was apprenticed to learn the trade of a millwright. In 1840 he went to Jackson, Mich., where he worked at his trade for a short time, then coming to Ann Arbor, where he located permanently. His business is of such a nature as to require his almost constant presence in the different mills throughout the State; so he really knows no home, although his family is at Ann Arbor. In 1863 he married Hulda Ann Bentley. Mr. Ailes was largely engaged in the foundry business with Messrs. Tripp and Price, but of late years has been connected with Mr. Grattan, a well-known skillful machinist of Ann Arbor, and the firm enjoy a large trade.

Mr. Britten has charge of the Ann Arbor Reform Club; was formerly a teacher of vocal music; is now a member of the Knights of Honor; has always identified himself with Church matters, and takes particular interest in the welfare of the First Baptist Church, of Ann Arbor, of which he is a member.

Rev. John Wesley Brooks, Pastor Second M. E. Church (colored), was born a slave at Fredericksburg, Maryland, April, 1798. His parents were Louis and Fanny (Williams) Brooks. When Mr. Brooks was quite young, his master, Richard Jones, took him to Ontario county, N. Y., and there sold him, his mother and two sisters to Phineas P. Bates. According to the slave laws of New York, at that period, a slave after reaching his 28th age was free, but Mr. Bates continued to hold Mr. Brooks until his 30th year, when, through the influence of John C. Spencer, a lawyer of Ontario county, N. Y., he was freed, and immediately became the paid employe of his benefactor. He remained with Mr. Spencer one year, and in 1828, made his way to the Territory of Michigan, first locating at Ann Arbor. He soon after purchased 80 acres of land in Pittsfield tp., for which he paid $100. He remained on the farm 25 years, and then sold it to James Nichols. He returned to Ann Arbor, where he has since resided. Mr. Brooks was first married in New York, in 1833, to Lucy Ann Little, a native of New Hampshire, Conn., and one bound out until of age. Five children were born to this marriage, all of whom are deceased. Mrs. Brooks subsequently died, and after Mr. Brooks came to this county he married Elizabeth Moore, a native of Ohio. Mrs. Brooks died in March, 1869. He was again married in 1870, to Louisa Ray, who was born at Syracuse, N. Y., in 1849. Mr. Brooks experienced religion at the age of 18 years, and has been a member of the M. E. Church for 70 years. He was ordained to preach by Rev. Swift, and for five years after his arrival in Michigan. He was engaged in the missionary work. Rev. Mr. Brooks is one of the oldest settlers in Washtenaw county, and one well respected by all classes of society.

Jacob F. Bross, wagon and carriage manufacturer, 67 S. Main st., Ann Arbor, was born near Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1845. Two years later his father, Jacob Bross, came to America, and settled at Ann Arbor. He opened a carriage manufacturing establishment, and under his instruction young Jacob gained a proficiency in that business, that has made him one of the most skillful workmen in Southern Michigan. Jacob Bross died in 1875. In 1872, Mr. Jacob F. Bross married Catherine Fritz, and 4 children—3 boys and 1 girl, have been born to them. In 1868 Mr. Bross built his extensive wagon shops in Ann Arbor, and at present turns out some first-class work. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and from 1851 to 1858 was Treasurer of the Board of Regents of the University of Michigan.

Daniel B. Brown, retired farmer, was born at Plymouth, Windsor county, Vt. June 12, 1805, and is the second son of Daniel and Polly (Jennison) Brown, natives of Massachusetts. When Daniel was seven years of age, his parents removed to Owego, Broome county, N. Y., eight years after ground had been broken on the famous Erie canal. Daniel's father secured a contract on this stupendous work, and was assisted by his son, until the completion of the canal, a period of seven years. He took a drove of cattle to New York city, and after returning home, purchased a canal boat, with horses, and engaged in traffic on the Erie canal for some time. In October, 1826, Mr. Brown came to Detroit with a boat load of salt. While stopping at a public tavern in that city he was induced to take a look at Washtenaw county. He did so, making the entire distance on horseback, arriving at Ann Arbor village about nine o'clock at night. The next morning he walked out of the village and took a good view of the surrounding country. After a stroll of two hours he returned to the old log cabin, kept by John Allen, ordered his horse and started for Detroit, with a fixed determination that Washtenaw county should be his future home. At Woodruff's Grove he met Lucius Lyons, then U. S. Surveyor, afterward U. S. Senator, and they rode to Detroit together. When he arrived at Detroit he sold out his cargo of salt, and returned to Lockport, N. Y. He disposed of his interests in New York, and invested the proceeds in dried fruits. Shipping the same to Ann Arbor, he embarked the same day, experiencing very severe weather in his voyage on Lake Erie. Arriving at Ann Arbor he rented a small frame building about where the First National Bank now stands, using the fore part for a store room, and the rear part for a dwelling. In 1827 his brother Anson came from New York and brought with him the first general assortment of goods ever offered for sale in Washtenaw county. The brothers continued in business together about four years. His brother purchased the water-power of the Huron river, in 1850, about where the Sinclair Mills now stand, and in connection with Col. Dwight Kellogg and Edward Fuller, built the first flouring mill. Mr. Brown's business with the Indians was quite brisk, there being comparatively few white settlers. Furs, cranberries and wild honey, were frequently taken in exchange for goods and shipped to New York city. In 1834, his brother Anson died. In 1835 he was appointed Sheriff of Washtenaw county, by Gov. Johnson. The arrival of his commission was the first intimation he had had of the proffered honor. He served with marked ability for some three years. Shortly after the expiration of his term of office he became associated in business with John C. Mundy, a nephew of Gov. Mundy. The store room was on the corner of Main and Ann streets, where now stands Hill's Opera House. The Ann Arbor postoffice was in the store, Mr. Charles Thayer acting as Postmaster, and also a clerk for the "firm." They continued in this connection for two years, when the partnership was dissolved. Mr. Brown received the appointment of Superintendent of the now famous Michigan Central R. R., which was then owned and operated by the State. The road had been completed to Ann Arbor, and under Mr. Brown's efficient supervision the work was pushed vigorously forward, and the road built to Jackson. Mr. Brown remained in his official position until the road passed into the possession of the present company. In 1851 Mr. Brown went to California, returning to Ann Arbor in 1853. He has been living 50 years at his present residence, and during all his business and mercantile life, has never relinquished his farm, but successfully carried on the business up to the present time. Mr. Brown was one of the original members in the organization of the Baptist Church, of Ann Arbor, and has officiated as Trustee since its organization. He was a Deacon in that denomination for 47 years, and as many as 20 associate deacons have labored with him from time to time. He has made a very faithful and efficient officer, and an earnest worker in the cause of Christ. Mr. Brown has always evinced a kindly disposition in all things worthy of his charity or benevolence. He was one of the eight men who donated the land now covered by the University of Michigan, and its buildings. Of these eight persons only three survive, E. W. Morgan, Capt. Charles Thayer and Daniel B. Brown, all residents of Ann Arbor tp. Mr. Brown was married in 1826, to Miss Ann Vickery, a daughter of William Vickery, of New York. Of the 6 children sent to bless this union only 3 are living—Lettie, wife of Atwood Brooks, a learned professor at Goliad, Texas; Mattie, wife of Dr. Wilder, of Chicago, Ills., and Lucy. One son, Anson, was a Lieutenant in the Union army during the civil war, and was killed in battle. James and Mary died in this county. Mr. Brown was formerly an "old-line Whig," but was present at the organization of the Republican party in 1854, at Jackson, Mich., and immediately enlisted under its banner, an act which has never caused him one pang of regret, but filled his cup with joy many times. Daniel B. Brown is an old and honored pioneer of Washtenaw county, and is probably known as well as any man within the limits of the county. He has passed the greater part of his life here, and has always maintained a name for honesty, integrity and uprightness, second to none.

A portrait of Mr. Brown is given elsewhere in this work.

William P. Brown, farmer, Ann Arbor tp.; P. O., Ann Arbor; was born at West Walton, Norfolk Co., England, Dec. 31, 1814. He received a limited education in his native land, and spent his early life at farm work for various men at what would now be considered, in this country, very poor pay. In 1837 he came to America, arriving at New York June 15 of that year. He came via canal and lake to Detroit. From there he walked to Dexter, and when he arrived there he had but one English half sovereign to begin life with in a new country. During that summer he worked for other men, and in the fall of that year he, with Mr. Harrison, purchased the w. half of se. quarter of sec. 6, Ann Arbor tp. To make the first payment on this land, Mr. Brown turned in a watch for $20.00, which it had taken the savings of four years' labor in England to buy. During the four succeeding years he and Mr. Harrison kept bachelor's hall in a little house 12x15, which they had built. June 5, 1843, he was married to Miss Nancy A. Yocum, of Lyndon tp. To them were born 3 sons and 1 daughter. Of these, 1 son and 1 daughter are now living. Mrs. Brown was a sister of the Hon. John K. Yocum, of Lyndon tp. She died Dec. 31, 1848. April 2, 1849, he was married to Miss Mary Foster, of Lyndon. Her parents were pioneers in this county. To them have been born 1 son and 1 daughter, both of whom are living. Before coming to America Mr. Brown was a member of the Methodist Church, and since coming to this country has been connected with the Church of that denomination at Ann Arbor. He was a strong anti-slavery man, and was a Whig until the organization of the Republican party, since when he has been a Republican.

Miss Carrie Bunker, dress and cloak maker, Ann Arbor, has been engaged in this business since 1879, and enjoys an enviable reputation as a fitter and cutter of more than ordinary ability. Miss Bunker is thoroughly systematic in her manner, and enjoys the patronage of the leading fair sex of Ann Arbor and vicinity.

Lawrence D. Burch, correspondent and author, was born in Seneca Co., N. Y., in 1831. He removed to Lima, Mich., many years ago, where he received a liberal education. He was married to Emily A. Dunning, a daughter of Zoda D. and Mary (Collamer) Dunning. In 1855 Mr. B. settled in Livingston Co., and afterward resided at Grass Lake and Clinton, and from the latter place he removed to Ann Arbor, where he embarked in the grocery business. When the civil war commenced he enlisted, and served faithfully till its close. For nine years Mr. Burch has been a correspondent of the Industrial Age, a paper originated by Dr. Ford, of Dundee, and now ably edited and owned by Charles Bliss, a graduate of Michigan University.

Zenas Burd (deceased) was born at Westmoreland, Oneida Co., N. Y., Sept. 16, 1803. He came to Wayne Co., Michigan, in Oct., 1825, and was married to Amanda Rider, Jan. 25, 1829. Eight children were born to this marriage—Francis E., Elizabeth Ann, Marietta, David Orville, George Alfred, Edgar Zenas, Ellen Maria and Amanda Alice. Mrs. Burd died Jan. 29, 1848, and on Nov. 29, of the same year, Mr. B. married Sally Ann Howard, of Salem tp., Washtenaw county. She died June 6, 1853, and Mr. Burd was again married Dec. 18, 1853, to Eliza Newman, a native of England, who settled in Northfield tp. about 1835. Mr. Burd lived in the latter township nine years after marriage, and then removed to Ann Arbor, where he died in 1870. He was an earnest Christian, and an active member of the M. E. Church, in which body he officiated as Trustee and Elder. He was a member of the building committee that supervised the erection of their present handsome structure on State street.

J. C. Burkhart (deceased) was one of the early settlers of Washtenaw Co. He was born in Germany, where he learned the carpenter and joiner's trade. He was married in Freedom tp., to Mary Fagle, and of the 9 children born to them, 4 are yet living—Lydia, wife of T. Thompson, Ann Arbor; C. F., Emanuel and Mary. J. C. Burkhart, jr. (deceased), was born in this county in 1848, where he learned his trade, and ultimately became one of the first dealers in harness in the city of Ann Arbor. He was very successful in his business, and when he died he left a wife and 5 children very comfortably provided for. One of the sons, C. F. Burkhart, carries one of the largest stocks of harness in Ann Arbor.

Peter N. Burlingame (deceased) was born in Dutchess Co., N. Y., in 1806, residing there until 1824, when he removed to Oneida Co., and engaged in farming. In 1832 he married Eliza Geer, a daughter of Thomas Geer, a hotel proprietor. In 1854, he settled in Ann Arbor tp., where he bought 160 acres of land, mostly improved. Three years later, on account of ill health, he sold his farm, and moved into Ann Arbor city, where he purchased valuable city property. He died in 1880 at Ann Arbor. He was an honored citizen of Washtenaw Co., and for nearly half a century a worthy member of the M. E. Church. Four children survive him—Thomas, who married Kittie Holden, of Ann Arbor tp.; Casarine Nichols, of Beloit, Wis.; Mary E. ~~Burd~~ of Northfield tp., and Imogene Sutton. The elder of the children, Daniel, for many years a messenger on the C., M. & St. P. R. R., was killed in a railroad collision. Charles E. (deceased) married Lena Bartlett, of Ann Arbor.

William Button (deceased) was born in Madison Co., N. Y., in 1819, and grew to mature years in Medina Co., and received a liberal education in the public schools. At an early day he removed to Flat Rock, Mich., where, in 1867, he was united in marriage to Mrs. Frances Ferring, a daughter of Joseph Groveland, Canada. For a number of years Mr. Button was proprietor of the Goodwin House, a well-known tavern in the early days of Detroit. He subsequently purchased a farm of 160 acres in Wayne Co., Mich. Thus has been briefly recorded a sketch of a man who, while unostentatious in his daily intercourse with men, was uniformly respected in the several communities wherein he resided.

Dr. J. Calvert, practicing physician, Jackson, Mich., was reared in Canada, where he received his literary education. He attended Michigan University at Ann Arbor, and from there went to New York city, where he graduated from a well-known Homeopathic medical college. He then located at Chelsea, in this county, and there met with flattering success. In 1868 he removed to Jackson, where his skill as a physician and surgeon have gained for him a lucrative practice. In 1860, at Oxford, Canada, he married Mary J. Burch, and 2 children have been born to them—William B., an attendant at Michigan University, and Agnes, a student at Union School, Ann Arbor. Mrs. Calvert is a native of Toronto, Canada.

Horace Carpenter was born in Locke, Cayuga (now Tompkins) Co., N. Y., Dec. 1, 1805. He was raised a "farmer's boy," and assisted his father on the farm until the age of 17. His early educational advantages were somewhat limited, but possessing a remarkable thirst for knowledge, he was in the habit of sitting in the corner by the old Dutch oven, and poring over the pages of the family Bible or some old history, his only light being the warm, red glow from the old-time fireplace. At the age of 17 he engaged in the carpenter and joiner's trade, and labored faithfully at this branch of business for over 15 years. In 1826 his father, Ezra Carpenter, was seized with the "Western fever," and determined to see for himself the wonderful country which had caused so many to forsake comfortable homes in the East, and take up their abode in the fair and beautiful region. Horace accompanied his father, and in May of the same year they arrived at Detroit. Remaining there but a short time they proceeded westward to this county during the summer season. Mr. Carpenter and his son were well pleased with the new country and its few but hospitable inhabitants, so they both decided to cast their fortunes for the remainder of their lives with the citizens of Washtenaw county. Mr. Carpenter settled in Pittsfield tp., and being a surveyor assisted in locating many of the farms of this county. He was a member of the

First Presbyterian Church of Ann Arbor, and was soon selected as Elder, faithfully discharging the duties of that office until the autumn of 1829, when, on the organization of a Church of that denomination at Ypsilanti, he, from a high sense of duty, sacrificed his private feeling, and removed his membership to the latter place. In his new Church relation he sustained the offices of both Elder and Deacon until the time of his death, this latter sad event occurring Feb. 17, 1841. Mr. Carpenter was a faithful Christian, and an earnest worker in the vineyard of our Lord. He was a very benevolent man, and a warm supporter of anything pertaining to truth and morality. He labored hard to improve the land in the locality wherein he resided, and the county in general, and his loss was deeply mourned by all the citizens of "fair Washtenaw."

Mr. Carpenter was married Sept. 20, 1826, to Miss Celia Bradley. There were no children born to Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter, but they took under their care and protection 4 little ones, 2 of whom were adopted, and lived to see them grow up honored and respected by all. Mrs. Carpenter was a native of Lee, Massachusetts, but her parents removed to another part of the State when she was an infant. She was laid at rest in this county, May 25, 1878, after a life of well-spent usefulness, and died in the hope of a blissful immortality. Mr. Carpenter was married again on Oct. 1, 1879, to Miss Ann A. Stevens, of Lodi tp. She is a native of Geneva, N. Y., and emigrated with her parents to this county at an early day. She is a very estimable lady, and one well fitted to be the helpmate of this worthy and honored citizen. Mr. Carpenter was a member of the Free-Soil party in early times, and was their candidate for Sheriff when there were but six persons who voted that ticket in Washtenaw county. He was Supervisor for a great many years, and in 1862 was elected County Treasurer. He then removed to Ann Arbor, where he has since resided. Mr. Carpenter was a firm and uncompromising anti-slavery man, and assisted to a great extent in molding the minds of the people in favor of abolition of that cursed evil. In connection with Munnis Kenny he founded the Washtenaw County Mutual Insurance Co., that now numbers its members by hundreds, all of the first citizens of this prosperous county. He is a life-member of the Washtenaw County Agricultural Society, and was its President for three years. While officiating in this position, the Society purchased their beautiful grounds in the city of Ann Arbor, and erected the handsome buildings that adorn the place. Horace Carpenter is traveling down the hill of life very fast, and his locks are frosted with the snows of many winters, yet he still retains the greater part of his mental and physical faculties. Before many years the footstep that in days of yore was heard along the busy streets of Ann Arbor, will be listened to no more; the voice of him who proclaimed the right of the colored man to be free and independent, will be hushed forever; the form that was wont to mingle with the poor and the needy, the joyful and the sorrowful, the rich and the poor, will be laid away in the silent tomb; but the consolation to the numerous friends and acquaintances will be found in these beautiful lines:

We will meet you again, where we never grow old,
By the river of life, on the streets made of gold.

Mr. Carpenter is an active member of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw County, and a member of the Historical Committee, and in that connection has assisted the publisher of this work to a great extent in collecting and preparing the manuscript; and as a member of the Revisory Committee, he has worked faithfully and earnestly. The publishers wish to return thanks to this noble pioneer for his efforts in behalf of the pioneers and compilers of this volume.

Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter will be found on pages 510 and 511 of this work.

Will Casparu, baker and grocer, Ann Arbor, was born in Germany in 1843. He married at Detroit, Mich., in 1863, Catherine Meuth, a native of Germany. Five children have been sent to bless this alliance. Mr. C. is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and an excellent singer, having held a position in the choir of that Church for several years. He established his present business in 1876, and by hard work has built up a very remunerative trade.

Dr. Alvin Wood Chase, physician, and author of the celebrated Dr. Chase's Receipt Book, was born in Cayuga county, N. Y., in 1817, son of Benjamin Chase, of Massachusetts. When Alvin was 11 years old his parents located near Buffalo, N. Y., where he grew to manhood, receiving a very limited education in a log school-house. His desire for knowledge was so great, coupled with an ambition peculiar to his naturally energetic disposition, that he far outstripped his more dilatory companions of that humble institute of learning. When 17 years old he left New York and found employment on the Maumee river, in the meantime devoting his spare moments to study. In 1840 he located at Dresden, Ohio, where, during the spring of 1841, he married Martha Shutts, daughter of Henry and Martha Shutts, natives of New York. To this noble and high-minded wife and mother may be attributed much of the success that followed Dr. Chase during his long and eventful career. From the days of his boyhood the Doctor always evinced a desire to study medicine, and accordingly awaited with impatience the time when he might become a member of the medical fraternity. After many wanderings he settled at Ann Arbor, in 1856, when to his intense delight he was enabled to vigorously prosecute his studies in what was to be his future life-work. He attended lectures and studied laboriously during the years 1857 and 1858, in the meantime graduating from the Eclectic Institute of Cincinnati, Ohio. Prior to 1869 he traveled over a large portion of the Union, practicing his profession and acquiring valuable knowledge, only gained by practical experience, which proved a good foundation for the wonderful book which afterward gained such great celebrity. His first edition, like all subsequent ones, proved a great success, and soon placed him on the high road to fortune, as it were. In 1864 he built the first part of that magnificent structure that still bears his name. It stands on the corner of Maine street and Miller avenue, and was completed in 1868. At this latter date some 50 hands found constant and remunerative employment within its walls, and the hospitality and liberality of the Doctor to his employes and the citizens of Ann Arbor, were always subjects of admiring comment. In 1873 he published his second edition, of which over 60,000 copies were sold, and it is safe to remark that over a million copies of this wonderful work have found their way into the homes of this and foreign lands. A few years ago Dr. Chase was considered one of the wealthiest citizens of Ann Arbor; losses by thousands and tens of thousands have reduced his finances, but in heart, action, and manliness of purpose, he stands to-day a conspicuous example of what energy, perseverance and indomitable will may accomplish. He has long been identified with the Methodist Church of Ann Arbor, to which he has from time to time donated large sums of money. He was once nominated for Mayor of Ann Arbor, but business compelled him to decline the generous honor. The storms of life have swept with almost resistless fury around the now aged physician, and a few of the prejudices that characterize the human family, have perhaps found a resting place within the heart of this philanthropist; and yet, when the last chapter shall have been entered in the ledger of life, the account will probably have been equally balanced; and when the last rites shall have been performed, and the aged veteran laid away beneath the shadow of the silent tomb, it may be literally and truthfully said, that he lived "with malice toward none, and charity to all."

Charles Gridley Clark, Postmaster, Ann Arbor, was born in Webster tp., Wash-tenaw county, June 4, 1831, and is a son of Rev. C. G. and Elizabeth (Platt) Clark, natives of Connecticut, of English ancestry. His parents were married in Ann Arbor, never having met each other until a few months before marriage. In 1829 Mr. Clark came to this county and settled in Webster tp. Mr. Clark received his primary education at the district schools, and prepared for college under Prof. Nutting, at the Lodi Academy. He entered the sophomore class of the Western Reserve College at Hudson, Ohio, remaining there one year. He then returned to Michigan and entered Michigan University, in the junior class, graduating from that institution in 1854. While in college Mr. Clark's eyes failed him, and after graduating he returned to the farm, and remained there until the fall of 1860. He then entered the employ of the Ann Arbor Journal, and in October, 1868, entered the office of the Ann Arbor Courier. In January, 1869, he became assistant editor, continuing as such until the following September, when he assumed editorial charge. He remained in the latter position until May, 1874, when he was appointed, by President Grant, Postmaster of Ann Arbor, which position he has since filled. Mr. Clark was formerly a Whig, but was a member of the convention which met at Jackson, July 6, 1854, and where the great Republican party was formed. He was Justice of Peace in Webster tp. for some years, and served in the same office at Ann Arbor from 1866 to 1870. He has been a member of the Presbyterian Church for 29 years, and Deacon and Trustee for 11 years. Mr. Clark was married Jan. 15, 1856, to Arabella H. Matthews, daughter of Solomon and Arabella Matthews, pioneers of Webster tp.

They have 3 children—Esther A., Assistant Postmaster; Alice E., wife of C. C. Huff, of Ann Arbor, and Marian A.

Gen. Edward Clark, of Ann Arbor, was born at Derby, New Haven Co., Conn., Feb. 5, 1807. His parents were Samuel P. and Hannah (Gibbs) Clark, old residents of that State. When he was but a child his parents removed to Skaneateles, N. Y., where he was chiefly educated. Soon after his father died, and his mother went to live with her brother, near by. In 1821, by fire, his mother lost quite heavily, and Mr. Clark left school to take care of himself. He engaged in a store at Auburn, where he remained two years and then went into a business house at Skaneateles, where he remained a year. His health failing, he was advised to change, and he accordingly shipped on a vessel from New York and passed the next nine months on the sea. In 1826 he came West to Detroit, and in 1827 removed to Ann Arbor, bringing his mother and sister. With the early militia of the State he was connected, and Gov. Mason commissioned him General. During the Black Hawk and cholera troubles, he was called out, and in the latter, did active duty in keeping persons suspected of infection, away from Ann Arbor. He was appointed Register of Deeds for this county in Feb., 1835, by Gov. Mason. The April following, the office was made elective, and he was elected to it. After one and a half years service, the State was admitted to the Union, and at the next general election he was again elected to the office for two years. Gen. Clark was the first Register of Deeds in Washtenaw Co., the title of office having previously been Register of Probate. As Principal and Deputy, he was connected with it 13 years. When he took the office there was but a single index made, of foolscap paper sewed in pasteboard covers. He introduced the double-index system now in use. Previous to 1827 Washtenaw and Wayne counties were connected for judicial purposes, and the records kept together. He went to Detroit and searched out those of this county, and entered them in the Detroit Transcript, in the office of the Register of Deeds at Ann Arbor. In 1840 was appointed Deputy Marshal to take the census of 11 towns in this county. Next he engaged in mercantile and also in the forwarding business. In 1843 he was appointed agent of the M. C. R. R. at Ann Arbor, which he held for a time. Later he was in a store for a time and then went out on the Kalamazoo river in charge of a saw-mill. In 1855 he returned to Ann Arbor, and since then has remained there in various occupations. He has filled the office of Justice of the Peace nine years, at various times. Dec. 6, 1841, he was married to Miss Julia A. Hickcox, of Ann Arbor, whom he knew as a child in New York. To them have been born 3 children, of whom but 1, a son in business in New York city, is living.

Gen. Clark has, for many years, been connected with the Episcopal Church of this city. In him the city has always had a warm and active friend; a man of warm heart and undoubted honor, he has won for himself a host of friends.

George W. Clark, proprietor feed stable, Second street, between Huron and Washington streets, Ann Arbor, was born at Sherbon, England, in 1811. In 1837 he went to Canada, and for a period of 10 years was a non-commissioned officer in the British army. In 1848 he settled in Ann Arbor, where he entered actively into business, and since that time has been an energetic and public-spirited citizen of Ann Arbor. While living in Canada he married Sarah Neal. They have 3 children—George W., jr., Sarah A. and Mary E.

George Clarken, Ann Arbor, was born at Crosses of Robertstown, County Meath, Ireland, in 1844. In 1851 his parents came to America. Their first year in this country was spent in New York city, and the four succeeding years in Jersey city. In 1856 they came to Ann Arbor, where George was educated in the public schools. In 1861 his father died in this city. When about 13 years of age he began working with A. A. Perry, and learned the trade of brickmason and plasterer. In 1867 he went West working on contracts on the Union Pacific Railroad in Nebraska, Dakota, Colorado, Wyoming and Utah. He was present at the driving of the golden spike near Green river, where the two ends of the road met. He then returned to Ann Arbor and began contracting and working at his business, which he followed until 1872. He then started in the grocery business on Ann street in this city, and followed it seven years. The next year found him again contracting, and in that year he built himself a fine house on Ingalls street, at a cost of $4,000. He also bought and repaired a number of houses in this city. In the fall of 1880 he purchased the old store of J. W. Maynard on Main street, which he repaired and re-fitted. He opened a fine billiard room therein, and fitted it up for the satisfaction of those who enjoy "chasing the ivory over the green." Feb. 22, 1870, he was married to Miss Mary Hoban, of Ann Arbor. To them has been born 1 child—Mary, born Jan. 1, 1871.

Clayton & Kline, agents in Ann Arbor for the Parisian Steam Laundry, are doing a large and remunerative business. In the short time that has elapsed since their entry into Ann Arbor, they have succeeded beyond their most sanguine expectations. All their work is done by the widely known Toledo Steam Laundry, and they enjoy a good trade.

Joseph Clinton, merchant tailor, Ann Arbor, was born in Mead, Ireland, in 1831, and is a son of Owen and Ellen J. Clinton. He grew to manhood and was educated in the common schools of his native land. In 1851 he went to London and thence to New York, working at his trade in both cities. In 1852 he came to Detroit, and from there to Ypsilanti. He returned East, but came to Michigan soon after, and worked a short time at Ann Arbor, and from the latter place to Lafayette county, Wis., where he remained some time, and permanently located in Ann Arbor in 1859. In 1860 he married Mrs. Jane Currans, of Irish descent, and a native of Vermont. Her parents were William and Mary Currans. Six children were given to this couple—Mary, Elizabeth, Jane, Lawrence, Ann and Joseph. He worked for William Wagner for a number of years, but for the last two years has been in business for himself.

Benjamin F. Cocker, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy in the University of Michigan, was born in Yorkshire, England, in the year 1821. His father designed him for one of the learned professions, and gave him the advantages of a good English education at King James' Grammar School. Having a decided taste for a business life, however, he was placed in a German business house, where he laid the foundation of correct and methodical habits. He afterward engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods, in which business he remained for seven years. In 1850 failing health compelled him to seek a change of climate. He started for Australia, and after the hardships of a 16 weeks' voyage, found himself measurably restored to health. He remained about one year at Launceston, Tasmania, as the agent of an English shipping house. When gold was discovered in Victoria, he removed to Melbourne, where he for four years carried on a large and successful mercantile business, and manifested very marked ability, not only as a business man, but also in the various public affairs with which he was connected. The great panic of 1856 proved disastrous to his business, and after losing nearly all of his apparently ample accumulations, he purchased a small vessel, and went on a trading voyage to New Zealand, Tonga, Feejee and Tahiti. While in Feejee he, with a companion, fell into the hands of cannibals. Their fate seemed sealed; already the death song which was to precede their being killed and devoured was commenced, when, by a courageous effort, they succeeded in breaking through the weakest part of the line, and escaping to their boat. After barely eluding the savages he had, on the same voyage, a narrow escape from shipwreck, but finally reached Australia in safety. He then engaged as clerk in a lumber yard for a time. He then took the same vessel in which he had formerly sailed to the scene of his adventures with the cannibals, and started for the Friendly Islands. He went ashore at Tonga and sent the vessel on to Lakemba, one of the Feejee group, where she struck a reef and went down, the crew being saved. He returned to Australia and found employment at Sidney as a wharfage clerk. After three months he started for Callao, Peru. From Callao he went by way of Panama and Aspinwall to New Orleans; then up the Mississippi to Cairo, and from there by rail to Chicago. His funds were exhausted, and he endeavored to find temporary employment in Chicago, but failed. Hearing of an old friend who had, while a missionary, been a recipient of his bounty, and who now resided at Adrian, Mich., he started for that place. One of his children died on the journey, and he found himself on his arrival at Adrian, with a wife and 3 helpless children depending on him for support and a dead child in his arms. This was in 1857. In Adrian he found true friends, and the Presiding Elder of that district in the Detroit Conference appointed him as Pastor of the M. E. Church at Palmyra. From Palmyra he went to Adrian, Ypsilanti, Ann Arbor; then again to Adrian, back to Ann Arbor, remaining in each place as long as the rules of his Church would permit, and winning the respect of every community in which he lived. In the conference of 1869 he was appointed to the pastorate of the Central M. E. Church of Detroit. In a few weeks he resigned this charge to take the chair of Mental and Moral Philosophy in the University of Michigan, to which he had been elected in September, 1869, and which he fills at the present time.

The Wesleyan University conferred on him the degree of M. A. in 1864; Asbury College that of D. D., and he was further recognized by receiving the degree of LL. D. from Victoria College, Ontario, in 1874. Before his connection with the University, Dr. Cocker contributed quite extensively to the Methodist Quarterly and other journals. But his chief literary work has been done since his connection with the University. In 1870 he published "Christianity and Greek Philosophy;" in 1873, "Lectures on the Truth of the Christian Religion;" in 1875 "Theistic Conception of the World;" since then, his "University Lectures," "Evidences of Christianity" and "Handbook of Philosophy," all of which have been well received and most flatteringly noticed by literary journals in this country and Europe. The style of his writings is of rare beauty. He is firm in expressing his opinions, fearless in defending his positions, yet courteous to all his opponents. The greater part of his work has been done while laboring under intense physical suffering, yet he never complains. In appearance Dr. Cocker is intellectual and venerable. He is at once unpretending and striking, nearly six feet high, rather slender, with a strongly marked face, a large, kindly, penetrating dark eye, the whole countenance indicating an admirable blending of strength and benevolence. His whole life has been marked by a pure, childlike faith in God. In the "Shadow of the Rock" he has found rest when troubles have come upon him. Through his own trials he has learned to sympathize with the unfortunate and troubled, and those who come to him for sympathy or advice ever find in him a ready adviser and a sympathizing friend. Dr. Cocker and his estimable wife, who, for 37 years, has been the companion of his eventful life, and who has tenderly cared for him in his physical feebleness, have 2 sons, surviving a family of 7 children. Both are graduates of Michigan University. The eldest, William J. Cocker, has been for a number of years Principal of Adrian High School. Henry R. Cocker is connected with a business house at Cleveland, Ohio.

He was admitted to the Bar in January, 1846, and became, for a time, the partner of Judge C. A. Stacy, of Tecumseh, but returned to Adrian in 1848, and took part in the political campaign of that year as a supporter of Van Buren. At Adrian he was a member of the firm of Beaman, Beecher & Cooley and afterward of Cooley & Crosswell. In 1857 he was elected by the Legislature to make the first compilation of General Statutes of the State, which was completed in a year. In January, 1858 he was appointed by the Supreme Court as reporter of its decisions, and in that office he published eight volumes of reports. In 1864, on the decease of Mr. Justice Manving, he was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court by a vote of 80,491. Ex-Gov. Felch, who was the opposing candidate, received 68,898.

He was re-elected in 1869, over D. Darwin Hughes, and again, in 1875, over Henry F. Severens, by a large vote. In 1859 he was chosen by the Regents of the University, with James V. Campbell and Charles I. Walker, to organize the Law Department of that institution, and removed to Ann Arbor for that purpose, where he has since lived, giving instruction regularly in the Law Department. In 1877 he was invited by the Trustees of the Johns Hopkins University to give a course of lectures in Baltimore, and in compliance, lectured for four weeks. In 1878, on a second invitation, he gave a course of lectures in that University, on the new Amendments to the Federal Constitution. In 1868 he published his Treatise on Constitutional Limitations. Since then he has published a Treatise on the Law of Taxation, and another on the Law of Torts. He has also edited an edition of Blackstone's Commentary, of Story on the Constitution, and of Harrington's Chancery Reports; and was editor of the law articles in the second edition of the American Encyclopedia. He has also written largely for Reviews, sometimes over his own signature, and sometimes not. Judge Cooley married Mary E. Rice and Pitcher of that city. He entered the Medical Department of the University of Maryland, from which he graduated as M. D. Returning to Detroit he was for some time connected with the geological survey of this State, under Dr. Houghton, and later was in the Government service as physician to the party under Mr. Henry R. Schoolcraft, who were engaged in negotiating treaties with the Indians. In 1843 he came to this city and entered into the practice of medicine, which he followed but two or three years. In 1844 he was appointed Assistant Professor of Chemistry in Michigan University, and in 1846 he was advanced to the full professorship of that chair. He held a number of other positions and professorships until 1875, when his connection with the University was severed. While connected with this Institution he was largely interested in the organization of its Medical Department, and organized its Laboratory, with which he was connected until he left the University. Professor Douglas had charge of the erection of the University Observatory, Medical College, Laboratory, south wing of the main building, and water-works, and other improvements in connection with the development of the institution. In 1874 and '5 the question of the disappearance of certain moneys arose. This drew into question the management of the finances under the control of Doctor Douglas, and an investigation was ordered. This investigation was sweeping, and embraced all his financial operations while connected with the University, and in no respect was any record or voucher of his rejected. The matter was carried into various courts, and in a decision of the Supreme Court of this State, rendered Jan. 20, 1881, Doctor Douglas was completely vindicated. During two years he served this city as its Mayor, and in that time the present police force was organized. In 1861 he organized the present gas company of this city, with which he is still connected. The erection of the Observatory was largely due to the personal efforts and solicitations of Drs. Tappan and Douglas, the latter of whom had charge of the erection of the building. He has also spent several seasons in exploring the mineral regions of Lake Superior, in the interest of the University, and also the lands of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal Company. During this time he made a large collection. Nearly all of the mineral collection in the University Museum, except the original "Lederer Collection," was made by him and presented to the University, containing a full cabinet from the Lake Superior regions. Doctor Douglas is the author of a system of Chemical Tables, for use in the Laboratory, which passed through four editions, and subsequently, in connection with Professor Prescott, this was enlarged into a work on Qualitative Chemical Analysis, which has passed through three editions, and is now in use in Michigan University Laboratory and in other laboratories in this country and Europe. May 1, 1845, he was married to Miss Helen Welles, of Ann Arbor. To them were born 3 sons and 4 daughters, all of whom are now living. Nov. 24, 1880, Mrs. Douglas passed from this life, at her home in this city.

J. B. Dow, contractor and builder, Ann Arbor, was born in Orange Co., N. Y., in 1821, and is a son of Asahel and Dolly (Blaisdell) Dow. When 13 years old, Mr. Dow's parents moved to Genesee county, where he learned his trade, and while residing there, married Lucy D. Lincoln, a daughter of C. J. Lincoln, of Vermont. This marriage was blessed with 2 children—Hattie A., and C. L. Mr. Dow located in Ann Arbor in 1851 and for many years has been profitably employed in the construction and repairing of the University buildings. He aided in building the Union school building, and Agricultural Hall, on the fair ground.

David B. Downer (deceased) was a native of Niagara Co., N. Y., where he was born in Nov., 1794. He was in his 16th year when the war of 1812 broke out, and during this war officiated as a commissary. He settled in this county in 1825, where a few years previous he bought land from the Government at 50 cents per acre. While a resident of New York, he married in his native county, Nancy Grisette, by whom 7 children were born to him, only 1 of the number now surviving—Avery, a farmer living at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Mr. Downer died in 1855 and was laid at rest in this township. His wife still survives him, at the advanced age of 82, and is the owner of valuable farm property. A niece of Mrs. Downer, who married Charles C. Kelley, lives with her on the old homestead.

Alexander Duncan (deceased) was a native of Paisely, Scotland, and a nephew of Alexander Wilson, the famous naturalist. Mr. Wilson settled in Oakland Co., Mich., in 1830, where he passed the remainder of his days. He was married to Eliza Mehaffey, and 7 children were born to them, 4 of whom are living—James, a farmer of Oakland county; Isabel, wife of John Thompson, a resident of Northville, and two others. Mr. Duncan was a man of unusual ability as a poetical writer.

Edward S. Dunster, M. A., M. D., Ann Arbor, is the third child of Samuel and Susan (Dow) Dunster, and was born at Springvale, Sanford county, Maine, Sept. 2, 1834. He was named for Dr. Edward Swift, an eminent physician of Easton, Pa., who was an intimate and respected friend of his father. On the removal of his parents to Providence, R. I., he entered the public schools of the latter place, and was admitted to the high school when 12 years of age. He entered Harvard College in 1852, graduating with high honors in 1856. The title of his essay was "The first President of Harvard College," but on commencement day he was ill from a severe attack of typhoid fever, and unable to attend the exercises. Upon his recovery in the autumn of that year, he went to Newburg, N. Y., and became a private tutor to a son of Henry W. Sargent, who resided in Fishkill, just across the Hudson river. At the same time he began the study of medicine with Dr. M. Stephenson, of Newburgh. His pupil, Sargent, was admitted to Harvard College in July, 1858, and subsequently was a student in medicine with the celebrated Prof. E. R. Peaslee, of New York city, where he remained several years. Dr. Dunster attended lectures at Dartmouth College in the summer of 1859, and the following winter, at the New York College of Medicine and Surgery, graduating from that institution in March, 1859, having received the highest prize awarded by the faculty for proficiency in studies. After his graduation he attached himself to St. Luke's Hospital, remaining there until the succeeding August, when he resigned to accept the chair of Demonstrator of Anatomy, in Dartmouth College. He occupied this position for some time, and then returned to New York city, and resumed his profession. Aug. 5, 1861, he was commissioned Assistant Surgeon in the Union army, and served with General McClellan's command. He had the establishing of hospitals, and the charge of them, and was subsequently appointed by General Rosecrans, Medical Inspector, for the Southern half of the department. He was afterward breveted Captain, and Major, U. S. A., and before his resignation, which occurred Feb. 1, 1866, he had successfully passed the examination for promotion to the grade of full Surgeon. After resigning, he went once more to New York, and again established himself in the practice of medicine. He was editor of the New York Medical Journal from 1866 to 1871; about the same time attending physician in the out-door department, Bellevue Hospital; was professor of obstetrics, and diseases of women and children in University of Vermont, at Burlington, for two years, resigning in 1871; occupied the same chair in the Long Island College Hospital, from 1869 to 1874; in 1873 was appointed to the chair of Obstetrics, and diseases of women and children, in the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, which position he still occupies; is the author of "The Use of Forceps in Abbreviating the Second Stage of Labor," "The Prophylaxis of Puerperal Convulsions," and of an article in the U. S. Sanitary Commission Memoirs, entitled, "Comparative Morality in Armies from Wounds and Diseases." He prepared an able paper for the American Medical Association, against the restricting of students from the irregular or exclusive systems of medicine. After many miles of wandering he came to Ann Arbor in 1833, and bought 200 acres of land from the Government, with Andrew Jackson's signature on the patent. In 1834 he married Mary Duncan. Mr. Earl was very ambitious, worked early and late, stored his mind with useful knowledge, and thereby rapidly accumulated a fortune. He has always taken a deep interest in educational matters, and has filled many offices of trust in Northfield tp. He was first Justice of the Peace of that town, and also served as an Assessor and School Director. Some years ago he was elected Alderman of Ann Arbor.

Nelson Eastwood, retired minister, Ann Arbor, was born near Brockville, Canada, in 1810, and is a son of John and Charlotte Eastwood, the former a native of New York, and the latter a native of Vermont. In 1813, he removed with his parents to Watertown, N. Y., and thence to Livingston and Genesee counties. He received an academic education, and at Middlebury, Conn., was ordained as minister of the gospel of the Baptist denomination. In 1838 he came to Michigan and subsequently preached to the people of Dexter, Washtenaw county. In 1839 he married Miss H. Collins, a daughter of Col. and Mary (Wade) Collins, who settled in Michigan in 1831, where the former died at the age of 83, and the latter at 79. One child was born to this marriage—John F. Eastwood, M. A., B. A., Ph. D., and who holds a Professorship in Bethany College. Eberbach & Sons, druggists, 11 S. Main st., Ann Arbor, are among the leading drug houses of Southern Michigan. The business was established in this city in 1843, where Christian Eberbach, senior member of the firm, began in a small way in the drug trade. In 1848 Emanuel Mann was admitted into partnership, the firm being Eberbach & Co., for a period of 28 years. At this latter time Mr. Mann withdrew from the firm, and Ottmar Eberbach, a son of Christian, was admitted as full partner, and the firm name changed to Eberbach & Son. Ottmar Eberbach is a gentleman of culture and rare business talents, who spent his youthful days in the Ann Arbor schools, and ultimately graduated from a university in Germany, where he also studied Latin, a knowledge of which has proved almost indispensable in his present line of business. He married Katy Haller.

Main st., Ann Arbor, became established in this business in 1876, and under the live management of its able members, a large trade has grown up, extending over many of the southern tier of counties. He is an active worker in the cause of temperance in the city, and holds an official position in the Ann Arbor Reform Club.

James Fair, retired farmer, was born in Ireland in 1808. Three years later his parents, Thomas and Ann Fair, crossed the ocean and settled in New York, where they passed the remainder of their lives, the former being an excellent carpet-weaver. James passed his early life in the great metropolis. When 10 years old he was apprenticed to a harness-maker in Orange county, N. Y. In 1835, in Columbia county, he was married to Susan Mead. He then came to Ann Arbor where he engaged in business for himself, selling goods in the surrounding country with a horse and wagon. He followed this business for about eight years and acquired means enough to open a permanent business in the city. Since that time he has carried on a constantly increasing trade. In connection with his dry-goods business is a millinery department under the direction of Mrs. Fantle. In 1862 he was married to Miss Virginia Gregor, a native of Austria. of 120 acres. There were born to this couple 2 children—Nellie, wife of William Bailey, and John, a resident of Stockbridge, who married Maria Helmer. Mrs. Farmer remembers many incidents of pioneer life—that life which many had to endure, accepting with thankfulness the blessings which it brought in their early residence in this fair region. Her daughter, Mrs. Nellie Bailey, previously mentioned, is a hair-dresser in Ann Arbor, having located in that city in 1875. She is very skillful at this business, and enjoys a remunerative trade.

Hon. Bethuel Farrand was born in the parish of Whippany, in the town of Hanover, in the State of New Jersey, June 12, 1783. He was a direct descendant of Nathaniel Farrand, whose name appears as one of the planters who came to Milford, Conn., in 1645. A portion of this family by the year 1667, with others from Branford and Guilford, removed to Newark, New Jersey, forming the "New Work Settlement" (as it was for some time called), where only Church members were admitted to citizenship. Each one of the settlers of this company had a six-acre home lot besides broad meadow lands along the Passaic, and woodlands back of the town. Before 1710 a few of these Newark pioneers had pushed up the Passaic and settled on the banks of the Whippenong, west of the great mountain Watchung (now Orange mountain). This settlement so begun was called the Parish of Whippany, and the strip of territory between the two rivers was called Hanover Neck. Here many years of his boyhood and early youth were passed in the family of his uncle, Hon. Aaron Kitchel, of whom it is recorded, in a memorial over his grave, that "he was for 36 years a member in the State and National Councils." From this uncle he learned the blacksmith trade, and soon after becoming 21 went to the then new section of Cayuga county, New York, where he was for several years employed by the Montezuma Salt Works Company, as overseer. He purchased a farm in the town of Aurelius (then a portion of Auburn, New York), and was married in 1811 to Miss Fanny Marilla Shaw, of the same town. From this union were born—Lucius S. Farrand, who will be remembered as a pioneer of Washtenaw county; Jacob S. Farrand, long a well-known resident of Detroit; Caroline, the wife of the Hon. D. C. Whitwood, of Detroit; Marilla, who married the Hon. Andrew Parsons; and Bethuel Clinton, who is one of the pioneers of St. Clair county, residing at Port Huron. In the early part of 1821 he was by the death of his wife left with the care of his young family. In 1822 he was married to Deborah Osburn, of Cayuga county, by whom he had 3 sons—Kitchel, who engaged in mercantile business and died in Dexter some 26 years ago; James B., who was an engineer in the U. S. Navy during the war of the Rebellion and since that time has been a merchant at Port Huron, and David Osburn Farrand, who was a Surgeon in the army during the last year of the late war, and who since that time has been a well-known physician of Detroit. Mrs. Farrand is now in her 87th year and resides in the family of one of the sons in Ann Arbor. Mr. Farrand remained upon his farm in Cayuga county until the spring of 1825. In the early part of that year his attention was attracted to the then new Territory of Michigan, and with a view of obtaining a contract or entering into an arrangement for supplying the city of Detroit with water. In January of that year he traveled on foot by the south shore of Lake Erie from Aurelius to Detroit, and on Feb. 17, 1825, he submitted to the Common Council of that city his proposition for supplying the city with water. "A meeting of the Freemen of the city" was called and held in the council-house on the 19th and 21st of February, 1825, and the matter duly discussed and considered, and on the 22d day of the same month was passed "an act granting to Bethuel Farrand and his legal representatives the sole and exclusive right of watering the city of Detroit," after which Mr. Farrand, having succeeded in his object, returned to his home on foot, going through Canada. In May, 1825, he, with one Rufus Wells, arrived with their families in Detroit and entered at once upon the construction of their work for watering the city. In the fall of 1825 Mr. Farrand transferred to Mr. Wells his interest in the enterprise and removed with his family to Ann Arbor. The removal was made in a scow or flat boat, with which he came down the Detroit river as far as Flat Rock, and then up the Huron river 20 miles, at which point further proceeding with the scow was found impracticable, and a wagon and oxen were obtained and the journey to Ann Arbor by the Huron river, through what is now Ypsilanti (which then had but two families), was completed. At Ann Arbor before his coming were settled about 14 families. Temporary quarters in two small rooms were obtained for the family and effects, in which they remained until a shanty could be erected into which to repair until a dwelling house could thereto be added. Mr. Farrand was the first Probate Judge elected in Washtenaw county, and the first session of that court was held on the 2d day of April, A. D. 1827, at which he presided as Judge. At the first meeting of the Presbyterian society of Ann Arbor, held on the fourth Monday of September, A. D., 1827 (as it appears by the records of that society), Mr. Farrand was chosen Moderator, and when that society was organized he became one of its Board of Trustees and was elected Treasurer.

In the spring of 1828 he purchased a farm two miles east of Ann Arbor, on the Dixboro road, and in the fall of that year removed with his family to the farm where he lived till his death, which occurred in July, 1852.

In connection with farming, he attempted making successful the culture of silk; with this end in view he set out about eight acres of land with white mulberry trees, which were so cultivated that a very vigorous growth was obtained, and in about the year 1837 he produced and manufactured about 30 pounds of sewing silk of excellent quality. In order to encourage him in the matter of silk manufacture, the State of Michigan, by an act of its Legislature, loaned him the sum of $800 without interest. With this money he obtained skilled labor and approved machinery from Connecticut, which was then a silk-producing State, and faithful trial was made to ascertain whether the climate and soil of Michigan were adapted to the production of silk. The climate was soon found to be too severely cold for the mulberry tree, most of his trees dying in the winter of 1837-'8, and he felt obliged to give up the business of producing silk and turn his attention to crops known to be compensating; he paid up from the product of his farm in 1840 the $800 loaned him by the State for the silk experiment. Mr. and Mrs. Farrand were among the original members (of whom there were 17) of the First Presbyterian Church of Ann Arbor. Mrs. Farrand has, for many years, been the sole surviving member of those Church pioneers. She yet retains her faculties for conversation and remembering extremely well, and still enjoys letter-writing to an unusual extent. Mr. Farrand, soon after the organization of the Ann Arbor Church, became one of its elders, and so remained till the time of his death, a period of more than 21 years. He was liberal in his religious views, generous and hospitable to friends and neighbors, honest and fair in all his business transactions, and as a citizen, was exemplary and much esteemed.

Mr. Farrand's portrait is given in this book.

Hon. Alpheus Felch, LL. D., ex-Governor of Michigan, Ann Arbor, was born at Limerick, Me., September 28, 1806. His grandfather, Abijah Felch was a soldier in the Revolution; and when a young man, having with others obtained a grant of land between the Great and Little Ossipee rivers, in Maine, moved to that region when it was yet a wilderness. The father of Mr. Felch embarked in mercantile life at Limerick. He was the first to engage in that business in that section, and continued it until his death. The death of the father, followed within a year by the death of the mother, left the subject of this sketch, then three years old, to the care of relatives, and he found a home with his paternal grandfather, where he remained until his death. Mr. Felch received his early education in the district school and a neighboring academy. In 1821 he became a student at Phillips Exeter Academy, and, subsequently, entering Bowdoin College, graduated with the class of 1827. He at once began the study of law and was admitted to practice at Bangor, Me., in 1830. He began the practice of his profession at Houlton, Me., where he remained until 1833. The severity of the climate impaired his health, never very good, and he found it necessary to seek a change of climate. He disposed of his library and started to seek a new home. His intention was to join his friend Sargent S. Prentiss at Vicksburg, Miss; but on his arrival at Cincinnati, Mr. Felch was attacked by cholera, and when he had recovered sufficiently to permit of his traveling, found that the danger of the disease was too great to permit a journey down the river. He therefore determined to come to Michigan. He first began to practice in this State at Monroe, where he continued until 1843, when he removed to Ann Arbor. He was elected to the State Legislature in 1835 and continued a member of that body during the years 1836 and 1837. During this time the general banking law of the State was enacted. He was convinced that it would be of great damage to the people and his was the only voice raised in opposition to it in either branch of the Legislature, and but two voted with him in opposition to the bill. This bill gave birth to the numerous progeny known as "wild-cat" banks, and the country was soon flooded with depressed "wild-cat" money. Early in 1838 Mr. Felch was appointed one of the Bank Commissioners of the State and held the position over a year, during which time the examinations of the Bank Commissioners brought to light numerous frauds which were fearlessly exposed, the guilty parties prosecuted, and many of their institutions closed. In 1842 Mr. Felch was appointed Auditor General of the State; but after holding the office only a few weeks, was commissioned by the Governor as one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of Judge Fletcher. In January, 1843, he was elected to the United States Senate for an unexpired term. In 1845 he was elected Governor of Michigan, and entered upon his duties at the commencement of the next year. In 1847 he was elected a Senator in Congress for six years; and at once retired from the office of Governor, by resignation, which took effect March 4, 1847, when his senatorial term commenced. While a member of the Senate he acted on the Committee on Public Lands, and for four years was its Chairman. In 1853 he was appointed one of the Commissioners to adjust and settle the Spanish and Mexican land claims in California, where he went in 1853 and was made President of the Commission. In March, 1856, their labors were satisfactorily finished. In June of that year Mr. Felch returned to Ann Arbor, where he has since been engaged principally in legal business. Since his return he has been nominated for Governor and also for U. S. Senator, and twice for Judge of the Supreme Court. For many years was one of the Regents of Michigan University, and in the spring of 1879 was appointed Tappan Professor of Law in the same. Mr. Felch is the oldest surviving Member of the Legislature from Monroe Co., the oldest and only surviving Bank Commissioner of the State, the oldest surviving Auditor General of the State, the oldest surviving Governor of the State, the oldest surviving Judge of the Supreme Court of Michigan, and the oldest surviving U. S. Senator from Michigan.

Lambert Feldkamp (deceased) was a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, where he was born in 1817. Mr. F. grew to manhood, and was educated in his native land. He came to this county at an early date, and purchased 80 acres of land from Government, located in Freedom tp. During his life he accumulated 240 acres of land, and at the time of his death, which occurred in 1872, owned this large tract of land, which fell to his heirs. Mrs. F. is still living, and resides in Saline. Henry Feldkamp, the fourth child of the deceased, has followed farming from boyhood, in which occupation he has been very successful, among the more public spirited citizens of Ann Arbor tp. In 1879 he married Libbie Bissinger, a daughter of Conrad Bissinger. Mr. F. owns 145 acres of richly cultivated land.

John Field, of the firm of Field & Hunt, gas-fitters and plumbers, Ann Arbor, was born in Worcestershire, England, in 1820. Growing to mature years in his native land, he there received a liberal education. In 1845 he came to America, and first settled in Enfield, Conn., afterward removing to Thompsonville, of the same State, where he became engaged in the weaving of carpets, receiving while thus engaged an order from President Polk, who shortly after his inauguration began the task of refurbishing the White House. For a period of six years Mr. Field resided in Connecticut, then located at Green Point, Long Island, where he learned gas-fitting, and in the four years of his residence there was employed at an extensive gas works, and obtained a large practical experience in steam, gas-fitting, and plumbing. In 1858 he settled at Ann Arbor, and in 1866 embarked in his present business, which has proven very successful. In 1871 he married Brace Jewell. They have 1 child—Lillie May.

He passed through the elementary schools of his native place, and in 1866 came to America. He at once went to Pittsburg, Pa., where he for a time attended the high school, then entered Saint Michael's Seminary, near Pittsburg. He attended this institution three years, and then went to Milwaukee, Wis., where he entered St. Francis' Seminary, where he remained until June, 1876, when he was ordained to the priesthood. His first appointment was as assistant in St. Vincent's Parish at Detroit, where he remained about six months. From there he went to Marshall, Mich., where he ministered to the people about two and one-half years. After a vacation of a few months he, on the death of the Rev. Father Van Erp, was sent to Ann Arbor, and shortly after coming here was confirmed as the regular Priest of St. Thomas' Parish.

George Fischer (deceased), for over a quarter of a century a well-known citizen of Ann Arbor, was born in Germany, and in his native land received a good literary education. In 1855 he came to America, and first worked in New York city for the small sum of $5 per month. Through the influence of the Weidemanns, a family well-known in the county in early days, he came to Ann Arbor. He first was employed by the male members of the above named family in the slaughtering business, and in a short time purchased their store and trade, and was very successful throughout his long business career in this city. In 1871 he erected the costly residence where Mrs. Fischer now resides. On Feb. 12, 1876, while traveling for his health in Europe, and en route for Italy, he was suddenly taken ill, and died in a short time. In 1855 he had married Mary Ann Allmendinger, a daughter of George Allmendinger, who was among the first settlers in this county. Mrs. Fischer became a resident of this county in 1832.

Thomas Fitzsimmons, farmer, sec. 3, Ann Arbor; P. O., Ann Arbor; was born at Southport, Chemung Co., N. Y., Aug. 14, 1800. He was there educated and reared. He followed farming in that county until 1844, when he came to this county. He located a farm where Ann Arbor now is and which has been cut up into city lots. In 1849 he moved to his present home. May 18, 1826, he was married to Miss Eliza Waters, of Seneca Co., N. Y. To them have been born 3 sons and 6 daughters. Five of the daughters are married and living in this county. Mrs. Mary E. Foster, attorney at law, Ann Arbor, was born at Marcellus, Onondaga Co., N. Y., June 2, 1825, and when one year old accompanied her parents to Michigan. They first located about five miles south of Ann Arbor, but about eight years later removed to Lodi Plains. Her father, John Lowry, was a farmer, and Mrs. Foster spent her early life amid rural scenes, taking an active part in all matters pertaining to farm life. The peculiar atmosphere which surrounded her childhood's home must have had much to do with the formation of her character. Her parents loved all the bright and pleasant things of life, yet placed the interests of religion and education before everything else. Thus, amid the fragrant fields and under the summer's sun, the snow-covered earth and winter's storms, in the pure air of a devout and God-loving family, she was reared, which, with the subsequent years of experience in the busy and deceitful world, has eminently fitted her for the profession she has chosen. She received only a common-school education, with the exception of two years spent in an academy at Ann Arbor. She was married Oct. 2, 1843, to Oliver B. Kellogg, son of Judge Kellogg, of Sharon tp., who died in 1845. In 1847 Mrs. Kellogg married Hugh Downey, of Saline, Mich. April 2, 1863, she was joined in the bonds of holy wedlock to William G. Foster, who departed this life Aug. 12, 1873. Mrs. Foster has been a resident of Ann Arbor since 1862, with the exception of four years, which she spent upon the old home farm in Lodi. In 1850 she united with the M. E. Church, and since that period has proved a faithful and earnest worker in the cause of her master. She has particularly devoted her time and energies in Sunday-school work, and perhaps a more proficient worker in this branch of the Lord's vineyard never labored in Washtenaw Co. She is a member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and a valued assistant in the temperance cause throughout the county and State. She is a member of the State and County Pioneer Societies, and on Feb. 5, 1879, read a paper before the former society in Representative Hall, at Lansing; is also a member of the Northwestern branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, and delivered an able lecture before that body at Springfield, Ill., in the summer of 1880. She is also a life member of the Michigan State Horticultural Society. In 1878 Mrs. Foster made a trip to Europe and spent a few months visiting in the larger and more interesting cities of the old world, taking especial interest in the various noted art galleries. In 1874 she entered the law department of the University of Michigan, where she remained two years. During this period she also studied extensively in the literary and chemical departments. She graduated with high honors in the spring of 1876, and the following October opened a law office at her residence on Catherine street. In legal talent, Mrs. Foster ranks high among the profession in this part of the State, and her success has exceeded her most sanguine expectations. She possesses a strong, clear mind, a bright, intelligent expression, and above all, a kind and loving disposition, which characterizes the true Christian woman.

Portraits of Mrs. Foster and of Mr. Lowry, her father, appear in this volume.

Edward C. Franklin, M. D. Among the most distinguished adepts in the progressive schools of homeopathy in the West, is Dr. E. C. Franklin, of Ann Arbor, a man whose labors in the path marked out by the immortal Hahnemann, entitled him to a front rank among the physicians of America. He was born at Flushing, Long Island, March 12, 1822. His father, Joseph Franklin, was a native of New York, tracing his ancestry back to the famous philosopher, Dr. Benjamin Franklin. His mother, whose maiden name was Fitch, was a grand-daughter of Eliphalet Fitch, who, under the crown of England, held the position of Receiver General of the Island of Jamaica. Dr. Franklin was educated at Washington College, Hartford, Conn., and in 1842 entered the medical department of the University of New York, as a private pupil of the illustrious Dr. Valentine Mott, graduating in 1846. He commenced the practice of medicine (allopathy) in Williamsburg, Long Island, the same year, and soon became engaged in a somewhat protracted medical controversy with Dr. Cox, a celebrated homeopathic physician of that place. This controversy elicited a severe cross-fire from Drs. Hanford and Culbert, two of his classmates in the University, who had become converts to homeopathy, and were residents of Williamsburg. In 1849 Dr. Franklin removed to California, and followed his chosen profession in San Francisco, where, in a few months, he amassed a considerable sum of money. In 1851 he was appointed Deputy Health Officer of the State of California, receiving a salary of $900 per month, and expenses. He remained in such position until the commission was dissolved by the State. He then went to the Isthmus of Panama, where he was appointed as Physician of the Panama Railroad Hospital. He spent three years of successful practice in this place, and accumulated a large amount of property, but was compelled to leave on account of failing health, brought on by successive attacks of "Panama fever." This fever stubbornly resisted the treatment of allopathy, but yielded promptly to the new and strange homeopathic treatment. It was this experience that first enlightened Dr. Franklin to the real value of the new system, and early led him to its adoption. He first commenced to practice homeopathy in Dubuque, Iowa, and after a three years' residence there settled in St. Louis. In 1860 he was appointed Demonstrator of Anatomy, in the Homeopathic Medical College of Missouri, and also supplied an existing vacancy in the department relating to obstetrics. These positions he filled until his appointment to the chair of surgery in the same institution. In 1861 he was appointed Regimental Surgeon of the 5th Mo. Vol. Inf., under Gen. Lyon, being present at the death of that brave commander, and taking charge of his body. In 1878 he was appointed Professor of Surgery and Dean of the Homeopathic Faculty, in the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, in which position he ably fills at the present time. Dr. Franklin is the author of a work on "Spinal Curvatures," and two volumes on "The Science and Art of Surgery." He has now in preparation a work on "Minor Surgery," for the use of the students in the University. Dr. Franklin was married Dec. 24, 1878, to Celia M. Preston, at the residence of her father, Henry Preston, of Fentonville, Michigan.

R. E. Frazer, attorney at law, Ann Arbor, was born in Adrian, Michigan, in 1840. His father, Thomas Frazer, was for many years ticket agent of the M. C. R. R. at Detroit, and Robert grew to manhood in that city. In 1855 he came to Ann Arbor, and entered Michigan University, graduating from the literary department in 1859, and from the law department in 1861. He was admitted to practice in the autumn of 1861. As the years rolled on his marked ability attracted attention, and for a period of two years he was Circuit Court Commissioner; officiated as City Attorney three terms; Prosecuting Attorney for six years. Mr. Frazer has been chairman of the State Convention of Temperance Workers, and is a strong advocate of the Red Ribbon movement. He is Republican in politics, and in the fall of 1880 "stumped" the State of Michigan for the Republican Central Committee. In 1863 he married Abby M. Saunders, daughter of T. P. Saunders, a former merchant of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Frazer have 3 children. As a lawyer Mr. F. stands in the front rank among the Bar of Washtenaw county.

Six children were born to them—Gottfried D., jr., Louisa, Mary, Mena, John and Joseph. Mr. Frederick died in 1869, and was buried in Ann Arbor tp.

When he was 21 years old, he came to Ann Arbor, and opened a barber shop on Main street, where he transacted a successful business for 20 years, finally retiring on account of ill health, and entering into his present business with his usual enterprise and energy. In 1854 he was married at Jackson, Mich., to Elizabeth Kinney, a daughter of Barbara and Donald Kinney. They have 2 children—John W. and Carrie. Mr. F. is one of the leading colored men of Ann Arbor, and in 1880 was elected Grand Master of the Colored Masonic Compact Lodge.

Prof. Henry S. Frieze, LL. D., University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, was born at Boston, Mass., Sept. 15, 1817. His father, Jacob Frieze, was in early days a Universalist preacher, of Providence, Rhode Island, and was long connected with the press of that city as an able political writer. Prof. Frieze prepared for college under the efficient tuition of Hon. Joseph Joslin, of Newport, R. I., and graduated from Brown College, as valedictorian of his class, in 1841. From 1841 to 1845 he was employed as instructor in Brown University and the grammar school. In 1854 he received a call from the University of Michigan to accept the chair of Latin Language and Literature, which position he has filled to the present time. On the resignation of President Haven, in 1869, Prof. Frieze was appointed acting-President, and held that position, without relinquishing his professorship, until the accession of President Angell, in 1871. In the course of his official career several measures of importance to the University were adopted. Among those worthy of mention may be found the following: The admission of women to all the privileges accorded to any of the students of the University; the first important addition, by private liberality, to the general library in the gift of the Rau Library, by Philo Parsons, of Detroit; the first large appropriation for the University, by the State Legislature, and the first admission of students to the literary department of the University, on diploma from approved high schools of the State. In 1860 Prof. Frieze published an edition of Virgil's Æneid, and in 1867 an edition of the Quintilian. These works are ranked among the leading commentaries of the present day, and are used extensively, not only in this country, but wherever classical education has gained a firm foothold. Prof. Frieze is an able contributor to several scientific and literary journals of this and the old world, and his writings are earnestly studied and acted upon by the leading men of thought and science. Prof. Frieze visited Europe in 1857 for study and recreation, and again in 1871. In 1870 he received the degree of LL. D., from the University of Chicago and Kalamazoo College, in Michigan. When Pres. Angell accepted the mission to China, to ratify the treaty between the land of Confucius and the United States, Prof. Frieze was again appointed acting-President, a position he holds at the present time. Prof. Frieze early showed marked ability as an amateur musician, supporting himself from the age of 13, and while at College, by playing the organ. He now occupies the position of organist in the Congregational Church of Ann Arbor. Prof. Frieze was married in 1849 to Miss Anna Brownell Roffee, daughter of Caleb Roffee, deceased, of Providence, R. I.

In 1840 he came to America to better his fortune. He remained in New York city about one year and came to Ann Arbor in 1841. For a time he was employed in the tannery of Mr. Mann. He soon left this work and went into the butcher business for himself. He followed this business about 20 years and engaged in farming and fruit-growing, which he is still engaged in, and with Judge Lawrence, of this city, has about 1,100 peach-trees in bearing condition. In 1865 he made a visit to his Fatherland and returned well pleased with the land of his adoption. For several years he has been an Alderman in this city. Dr. Frothingham secured the establishment of the Department of Ophthalmology in the University, and was the first professor of that speciality. He has built up a large ophthalmic clinic, and now as many important ophthalmic cases are treated here as in any clinic in the country, including 40 to 50 operations on cataracts per year. In the course of his practice, Dr. Frothingham has operated by opening sac in aneurism of common carotid. That case received notable mention in an address on surgery before the International Medical Congress at Philadelphia, in 1876, also an article on aneurism presented by Dr. Van Buren at the same meeting, being particularly noticed as one of the great achievements of the past century, it being the second case of the kind that had been successfully treated in the world. He has also ligated common carotid for aneurismal tumor of orbit; has made many operations for removal of vesical calculi, cataract, etc.

Dr. Frothingham is a member of the American Medical Association, and was Secretary of the section of practice in this society in 1874. He was Secretary of Washtenaw Co. Hon. John Geddes, familiarly known as "Uncle John Geddes" throughout the length and breadth of Washtenaw county, was born in Londonderry tp., Dauphin (now Lebanon) Co., Pa., in March, 1801. His father and mother and three of his grandparents were born, lived and died in Pennsylvania. The other grandparent, William Geddes, was born near Randalstown, County Antrim, Ireland, in 1735; came to Pennsylvania in 1752, and died in Cumberland county, Pa., in 1789. Mr. Geddes was reared in his native State, and when old enough was sent to school a mile or two distant. At the age of 14 years he left school, and in that year finished the only education he ever obtained within the four walls of a school room. When he was about 23 years of age he concluded to make a trip to the Territory of Michigan, and if the land suited him, to locate in that fine and fertile region. He accordingly did so, and after a long trip on Lake Erie on the steamboat Superior, Capt. Bunker, he landed at Detroit July 12, 1824. The following day he started westward, and arrived at Woodruff's Grove (now Ypsilanti), where he remained over night. On the morning of the 14th he came to the spot where now is located the city of Ann Arbor. The country thereabout suited him, and believing fully in the fertility of the soil he proceeded to locate a farm on the southeast quarter of sec. 8, in what is now Pittsfield tp. He paid for the tract of land July 21, 1824. After a short time spent in the new country he went back to Detroit, and obtaining passage on the same boat that brought him to Michigan, he returned to Pennsylvania. On April 19, 1825, Mr. Geddes, in company with his brother Robert, left their home in the East for Michigan. They arrived at Ann Arbor May 11, 1825. Both purchased land, and on June 14 they settled on sec. 36, Ann Arbor tp., where Mr. Geddes has since resided. In the fall of 1826 Robert Geddes built a saw-mill on the Huron river near his land, and Uncle John went to work for him at $10 per month and board and washing. From that time until March, 1868, with the exception of one year in the same business on Fleming creek, Mr. Geddes continued to work in the saw-mill. The greater part of the time he would be at work before daylight, and never cease his labors until darkness compelled him to desist. Mr. Geddes was married April 6, 1837, to Fanny Savage, who was born in Orange county, N. Y., Feb. 19, 1806. Three children were born to bless this union, 2 daughters and 1 son: Rachel is married but has no children; Sarah is also married, and has 2 sons and 3 daughters; ~~William~~ ^{William} remained single, and died April 30, 1878. Mrs. Geddes departed this life Dec. 6, 1855, and on June 1, 1856, Mr. Geddes married Juliette Savage, a sister of his first wife, who was born July 22, 1809. The former Mrs. Geddes was a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church, as is Mr. Geddes and his present wife. In politics, Mr. G. was an Anti-Mason, and afterward became a Whig. When the Republican party was organized Mr. Geddes enlisted under its banner, where he has remained until the present time. He was elected to the State Legislature in 1840, and was Supervisor from Ann Arbor tp. for many years. He has been a Justice of the Peace for over 20 years.

"Uncle John Geddes" is a man possessing remarkable physical and mental faculties for a man over 80 years of age. He walks from his residence at Geddes to Ann Arbor, without experiencing the least fatigue. His memory is without a parallel. He can distinctly recollect the arrival of each and every old pioneer within the borders of Washtenaw county up to 1835 or 1840, and rarely fails to name the exact day and month of any social, political or educational feature of the county's growth since its organization. The publishers of this work and the citizens of this county owe "Uncle John Geddes" a debt of gratitude for his untiring energy and steady perseverance in collecting facts for this volume, that can never be repaid, and his name will be held in grateful remembrance by the future thousands long after this earthly form has crumbled into the dust from whence it came.

Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Geddes appear in this work.

Robert Geddes (deceased) was born in Lebanon county, Pa., about 15 miles from Harrisburg and 83 miles from Philadelphia, Dec. 11, 1797. He was reared to manhood in the Lebanon valley, and in May, 1822, left his home for Romulus, Seneca Co., N. Y., where he owned 200 acres of land that had been purchased by his father in 1795 for $500, and deeded to him some time previous. He operated the farm some two years, and then sold it to a Mr. Schuyler for $2,400 cash. With this money he came to Michigan in May, 1825, and bought eight 80-acre tracts of land, in Pittsfield tp.; 227 acres of land on sec. 36, Ann Arbor tp.; 232 acres on sec. 31 of Superior tp. He subsequently purchased enough land in Ann Arbor and Northfield tps. to increase his acreage to 1,502. On June 14, 1825, Mr. Geddes located on sec. 36, Ann Arbor tp., where he resided until his death. He came to Washtenaw county in an open wagon, in company with his brother John. After arriving they had no house nor shelter of any description, and had to cut down an elm tree, and take the bark to place over the wagon box. The next day the brothers tried to plow with two yoke of oxen, and one of Wood's patent plows, but they failed. John was then sent to Detroit to get a share for a "bull plow." He went on foot and carried the share back as far as Springwells, when he overtook a man with a wagon and a yoke of oxen, who agreed to take the share to Ypsilanti. Mr. Geddes went to work and built a "slanty" about 10 feet square, with roof and sides made of slabs. This served as a home for the two brothers for nearly two years. The plow was finally made, and Robert, having bought three yoke of oxen for $150, hired Josiah P. Turner, who had a yoke of oxen, for $1.50 per day. They hitched the four yoke to the plow and started. John cleared the brush out of the way, and when they stopped they had finished nearly 16 acres of land. They then bought 16 bushels of wheat of Thomas Sack-rider, paying him $20 for it. This they sowed in the newly plowed land, and when harvest came it yielded 15 bushels. The next year the same land yielded 25 bushels. Mr. Geddes had been in the county five years before he was attacked by any sickness. He was never very strong, and being a hard worker, often overtaxed his strength. He was married May 7, 1829, to Maria Lane, a native of Windsor, Broome Co., N. Y., and an Episcopalian. She was the mother of 3 children—Jane, Robert L. and Maria. Mrs. Geddes died Feb. 23, 1837, being at the time of her death in her 33d year. Mr. Geddes was again married March 12, 1839, to Chloe Lane, a sister of his former wife, and a member of the M. E. Church. She bore him no children and departed this life March 6, 1856. Daniel Kent, N. Broadway st., Ann Arbor. The history of man is peculiarly interesting, that of pioneers especially so. The life of Daniel Kent, a pioneer of this county, is fraught with no ordinary interest, and at the outset we shall turn backward many years into the dim shadows of the past. Jacob Kent, the grandfather of Daniel, was born in Holland, and came to Maryland at an early day. When the Revolution began he was employed as teamster under Gen. Washington, and won many praises from the officers and soldiers for courage displayed on many a battle-field. During the war of 1812 he acted as a scout, and was independent on the main army under Gen. Hull, consequently was not included in the list of soldiers at the ignominious surrender of Detroit. He owned about all the cattle in the Western States about that time, and fresh meat being very scarce, Congress purchased all the stock he had, and he received the money for it four years after the sale. With this money he went to Canada, and bought a large tract of land. He remained there until 1829, when he settled in Lodi tp., Washtenaw county, living in this latter place till his death. The subject of this sketch was born at Dayton, Ohio, in 1805, but grew to manhood in Canada. In New London, Canada, in 1827, he married Martha Lamoure, and 8 children were the result of this union, 4 of whom are living—William, Rosetta and Melvina, residents of Manchester, and Edwin, proprietor of meat market, Ann Arbor. In 1834, Mr. Kent entered some land near Lodi tp., on the old "Chicago Turnpike" road. He built a tavern, and as immigration was very heavy for several years, his business prospered, and he gained quite a competency from his farm and tavern. He also kept a tavern in Jackson Co., at a later date. March 9, 1870, the partner of his joys and sorrows, and one who had ever proved a worthy counselor and affectionate wife, was laid to rest, amid the scenes of their early pioneer life.

However, he intended returning to the United States to live, which he did in 1859, when he came to Ann Arbor; this has since been his home, with the exception of two years, which he spent in the service of the Government during the war, in the contract and building department. He then returned to this city, where he was engaged in pattern making and carpenter work until 1878, when he purchased the art rooms of Winslow Brothers. This business he has built up and improved, and now has a fine trade.

Mansfield S. McOmber (deceased) was born at Walworth, N. Y., in 1815, and came to Michigan when a boy. He settled in Washtenaw county in 1849, and in early years was a mechanic of more than ordinary ability. In later years he displayed unusual energy and perseverance as a business man, and was engaged in various enterprises. He was married at Highland, Mich., to Miss A. Stevens, and 12 children were born to them, 4 of whom—C. S., George W., Edwin, and Allen—are residents of Ann Arbor. George W. is a young man possessing great business talents. He is proprietor of a confectionery on State street, and is also agent for the Toledo Steam Laundry.

Lorenzo Merritt Lyon, retired farmer, was born in New York city, in 1804. His father, Samuel Lyon, was born in Westchester Co., N. Y., and brought up at a farmer. He was married to Miss Sarah Merritt, a native of Long Island. After marriage, he removed to New York city. He remained in the latter place a number of years, then disposed of his property, and bought a farm at Ithaca. He subsequently sold his farm, and again returned to the busy scenes of mercantile life in Canandaigua. He sold his property and business in 1830, and immigrated to Ann Arbor, Michigan, where he died. Lorenzo spent his youthful days at school in New York city, and at the age of 14 years, entered the broker's office of Robert Bruce, at 54 Water st. When 16 years of age he left his position for Western New York. He traded for two lots of land in Scio tp., this county, after which he determined to come to this State, which he did, arriving at Ann Arbor, Nov 13; 1830. On Feb. 23, 1832, he was married to Lura Lane, a native of Windsor, Broome Co., N. Y., and daughter of David Lane, who settled in Washtenaw county, in 1830. Eight children have been born to them, 7 of whom are living—Daniel, Charles W., Maria, Robert G., Theodore H., Arthur S., and Jennie C.; Helen J. is deceased. Mr. Lyon has been identified with all the different features of advancement connected with pioneer life, and is proud of the fact that he was one of Washtenaw county's first and hardy citizens. He has been honored with different positions of trust in Scio tp. Mr. Lyon connected himself with the M. E. Church in 1832, and for nearly half a century has strived to walk in the "straight and narrow way." He is an active mover and participant in the temperance cause. A few years ago Mr. Lyon moved to Ann Arbor and built a fine residence on W. Huron st.

Lewis Miller (deceased) was born in Scio tp., Washtenaw Co., in 1844, and was a son of Godfrey Miller, a native of Wurtemberg, Germany. He married, in Scio tp., Fredericka Burkhardt, who settled in this county in 1848. Mr. Miller became a farmer of prominence in Scio tp., owning at the time of his death 235 acres of valuable land. His widow sold this property in 1880, and at present resides in Ann Arbor, where she owns valuable city property.

D. S. Millen, proprietor Ann Arbor Soap Works, was born in Connecticut in 1823, and is a son of John D. Millen. At the age of seven years, his parents moved to Ballston, N. Y., and thence to Albany. In 1839 D. S. moved to Detroit, Mich., when he became employed in the Whitney Tribune Corps. In 1840 he was a resident of Grand Rapids, and moved from the latter place to Ann Arbor. In 1845, he married Levisa Booth, a daughter of Elijah Booth, of New York city. Mr. Millen was a manufacturer of hubs and spokes in Wisconsin for 11 years, but since his residence in Ann Arbor, has devoted his time and attention to the manufacture of an excellent quality of erasive soap.

Lorrie Mills, one of the pioneers of Ann Arbor, was born in Litchfield county, Conn., Dec. 15, 1804, and was the ninth son of Asa and Arethusa Mills, natives of Connecticut. Of this family a prominent journalist says: "Lorrie Mills is one of a family of 14 children; of these 10 lived to middle age, married, and became heads of families; all are Christians and professional singers; all pledged to total abstinence; all are Republicans. Of the male members four are church Deacons. The posterity of this family number about 150 grandchildren and great-grandchildren. In 1862 seven brothers and one sister met at Kalamazoo, Mich., with their consorts and children, in all a family gathering of about 40." At the age of 16 Mr. Mills was apprenticed to a merchant tailor, and served considerable time at this trade. In 1826 he came westward, and located in the village of Ann Arbor in June. He built a small frame building that served for a home for several years. In 1828 he married Harriet G. Parsons, a daughter of Roswell and Agnes Parsons, well-known pioneers of this county. Mrs. Mills died June 18, 1869, and was laid at rest in the cemetery at Ann Arbor. There are 2 children of Mr. Mills' family living—Addison D. and Kittie B., wife of Rev. R. D. Parker, of Manhattan, Kans. Two children are deceased—Mattie I. died in February, 1860, and Lorrin C. departed this life in August, 1862. In March, 1874, Mr. Mills suffered another bereavement, in the loss of his second wife, formerly Mrs. Burnett, whose memory is held in grateful hearts by a large circle of relatives and friends. When Mr. Mills arrived in Ann Arbor, he was in all probability the first tailor west of Detroit. Like many who left comfortable homes in the East, he had little capital, financially speaking, but an inexhaustible fund of energy and vigor, which foreshadowed a prosperous future. The humble dwelling previously mentioned was partitioned off for the double purpose of a home and a workshop. Mr. Mills was a member of a military band, organized in Buffalo, N. Y., and was identified with the reception committee who welcomed the noble Lafayette to America's shores, on the occasion of his re-visit to this country, and had the honor of a formal introduction to the great French General. He was also an eye witness of the opening of the Erie canal, and was in the band that furnished music on that occasion. Mr. Mills has been a Deacon in the Congregational Church for 34 years, evincing a kind, Christian spirit, and has indeed proved himself a worthy laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. He has served as Superintendent of Sabbath-schools for 25 years, and for 19 consecutive years, from its organization, Superintendent of the Congregational school at Ann Arbor. He also led church choirs for 25 or 30 years. He is now residing at Ann Arbor, in very comfortable circumstances, a fitting reward for the laborious and faithful services in the trying scenes of pioneer life.

Mr. Mills' portrait is given in this volume.

George W. Moore, bookkeeper with C. Eberbach, was born in Phelps, Ontario Co., N. Y., in 1825, and is a son of Loren and Philena (Amsden) Moore, the former a native of Vermont, and the latter a native of Massachusetts. George was but six years old when his parents settled in York tp., and spent his early life among the pioneer scenes of Washtenaw county. He received a liberal education at the district schools, and applied himself closely to study, while others more careless whiled away the precious time in frivolous amusements. In his 23d year he married Caroline Hunt, a daughter of Timothy Hunt, a pioneer school teacher of Washtenaw county. Four children were born to this union, 2 of whom survive—Emily and Ellen. Mrs. Moore died in 1856, and two years later Mr. M. married Jane E. Hunt, of Lodi tp. She died in 1871. In 1873 he married Emily Barnes, a native of Michigan. In former years Mr. Moore was a farmer and grocer.

John Moore, dealer in books and stationery, Ann Arbor, was born in Berkshire county, Mass., in 1824. He received a liberal education, and at the age of 18 removed to Genesee county, N. Y., where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits for about eight years. While a resident of this latter place he married Emily Calkins, and 6 children have been born to them. Mr. Moore is an Elder in the Presbyterian Church of Ann Arbor. About 1868 he embarked in his present business, and so far has been quite successful.

Lewis Moore (deceased), the founder of the Ann Arbor Agricultural Works, was born at Lancaster, Pa., A. D. 1808. He grew to manhood in that State, where he married Miss Sarah Chalfin. He was in the agricultural implement business in Pennsylvania until 1853, when he came to Ypsilanti, Mich. There he engaged in farming and lumbering, also carrying on a saw-mill. He died in 1875. He was the receiver of a number of patents from 1848-'64, and, like many inventors, lost much from litigation. He was the patentee of a wheat drill, mowing machine and other articles. Of his children, Eli, the elder, grew up in Pennsylvania, but has spent much of his life at Ypsilanti and Ann Arbor. He learned the trade of machinist. He has been connected with the Ann Arbor Agricultural Works as salesman and manager, and is now Superintendent of the same. He married at Ypsilanti, in 1869, Miss Elizabeth Moore. To them have been born 3 sons—Windle, Eli and Walter. He is a member of the Masonic Society, Knights of Honor and others.

Elijah W. Morgan, attorney and counsellor at law, Ann Arbor, was born in Watertown, Jefferson Co., N. Y., May 15, 1805. His parents moved there about 1800, when there were not a dozen families living in the town. His father, Rev. Elisha Morgan, of the Black River Baptist Association, was a native of New London Co., Conn., and of Welsh descent, and his mother, a native of Stonington, in the same county. Owing to the scarcity of mechanics, when Watertown was yet a village Mr. Morgan's father had to exercise his Yankee ingenuity in making and repairing agricultural implements, and Elijah worked with him, and gained a great deal of practical knowledge about all kinds of machinery, and would always learn the reason anything was made the way it was, and what benefit it was to make it that way, and in such cases always endeavored to learn the theory as well as the practice of whatever he did. His mother was quite feeble, and Elijah learned to do housework, to sew, to knit, and in every way he could to save her steps and make life a little brighter for the feeble woman. He grew up a stout, healthy, rosy-cheeked lad, and was quite strong for one of his age. One day his father was called to preach a funeral sermon, the distance being about 20 miles. He told Elijah to cut corn-stalks the next day. The boy had never done such work before, but next day labored long and earnestly at what he supposed was the work given him to do. Most of the kernels of corn at that day had on them a spot of glaze about the size of a duck shot, or small pea. His father returned after dark and was surprised and displeased to learn that Elijah not merely topped the corn stalks, covering nearly half an acre, but cut to the ground and spoiled all he had touched, when corn was likely to be scarce. During the night it grew very cold, and a hoar frost killed all the seed in the vicinity, and for many miles around there was no seed corn raised that year except what that 11 year old boy saved by a mistake! Elijah was sent to school before he had reached his sixth birthday, and had not been attending long before he showed conclusive evidence of the remarkable memory he possessed, and learned so fast that he passed many who had been in attendance for years. When he was nine years old his father moved to a small farm in Rutland county, and when 14, to a place 16 miles further east, in Lewis county. He owned no land in this latter place, except a small garden, and Elijah worked on a farm and at other occupations till he was 17, when he entered Lowville Academy, remaining there four summers; from the time schools closed in the spring till the close of the academic year in September. The last two summers he assisted in the academy as teacher, and before the close of the fourth summer he was engaged as assistant teacher in the new academy, from the next spring, until the fall of 1827. This he did, at the same time completing all the studies of the usual college course, and keeping up the study of law in the office of Charles Doyan, an attorney at Lowville. Mr. Doyan was a member of the New York Senate, and his duties requiring almost his constant attendance at Auburn, before the academy was out in 1827, he hired Mr. Morgan to take charge of the business, and to board at his (Doyan's) home, and see to doing what the family required, which duty Mr. Morgan faithfully performed until the spring of 1829. Having heard fabulous stories of the wonderful region lying along the banks of the St. Joseph and Huron rivers, Mr. Morgan decided to emigrate West, and see if it would be a good place for a young attorney to settle. (He had studied law some in New York.) He came to Detroit and from there he traveled over this part of the State, but finally concluded to locate at Ann Arbor, believing that was the best place for an opening. After locating he entered the office of Gideon Wilcoxson, the Prosecuting Attorney of Washtenaw county, remaining with him till he died in August, 1830. He was Deputy County Clerk of this county, and acted as Clerk of the Court until after his admission to the Bar in November, 1830. Mr. Morgan has been honored with very near all the offices in this county which the people of Washtenaw confer upon any of her citizens. Of the duties of school, village and city offices, and of the business of companies or societies for the benefit of the town or public, he has borne his share of the burdens. He was the first President of the Toledo, Ann Arbor & Northern R. R., and was also Cashier and Director of the Bank of Washtenaw. In matters pertaining to the educational interest of the community he has always taken an active interest, and donated one-fifth of the land on which Michigan University at present stands. The donors numbered seven, three of whom are living to-day. He also sold to the city of Ann Arbor the ground on which the high school building stands, at a very small price. In his dealings with persons, as an attorney, he always endeavored to obtain an amicable settlement between all parties connected with the case he had in hand, telling them it was better to do this way than to have a long siege of trouble. He has given his attention to the real estate business more than any other attorney in the county, and has done a large amount of conveyancing, and making contracts for working lands on shares, and such other work as pertains to the business of that office. Mr. Morgan is the oldest practicing attorney in Washtenaw county, but at present has confined his attention to matters of real estate. He resides on the corner of Fifth and Huron streets.

A portrait of Mr. Morgan will be found in this work.

The two following years he was engaged in literary work and teaching in New York city. In 1870 he was appointed Professor of Modern Languages and Literature in the University of Michigan, which position he held until February, 1880, when he resigned it. In 1872 he published the first volume of his translation of "Ueberweg's History of Philosophy" which was followed by the second volume in 1874. In 1880 he published "British Thoughts and Thinkers." He has been a contributor to a number of journals, and is an associate of the Victoria Institute, London.

J. H. Morris, attorney at law, Ann Arbor. For the past 30 years, Mr. Morris has practiced before the courts of Washtenaw county, and during this time has succeeded through his well-known ability in gaining a large share of the public patronage.

Leonard Morse (deceased) was among the representative men and pioneers of this county, and is worthy of a few words in this volume. He was born in Vermont, and settled in this county as early as 1824, moving from Canandaigua Co., N. Y. While a resident of Vermont, he was united in marriage to Rachel Grant and 6 children, 5 sons and 1 daughter, were given to them—Thomas, John' Calvin, Andrew, Chester and Mrs. Page, of Livingston Co., Mich. Chester, the youngest of the children, grew to manhood in this county, and followed agricultural pursuits the greater part of his life. He married Hannah Agin, daughter of Thomas Agin, in 1841, and 2 children were born to them—Chester, died at the age of 13, and Mrs. Ellen Slater, who resides in Ann Arbor, being in very comfortable circumstances.

James Morwick, architect and builder, Ann Arbor, was born in Orkney Island, Scotland, in 1807, and is a son of William and Elizabeth (Balfour) Morwick, the latter being a member of the great Balfour family of Scotland, whose fame extended over two continents. James resided in Scotland until 1832, and worked at his trade, becoming a very skillful workman. In the latter year he went to Canada, where he remained until 1834. He resided at Syracuse, N. Y., for 24 years, and in 1860 located at Ann Arbor. In 1834 he married Anna Atkinson, a native of Cumberland Co., England. Mrs. M. died Feb. 14, 1847, at Harrison, Winnebago Co., Ills., and one year later Mr. M. married Minerva E. Coddington of Wisconsin. Mr. Morwick possesses a kind disposition and noble character. During "slavery days," he was a prime mover in the famous Underground Railroad. As an architect, none stand higher in this county than he. The residences of Dr. Palmer, Judge Cooley, St. Andrew's Episcopal church, bear substantial evidence of the fact.

B. Mount, contractor and builder, Ann Arbor, was born at Geneva, Seneca Co., N. Y., Oct. 10, 1810, and is a son of David S. and Mary Mount. He was married, and 4 children born to him—James, manager of a large cutlery house, New York city; Ida, wife of Attorney Young, of Ohio; Julia and Juliette, residents of Ann Arbor. Mr. Mount removed to Ann Arbor in 1834, and located permanently in 1836. He has been very successful as a builder and assisted in the construction of the old court-house of Washtenaw county.

David Mowerson, farmer and stock-raiser, sec. 14, Ann Arbor tp.; P. O., Ann Arbor; was born in New York in 1811, and is a son of Abram and Anna (Hurlburt) Mowerson. He grew to manhood in Monroe Co., N. Y., where he followed farming from boyhood, and succeeded in obtaining a liberal education. During the summer of 1835 he settled in Ann Arbor tp., where he purchased 80 acres of land, on which was a small log house built by James Wood, one of the earliest pioneers of this county. During the pioneer period of his life, Mr. Mowerson endured many hardships, and during the State Militia drills, he officiated as 1st. Lieutenant. In 1843 he married Sabra Fox, a daughter of Phineas P. and Fanny (Lennox) Fox. They have 3 children—George D. who married Mary Jolly, of Ann Arbor; Clara A., and Charles J. In 1854, Mr. M. erected his present substantial and handsome residence. Phineas P. Fox, the father of Mrs. Mowerson, was born in New York in 1790, where he was married at 30 years of age. He moved to this county in 1831, settling on sec. 15, in that tp., where he bought 160 acres of land. He was described by those who were intimate with him as a very industrious and honorable man.

J. B. Mowry, farmer, sec. 2, Ann Arbor tp., was born in Berkshire Co., Mass., in 1809, son of Elisha and Barbara (Barker) Mowry. When James had attained his seventh year his parents settled in Madison county, N. Y., where he remained until 1831. At this latter period he came to Michigan, and settled on a small farm on sec. 2, Ann Arbor tp., part of the land being bought of Government, and part of that well-known early pioneer, David Botsford. Mr. Mowry had invested all his ready cash in land and a yoke of oxen to till the virgin soil, and consequently, was forced to live for quite a period in a small log cabin. After many years of toil, unknown to many of this day, Mr. Mowry accumulated a competency, and now owns 200 acres of magnificent farming property, his elegant residence being among the finest in the county. While a resident of New York, in 1830, he married Alice Edgerton, daughter of William Edgerton. This lady, a most worthy helpmate to the sturdy pioneer, departed this life in 1835. Mr. Mowry subsequently married Abigail Nixon, daughter of John and Sarah Nixon. Four children have been given to them—Sarah, Ludena, Catherine, and Lucinda.

Charles Murray, Ann Arbor, was born in Superior tp., this county in 1848. He was educated in the common schools there and brought up to the work of a farmer. In 1871 he moved to Hamburg, Livingston county, where he remained one year. He then came to Ann Arbor, where he has since lived. In 1873 he opened a meat market and followed that business one year. He then purchased a steam threshing-machine which he has run till the present. In 1880 he threshed 48,860 bushels of grain. In 1872 he was married to Miss Mary J. Treadwell, of Dixboro, Washtenaw county. To them have been born 2 sons and 2 daughters, all of whom are living.

While a resident of this latter place he married Matilda Metzger, daughter of Valentine Metzger, a prominent German of that section of country. Four children were born to them—Matilda A., William F., Johanna K. and Adele. Mr. Newman is a member of the Evangelical Synagogue of North America, and an able exponent of the gospel. He is a linguist of more than ordinary ability, having acquired a proficiency in Hebrew, Latin, French, German and English.

Prof. J. F. Nichols, Ann Arbor, was born in Onondaga county, N. Y., in 1820. At the age of 12, his parents, Solomon and Ann Nichols, removed to Ogden, N. Y., where the Prof. received his preliminary education. He subsequently taught school at Lima and Oberlin, in Ohio, to procure sufficient funds, so as to enable him to obtain a classical education. In 1844, he came to Washtenaw county, and located at Saline, and afterward went to Detroit. In 1850, he married Elvira Robinson, a daughter of Loammi and Isabel Robinson, the former a native of Maine, and the latter of Massachusetts. They have 2 children—Anna and Alden. Mr. Nichols owns valuable property in Ann Arbor, where he has made his home for many years, though for over 30 years he has been engaged in teaching at Detroit, and at present is Principal of Cash Union school of that city, the scholars numbering over 1,000.

Dr. W. W. Nichols, dentist, Ann Arbor, is a native of the "Empire State," and was born at Plattsburg, Clinton Co., in 1842. In his native town he received his elementary education, and later attended school at Patterson, N. Y. In 1863 he began the study of dentistry, with Dr. S. V. Howard of Plattsburg, one of the leading dentists in Eastern New York. He remained with him three years, and in 1866 opened an office at Saugatuck, Allegan Co., Mich., where he remained one year. He then removed to Holland, Mich. In 1871 his house and office were burned in a fire which almost entirely destroyed that place, and he came to Ann Arbor. Here he at once opened his dental rooms, and has since been practicing, his office now being over the Star Clothing House, corner of S. Main and Washington streets. In 1877 he took one year of study in medicine at Michigan University. Dr. Nichols is also interested in fruit-growing, having a fine fruit farm of 56 acres, near Ann Arbor. On this land there are 7,300 pear, apple, plum and peach trees, many of them being in bearing condition. Here he makes his home and devotes the time he can spare from his business to the scientific study and culture of fruit, combining thus, pleasure, profit and healthful exercise.

John Nixon (deceased) was born in New Jersey in 1794. He was reared and educated there, and followed farming as an occupation till he emigrated West. Before leaving he was married to Sarah Sutton, and 4 children have been born to them—John (dec.), Justice (dec.), Nathaniel, and Sarah (dec.). Mr. Nixon came to this county at an early day and bought 160 acres of land on sec. 11, Ann Arbor tp., where he located. Eighty acres of this he bought of the Government at 10 shillings an acre. He built a cabin on this land, and lived there a number of years. During this time he kept a public house, and prospered in this business, as there were but few taverns on the road to Detroit. He was a good man, and enjoyed the respect of a large circle of friends and acquaintances. He died in 1870 and was laid at rest in the beautiful city of Ann Arbor. Mrs. Nixon died in 1859. She was a native of New Jersey, and a most worthy helpmate in the battle of life. Nathan, the only surviving member of this pioneer family, was born in Ann Arbor tp., in 1836, and has followed agricultural pursuit from boyhood, now owning a valuable farm of 100 acres. In 1860 he married Ellen McIntyre, a daughter of John McIntyre, of this county. This union has been blessed with 10 children—Leonard, George, Justice, Carrie, Frank, Ella, Norman, Homer and Lewis. Mr. Nixon is a prominent farmer of Ann Arbor tp., and while residing in Northfield tp. officiated as Township Treasurer.

A. L. Noble, proprietor of the Star Clothing House at Ann Arbor, Mich., was born in Orleans Co., N. Y., A. D. 1843. He prepared for college at Lima, N. Y., and entered the University of Michigan in 1869. Difficulty with his eyes would not permit of his continuing his studies, and he turned his mind toward business. In 1870 he entered the employ of Joe T. Jacobs, dealer in clothing, as salesman, and afterward became a partner in the business. He sold out his interest to Mr. Jacobs, and in 1876 opened the Star Clothing Store, corner of Main and Washington streets, where he is now located.

John T. Noble, barber, Ann Arbor, was born near Paris, France, and while yet a child his parents emigrated to America, and settled in the State of New York. They then removed to Ohio, and thence to Michigan. Mr. Noble has been engaged in keeping a tonsorial parlor in Ann Arbor for about 1 year, although he has been engaged in the business for nearly 13 years. His wife ably assists him, and ranks among the best lady artists in the State. While a resident of St. Louis, Mich., Mr. Noble was foreman of the fire department, and since coming to Ann Arbor, has received numerous testimonials relative to his ability and integrity while a member of that organization.

William Noble, proprietor planing-mill and sash, door and blind factory, Ann Arbor, was born in Orleans Co., N. Y., in 1819. His father, James Noble, married Mrs. Keziah Northup, by whom he had 4 children—Lewis, a resident of Mich., Charlotte, who was married to Isaac Butler, and died in the East; Horace (deceased) and William M. The latter at one time was extensively engaged in the shoe business at Albion, New York; also followed agricultural pursuits for some time. For a number of years Mr. Noble was proprietor of a large saw-mill in Albion, but after coming to Ann Arbor, he purchased the planing-mill, situated near the Ann Arbor flouring mills, where he transacts a remunerative business. He is also extensively engaged as a contractor and builder. Mr. Noble has always taken an active interest in military affairs, and on one occasion was selected as Associate Judge to sit on some criminal cases. He married Selina Bragg, a daughter of Leonard Bragg, of New York. They have 2 children—George W. and Adelbert.

John S. Nowland is a son of Andrew Nowland, who emigrated with his wife and 7 children to Washtenaw county, and settled on sec. 28, Ann Arbor tp., in June, 1824. Mr. Nowland purchased 120 acres of land, embracing a goodly portion of the 4th and 5th wards of the now city of Ann Arbor. His first house was located on the corner of State and River streets, or what was more familiarly known as the gravel-pit. Mr. Nowland built it when emigration was pouring very rapidly into the new Territory, and it was used as a tavern or hotel. He was also extensively engaged in buying and selling land. He built the first grist and saw-mills in the vicinity of Ann Arbor. The first named was situated about 20 rods north of the city mills, and near the R. R. cattle yards. The millstones were not the burr-stones of modern days, but were cut out of large boulders, that were found on the hillsides near the mill. The stones are in use to-day, one doing service as a door-step to the Lutheran church, in the 2d ward of Ann Arbor, and the other has been in use for some time as an apple-crusher. The saw-mill was built in 1825, and was located on the right bank of the Huron, near where State street crosses the M. C. R. R. track. Mr. Nowland was a very enterprising man; in heart and action, benevolent to a marked degree. His acts of kindness to the poor citizen and weary, destitute emigrant, are remembered by all the people that survive him, and wherever the descendants of the pioneers of Washtenaw county are found, they gratefully remember and venerate the name of Andrew Nowland. John S. Nowland, a resident of Ann Arbor, was born in that city, on the bank of the Huron, June 13, 1826. Mr. Nowland believes he was the first white child born in Ann Arbor, but the priority is claimed by another. It is a question that cannot be satisfactorily settled at this distant day, but it is undoubtedly true that if he was not the first, he was certainly the second. When five years old, his sister Abigail married W. A. Begole, who settled in Sylvan tp., four miles south of Chelsea. At that age he went to live with his sister, remained there two years, and then came back to Ann Arbor. In 1849, the gold fever broke out, and Mr. Nowland joined the rushing tide of humanity that was sweeping across the country, all in quest of the precious metal. He worked in the mines two years, and feeling signs of coming sickness, he hastened back to Michigan. He was quite successful in his western trip, and after arrival in this county, purchased a splendid farm in Scio tp., where he lived for 22 years. He then sold his farm, and has since resided in Ann Arbor. He was married, Jan. 1, 1852, to Lucy Ann Bird, born in sec. 16, Ann Arbor tp., September, 1830, and daughter of John Bird, an early pioneer of that tp. Mr. Nowland has been an active and successful business man.

Daniel O'Hara, farmer, sec. 3, Ann Arbor tp.; P. O., Ann Arbor; was born in County Limerick, Ireland, in 1802, son of John and Margaret O'Hara, natives of Ireland. Daniel was reared and educated in the "Emerald Isle," and in 1827, crossed the ocean to the United States. He remained a short time in New York, and then went to Connecticut, leaving the latter State in 1834, after a seven years' residence, with $1,000 in his pocket. He came to Washtenaw county, and bought an 80-acre tract of land in Ann Arbor tp., paying $10 per acre for the same. In 1837 he bought 80 acres more, and in 1857 bought 160 acres of E. W. Morgan, a lawyer of Ann Arbor. He married Bridget Inum, and 2 children—John and Joanna, were born to them. Mr. O'Hara's early years of founding a home, attendant with many hardships, entitle him to be ranked among the self-made men of Ann Arbor tp.

Edward Olney, LL. D., Ann Arbor, Professor of Mathematics in the University of Michigan, is a lineal descendant of Thomas Olney, who was born in Hertford, England, in 1600, and came to Massachusetts in 1635. He followed Roger Williams to Rhode Island in 1638, and was received by Williams into the first land company of Providence. He was baptized by Williams in the company of 12 other persons, who constituted the First Baptist Church of Providence, and of America in 1638, and was among the earliest ministers of that Church. On his mother's side Professor Olney is descended from the Emerson families. He was born at Moreau, Saratoga Co., N. Y., July 24, 1827. His father removed to Oakland county, Michigan, in 1833, but remained only a few months and then permanently settled in Weston, Wood Co., Ohio. His school privileges were scanty, enjoyed in log school-houses, and only in childhood years, six weeks being all his school life after the age of 13. To secure even this amount of instruction he hired another boy to drive the ox-team on the farm, while he went daily two and a half miles to his studies, teaching at home an evening arithmetic school to obtain means of paying his substitute. Day's algebra was gone through with in those six weeks. His teaching in district schools commenced at the age of 19, at a salary of $12.50 per month, boarding around. While working at home in summer, he would study mathematics and natural science; in winter sit down without a teacher, to the Latin. At the age of 21 he was employed to teach the district school in Perrysburg, with the understanding that a union graded school was about to be established, as was done the following year. This was the first union school of that region. Professor Olney was at first principal of the grammar department; when, two years later, the Superintendency became vacant, he was appointed to that place. Having to teach Latin, as well as higher English, the utmost diligence and application in private studies accompanied his school duties. His proficiency in varied studies, and his eminence as an instructor, became such that at the instance of college-bred brother teachers the honorary degree of M. A. was conferred on him by Madison University, New York. In 1853 he accepted an appointment as Professor of Mathematics in Kalamazoo College, Michigan. In 1863 he was called to the Professorship of Mathematics in the University of Michigan, which position he still holds. He has acquired a national reputation as an author of mathematical works, his works embracing arithmetics and algebra for school use and treatises on algebra, geometry, trigonometry and calculus for use in colleges. His books are used in a large number of the leading schools and colleges in the country. During the years 1861-'63 he was proprietor and editor of the Michigan Christian Herald, in addition to his duties as Professor at Kalamazoo. He has also been contributing editor of the weekly Educational Journal; is the author of the article on "Pure Mathematics," in the Educational Cyclopaedia, and of various other productions. In appreciation of his work, and in just recognition of the extent of his acquisitions, Kalamazoo College has conferred upon him the degree of LL. D. His work as an instructor has received a marked success, and his influence on those under his teaching is such that all are greatly interested in their work. He has always given his earnest attention and energetic support to the interests of society. Every work of true reform has had in him an unflinching advocate. In Sunday-schools he has been a leader, superintending schools at home, and working in State and national organizations. An associate teacher at Perrysburg, Miss Sarah Huntington, daughter of the Hon. Elijah Huntington, became his wife during the time he was teaching at that place.

Frank H. Ortman, Ann Arbor, was born at Binda, Westphalia, in 1849. When he was two years of age his parents removed to Ann Arbor, where his father died in 1855. In the common schools of this city he was educated. When 15 years of age he was placed in the store of A. Herz, of this city, to learn business life, and has since remained with him. In 1874 and 1875 he was elected Alderman from the fifth ward of this city, and served two terms. He is a member of Golden Rule Lodge of F. & A. M. of this city. In politics he is a Democrat, and is a leader in his party in his ward.

C. M. Osgood, Ann Arbor tp., sec. 6, was born in Ontario county, N. Y., in 1830. When he was six years old his parents came to this State and located near Adrian. There he received a common-school education and in 1862 entered the law department of Michigan University, from which he graduated in 1864. On examination he was admitted to practice in the Superior Courts of the State. After graduation he went to Minnesota, where he remained but one year and, returning to this county, purchased his present farm, since when he has been engaged in agriculture. In 1865 he was married to Miss Eliza Twitchell, of Hamburg, Livingston Co., Mich. To them have been born 1 son and 1 daughter.

Major Seth T. Otis, was born at Watertown, Jefferson Co., N. Y., Dec. 21, 1811; his parents were Captain Seth and Chloe (Taylor) Otis; the former a native of Colchester, Conn., where he was born June 24, 1777, and the latter a native of Springfield, Mass., and born Dec. 18, 1781. They were married July 21, 1803, and soon afterward removed to the place above named, where the subject of this sketch was born. He was reared in his native place and kept in school till 14 years of age, then entered as clerk in a retail hardware store, and afterward received no literary education. At the age of 19 he entered the wholesale hardware store of Erastus Corning & Co., of Albany, N. Y., with whom he remained three years, and on account of ill-health resigned his position and made a year's visit to Europe, and a year later (1837) went to Chicago and opened a hardware store on Dearborn, between Water and Lake streets, where he remained seven years and did a prosperous business. Was also appointed the State's Agent for receiving and delivering supplies to the contractors on the Illinois & Michigan canal. He was a Director in the Chicago branch of the Illinois State Bank, was a Vestryman in St. James' Episcopal Church, and was elected by the citizens of Chicago Major of the 76th Regiment, at the first organization of the militia in that district. In 1841 was the originator and founder of the "Young Men's Association of Chicago," it being the first permanent library society formed in that city.

started with 200 subscribers, and at the great fire in 1871 contained 1,659 members, and nearly 25,000 volumes. After the fire the society was merged into the present free Public Library of Chicago. Mr. Otis takes more pride in the organization of this society, than in any other single act of his somewhat eventful career.

He tells us that when a resident of Chicago he purchased for $800 the lot on the southwest corner of State and Monroe streets (200 feet on State and 100 on Monroe) and opposite the present Palmer House, erected his dwelling house thereon, and lived in it three years. In 1843 he sold it at a profit of $300, and so good was his sale considered by William B. Ogden, that he said, "If I could sell my property like that, I would leave Chicago to-morrow." This lot alone is worth to-day nearly half a million of dollars.

In January, 1844, failing health and the then poor prospects for business in Chicago induced him to close up his business in that city, and having received the appointment of United States Consul to Basle, Switzerland, went there with his family and remained two years. We had not at that early day a minister to that Republic, and Mr. Otis's powers were semi-diplomatic; and so well were his duties performed that he returned to the United States with letters of high commendation from William R. King, our Minister to France, and John C. Calhoun, Secretary of State.

A few years later he entered the employ of H. B. Clafin & Co., of the city of New York, as manager of their law collections, and remained with them 15 years. During this time he traveled in 23 different States of the Union, and gained a large and valuable experience.

In 1869 he retired from active business with a sufficient competency, and located in Ann Arbor upon a slightly dozen acres of land just beyond the city limits, and overlooking that pretty little city of schools, churches and the State University.

He was married Sept. 18, 1838, to Frances Louisa Kellogg, daughter of the Hon. Charles Kellogg, of Kelloggsvile, Cayuga Co., N. Y. This marriage has resulted in the birth of 3 sons—Charles Day, a successful hardware merchant of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin; Basel K. (born in Switzerland) and for the last two years bookkeeper and assistant teller in the First National Bank of Peoria, Illinois; and William A., a graduate of Michigan University, and now completing his studies in architecture in the School of Fine Arts at Paris, France.

Mr. Otis is not a member of any religious society, is termed "liberal" in his religious views, and attends the Unitarian Church. Was formerly Democratic in politics, but for many years has acted with the Republican party.

He says he finds one of the great pleasures in his retirement in the fact that through all his life he never compromised a debt that he honestly owed, and he defies the world to show that he ever wronged a man of a dollar. He has fitted up his place into a fancy farm with an abundance of desirable fruit; and he is a very genial, hospitable gentleman, living at his ease and working with great energy at such things as he fancies, enjoying the society and correspondence of his relatives and friends far and near.

Alonzo B. Palmer, M. A., M. D., Ann Arbor, was born at Richfield, Otsego Co., N. Y., Oct. 6, 1815. His father was born at Stonington, Conn., and came of Puritan stock. Dr. Palmer was educated in the schools and academies of Otsego, Herkimer and Oswego counties, N. Y., and graduated in medicine from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, of the Western district of New York, in 1839. After passing the winters of 1847-'8 in attendance at the medical schools and hospitals of New York and Philadelphia, he took up his residence at Tecumseh, Mich., removing to Chicago soon after. During 1852 he served as city physician of the "Garden City," through a severe cholera epidemic among emigrants from Northern Europe, and the same year received the appointment of Professor of Anatomy in the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor. In 1854 he was transferred to the chair of Materia Medica, Therapeutics, and Diseases of Women and Children, and in 1860 was appointed Professor of Pathology and the Practice of Medicine, which position he occupies at the present time. In the spring of 1861 he was appointed Surgeon of the 2d Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, was ranking Surgeon in Gen. Richardson's command at the first battle of Bull Run, and dressed the first wound inflicted by the enemy at Blackburn's Ford, on July 18. He resigned his commission in September, 1861, on account of his duties in the University. In 1855 he was the recipient of the degree of M. A. from the University of Nashville, Tennessee. In 1859 he visited Europe, and visited the medical schools and hospitals of London, Dublin, Edinburgh and Paris, returning to this country on the opening of the Rebellion, in 1861. In 1864 he was appointed Professor of Pathology and the Practice of Medicine, in Berkshire Medical College, Mass., and in 1869 to the same chair in the medical department of Bowdoin College, in Maine. The latter position he still holds, delivering his lectures during the summer vacation of the University of Michigan. Although occupied with a large practice in Tecumseh and Chicago, since his removal from the latter place, he has devoted his time and attention principally to teaching medicine, and the practical duties of the physician; while his clinical, hospital and consulting practices are still large, yet his most absorbing work is taken up with his duties of instruction. His students, in the different medical schools throughout his former territory, number about nine thousand. During the whole period of his professorship, he has been a decided antagonist to the use of alcoholic liquors, and other narcotics, whether tobacco or opium, and has often taught the evil effects of tea and coffee, when used as stimulants. Dr. Palmer is a member of the American Medical Association, and was elected its Vice-President in 1860, holding that position during its suspension, and until the meeting in Chicago. He has often served as chairman of that renowned medical body. In 1859 he was elected honorary member of the New York Medical Society; was president of the Michigan State Medical Society in 1872-'3; was elected honorary member of the State Medical Society of Maine in 1875; contributed to medical journals "a full report of the Chicago cholera epidemic in 1852;" while chairman of committees of the Ann Arbor Medical Association, made reports on 'the plan and organization of State and County Medical Societies,' "Medical Literature," and Medical Education;" he published lectures on "Sulphate of Quinine," "Asiatic Cholera;" four lectures on "Homeopathy," criticising adversely the dogmas of that school, "Paralysis," "Pneumonia," reference being made in the latter to the experience of several years' practice in the use of free antipyretic and anti-phlogistic doses of quinine. He was, with others, from 1852 to 1859, editor of the Peninsula Journal of Medicine.

James Parker, farmer, sec. 24, was born in Buckinghamshire, England, in 1809, and is a son of John and Hannah Parker. He was reared and educated in his native shire, and was married in England to Mary Sims, a daughter of John Sims, of English nativity. They have 5 children living—1 born in England, and the remainder in America. In 1834 he crossed the Atlantic in a sailing vessel, and upon landing, he immediately started westward, stopping at Ann Arbor: from the latter place to Scio tp., and thence to Lodi tp., buying property in each. In 1864 he moved upon his present farm of 107 acres of valuable land, where he has since lived. Mr. and Mrs. Parker came here in early days, and thought they owned a big farm when they had one comprising 10 acres. They endured many hardships—at one time having only 10 articles of furniture in their log cabin, at another time not tasting an apple for nearly a year. Mr. Parker was a wagon-maker in England, but did not follow his trade very much after locating in this county.

William Parker, farmer and mill owner, sec. 25 and 36, Ann Arbor tp.; P. O., Ann Arbor; was born in Buckinghamshire, England, in 1837, son of John and Ann Parker. He lived in England 25 years, and during thistime served five years apprenticeship as a wagon-maker. In 1862 he married Mary Lawley, a native of Liverpool, England., daughter of James and Harriet Lawley. There were born to them 6 children, 5 of whom are living—Florence, Fred J., Maud N., Bertha B., and George G. Harriet is deceased. Mr. Parker settled in Washtenaw county in 1863, and bought his present farm, consisting of 100 acres. About 1876 he purchased a feed mill, with two-run of stone, and it now enjoys a fair custom trade.

James J. Parshall, one of Washtenaw county's old and respected pioneers, was born at Palmyra, Wayne Co., N. Y., Feb. 23, 1820. His parents were John and Persis (Hopkinson) Parshall. The former's ancestors were Huguenots, but through the cruelty of Louis XIV., of France, they fled the country, and located in Orange county, N. Y., late in the 17th century. In 1792, James Parshall, the grandfather of James J., settled in Ontario (now Wayne) county, N. Y., and being zealous in his religious views, organized the First Baptist Church in Wayne county, giving liberally toward its support. Mr. Parshall's ancestors on his mother's side, settled at Plymouth, Mass., in 1633. At the breaking out of the Revolutionary war, Jonathan Hopkins and four of his sons, Caleb (Mr. Parshall's grandfather), David, Jonathan and John, who were living at Haverhill, New Hampshire, enlisted in the Continental army, and at present their names are on the New Hampshire muster rolls in the pension department at Washing ton. Caleb was the father of 17 children, and was living in Wayne county, N. Y., when the war of 1812 began, and the family was well represented in the American armies along the New York frontier.

John Parshall, the father of this sketch, was a contractor on the Erie canal, of New York, and the Cleveland and Columbus canal, of Ohio. In 1833 he removed with his family to Michigan, and resumed work as a contractor on the Detroit & Saginaw turnpike. He subsequently labored on the Clinton & Kalamazoo canal. James J. spent his early days with his father in the different enterprises in which he was engaged. In 1841, both father and son were large contractors on the Illinois & Michigan canal, and extremely prosperous in the undertakings. The State of Illinois suspending work on her public enterprises, left Mr. Parshall and his son in straightened financial circumstances; but happily they were enabled to pay every dollar of the debts they owed and to start in life once more. In 1842, James J. was School Inspector of Ann Arbor tp., and the same year received the commission as Captain of Co. A., 9th Reg., Michigan Militia. He was in the employ of Capt. E. B. Ward for two years, being a sailor on the Northern Lakes during that period. He was married Jan. 1, 1845, to Esther McFarlen, of Oakland county, Mich., and the same year settled on the farm where he now resides. Of the children born to this union, 3 are living—Julian G., Adrian J. and Florence. Mrs. Parshall died in 1856, and a year later, he married Christiana Culbertson, of Tecumseh, Mich., by whom he had 1 son—Charles T. Mr. Parshall was again called upon to mourn the loss of a wife, and in Feb., 1869 he laid to rest his companion of a few years. In November, 1870, he married Sarah Twomley Stevenson, his present wife, who has borne him 1 child—Lena.

Politically Mr. Parshall has always been a Democrat. He was County Drain Commissioner from 1862 to 1870; 1871 to 1880 was Treasurer of the Washtenaw County Agricultural and Horticultural Society; 1878-'79 was Treasurer of the Washtenaw County Pomological Society; and from 1879-'81 Treasurer of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw County.

A portrait of Mr. Parshall is presented elsewhere in this history.

J. H. Peebles, who settled in Washtenaw Co., 1834, was born in Madison Co., N. Y., in 1816. His parents, David and ——— (?) Peebles, natives of Massachusetts. J. H. grew to manhood in New York, and in 1832 went to Ann Arbor and thence to Salem tp., where he turned his attention to farming. In 1836 he married Julia A. Sexton, a daughter of James and Jennette (Wallace) Sexton, the former a native of New York, and the latter a native of Connecticut. Mr. Peebles has been an active business man, and served as Deputy Sheriff quite a number of years in Ann Arbor. In 1869 he organized the present efficient police force, and was Marshal for one term. Mr. and Mrs. Peebles have 2 children living—Jennette and Wallace, the latter a prominent business man of San Francisco. David Peebles, the father of J. H., was a leading contractor on the Erie and other Eastern canal projects. James Sexton, the father of Mrs. Peebles, it is believed, ran the first steamboat on the Erie canal.

John Pfisterer, hardware merchant, Ann Arbor, was born in Germany in 1847, where he passed his boyhood days. In 1866 he came to the United States, and first settled in Wisconsin, but during the autumn of the same year located at Ann Arbor, and first worked as a journeyman. In 1871 he established his present business, under the firm name of Pfisterer & Hepfar, and continued as such until 1879, when Mr. Hepfar withdrew from the firm, and it has been carried forward successfully since then by Mr. Pfisterer. In 1873 he married Anna Schlenker. Of their 2 children, 1 is living—Amelia; Martin is deceased.

Nathan H. Pierce, Ann Arbor, was born at Batavia, Genesee Co., N. Y., in 1819. His parents were Nathan and Catherine (Hartly) Pierce. Nathan was raised on a farm, and remained with his father until he was 23 years old. He then came to Michigan, locating at Detroit, where he learned the painter's trade, and followed that business for eight years. He subsequently removed to Ann Arbor, and was engaged about two years in agricultural pursuits. Resuming his trade, he worked for three years, until an accident deprived him of his right arm. It was in June, 1856, and John C. Fremont had just been nominated by the new party for President. Ann Arbor had decided to have a ratification meeting, and Zachariah Chandler was "billed" to address the multitude. Mr. Pierce was connected with the Battery that welcomed the speaker to the city. About 5 o'clock a premature discharge of the cannon tore Mr. Pierce's right hand off, and amputation of the arm was necessary.

He had identified himself with the Masonic order a short period previous to the accident, and that society administered to his wants, until he was able to do so himself. The following January (1857) he was elected Sergeant-at-Arms of the Michigan Senate, and served in that capacity during the regular session, and an extra one that followed. For many years he was identified with the city, county and State, in some official position, holding at one time the offices of Constable, City Marshal, Deputy Sheriff of Washtenaw county, Deputy U. S. Marshal, and Special Deputy Provost Marshal. On Aug. 4, 1847, Mr. Pierce married Miss Sophia M. Monroe, a native of Watertown, Jefferson Co., N. Y., where she was born May 16, 1838. Her parents were John and Electa (Baxter) Monroe, and removed to Detroit in 1835, coming to Ann Arbor three years later. When Mrs. Pierce was about 16 years old, she began to show evidence of literary talent. She wrote a few lines and had them published in the weekly papers, and from that time till the present, she has never ceased her literary labors and productions. Her articles are eagerly sought after by the leading papers of Michigan, and many of them have found their way into the more standard publications of the country, among which may be mentioned the Ladies' Repository, etc. Some years since she published a series of articles in the Ann Arbor Courier, entitled "Ann Arbor in Slices," and under the nom de plume of "Soph.," which elicited a great deal of interest and general satisfaction from the reading class of this county. Mrs. Pierce has always taken a leading part in philanthropic matters, and was the founder of the Fifth Ward Ladies' Decorative Society, of Ann Arbor, and its President for many years. This society went to work with a will and a purpose in 1870, and before many seasons had rolled around, they had secured enough money by entertainments, charity balls, festivals, etc., to erect a handsome and appropriate monument to the memory of the brave boys from the 5th ward of Ann Arbor, who laid down their lives for the good of their country. Too much praise cannot be given to Mrs. Pierce for originating this holy and sacred mission, and she will be held in grateful remembrance by the many friends of their dead comrades, who now rest in the 5th ward.

Mrs. Pierce is an active member of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw county, and has probably done more work and toiled longer for the benefit of that organization than any other of its lady members. She has been the mother of 5 children, 3 of whom survive—Mrs. J. B. Saunders, whose husband is an employe of the Ann Arbor Courier; Edward H., an employe of the Courier also, and Nathan H., jr., aged 10 years. Mrs. Pierce was enumerator of the U. S. Census, in the 5th and 6th wards of Ann Arbor, in 1880, and was probably the only lady engaged in that business throughout the State of Michigan. She received from the Census Bureau a letter commending her for honesty, integrity and faithfulness to duty.

Jacob A. Polhemus, proprietor livery, Ann Arbor, was born in New Jersey, in 1811, and moved with his parents to New York when a lad. In the latter State he married Jane V. Sedan, and 3 children have been born to them. In 1835 he bought 80 acres of land from Government, in Freedom tp., and was a farmer for a number of years in both Freedom and Scio tps. He first opened in the livery business in the old Exchange stable, on the corner of Main and Catharine streets, in 1867. In addition to the livery trade he operates a hack and 'bus line for the accommodation of the traveling public.

Dr. J. Powers, veterinary surgeon, residence corner of Fourth and Liberty streets, Ann Arbor, was born in Norfolk, Canada, in 1834. He received a liberal education in the district schools. When 21 years old he went to Newaygo Co., Mich., near Grand Rapids, where he studied medicine under Charles A. McClure, a celebrated physician of that region. He spent one year with Dr. Richardson, a widely known surgeon. While residing in Newaygo Co., although a practicing veterinary surgeon, he was extensively engaged in farming, being a large property-owner. He was a resident of Reed City, Mich., where he gained considerable more than merely local notice. In 1855 he married Rebecca Pearl, a native of Ingersoll, Canada, and a daughter of James Pearl. Two children have been born to them—Wellington M. and Mary D., both in attendance at the Ann Arbor high school and well advanced in their studies. Dr. Powers is an active worker in the temperance cause.

Spencer Prater (deceased) was born in South Carolina, and was a slave till the end of the Rebellion, when he was set free by President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation. He immediately came North and settled in Illinois, where he was engaged in farming for a number of years. In 1855 he came to Washtenaw

Co. and settled in Ann Arbor tp., and was well and favorably known in the city of Ann Arbor, where he resided for several years. He was married at Shawneetown, Ill., in 1839, to Rosanna McAllister, and 10 children were born to them, of whom 4 are living—Sarah Boyer, Mary Price, Maggie Berry and John Prater. Mr. Prater died in 1858, and in 1869 Mrs. Prater married William Stewart, and 3 children were born—Bettie E., Elijah and Elisha. The mother is living in Ann Arbor, and owns good property.

Warren Prescott, retired merchant, Ann Arbor, was born in New Hampshire in 1805, where he resided until 1828. In 1826, and while living in the Granite State, he married Eliza Hilliard, and 2 children were given to bless this union—Sarah and Mary. Mrs. P. died in 1880. In 1840 Mr. Prescott removed to Michigan, first locating at Plymouth Corners, Wayne Co., where he lived for two years. He then went to Lyons, Ionia Co., and followed farming, and running a hotel there. For 16 years he followed the adventurous life of a farm and "ranch man" in California. At the expiration of this time, he located at Chelsea, Mich., where he was engaged in mercantile pursuits for several years.

Simon Price, farmer and milk dealer, Ann Arbor, was born in Buckinghamshire, England, A. D. 1811. He received a moderate education and was reared on a farm, of which he learned the practical workings. He came to America in 1836 coming at once to this county, and located in the town of Pittsfield, where the next 14 years were passed. He then removed to Ann Arbor, where he has since been engaged in farming. Since 1869 he has also been dealing in milk and is now the oldest milk dealer in this city. In 1834 he was married to Miss Caroline Plant, of Quanton, Buckinghamshire, England. To them have been born 1 son and 3 daughters; but 2 daughters have died. Mr. Price is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of this city, with which he has been connected since 1842.

Benjamin Pryer (deceased) was born at Whitestown, N. Y., Nov. 14, 1806. During his youth he found employment in a large woolen mill. In 1830 he came to Michigan, locating in Salem tp., on 80 acres of land bought of the Government, and after paying for it had barely enough money left to live with. In 1849 he bought 160 acres of land in Ann Arbor tp., now the homestead property of Mrs. Emeline Pryer, wife of the deceased. Mr. Pryer passed to his reward on Nov. 14, 1862, and was laid at rest in Northfield cemetery. He was more than ordinarily successful as a farmer, and enjoyed the respect of all with whom he was acquainted.

Zerah S. Pulcifer, Ann Arbor, was born at Rodman, Jefferson Co., N. Y., Feb. 18, 1810. His father, Oliver Pulcifer, was one of the early settlers of that county. Mr. Pulcifer was educated in the common schools of that day. When about 21 years old he began to learn the trade of carpenter. He followed that business in New York until 1833, when he came to Michigan. Early in 1834 he located at Ann Arbor, where he has since lived. In 1841 he began the manufacture of linseed oil, which he continued three years. In 1856 he started a match-factory, which he ran until 1860. In April, 1839, he was married to Caroline L. Doty, of Niagara Co., N. Y. To them have been born 8 children, 4 of whom are living.

John Quigley, farmer, secs. 9 and 10, Northfield township, was born at Niagara Co., N. Y., in 1830, and is a son of Michael Quigley, who settled in America in 1823, and in 1833 emigrated from Canada to Detroit, and thence to Ann Arbor, where his family remained until he bought land in Northfield tp., and erected thereon a rude cabin, which is still standing. He died in 1849, and his wife in 1876. Mr. Q. bought his land from the Government, and the original deed bears the autograph of Andrew Jackson. John was reared on this farm, and educated in the "old rough log school-house," and in 1861 married Rebecca Hernandez. They have 4 children—Willie, Ulysses, Margaret, and John. During the late war Mr. Q. was a resident of California, but of late years has resided in Northfield, where he owns at present a good farm of 140 acres.

George Rash (deceased) was born in New York in 1788. He was reared to manhood in his native State, and in 1814 married Fanny Galoway, and to this alliance 7 children have been born, of whom 3 are living—Charles M., a resident of Battle Creek, Mich.; George F., of Lodi tp., and James. In 1824 Mr. Rash came to Michigan and settled in this county upon the farm now owned by James G. Rash, and comprising 120 acres, but formerly 200 acres. His father was a farmer, and George F. naturally took to that vocation. His father came to this county when there was not a white man west of the village of Ann Arbor. James G. has held several local offices, and for the past two years has been collector of Ann Arbor tp. In 1859 he married Helen M. Randall, a native of New York. They have 4 children—Ida, Ella, Charles and Mary. His dwelling was destroyed about four years ago, and he immediately erected his present dwelling house.

It is no disparagement to the friends of rational medicine in the State of Michigan to say that the profession had no more ardent student, no more loyal devotee to its interest, or zealous defender, none more ready to make sacrifices to convictions of right and duty, and in aid of an honest, legitimate, and scientific system of medicine, than Dr. Sager, maintaining in all relations a reputation for integrity in public and private life without spot or blemish.

D of that Regiment. This Regiment was mustered into service at Grand Rapids on Nov. 13, 1862. The following spring it was ordered to Virginia, and became one of the Regiments comprising the noted Mich. Cav. Brigade, commanded by Gen. Custer, during the war. At the close of the war in 1865, the seventh was sent to the Rocky Mountains to protect the United States mails and passengers (then transported over the mountains in stage coaches) from attacks by hostile Indians. Asa L. Smith and family. Among the earliest settlers of Ann Arbor was Asa L. Smith, with his wife and eldest daughter, Lettie. He was born at Boston, Mass., May 12, 1792. Syrena Irons was born Oct 22, 1798, at Unadilla, N. Y.

Robert Campbell
Died Feb. 15, 1888; Age 85; 3-14

They were married July 12, 1822, at Gates, N. Y. This was not Mr. Smith's first marriage, Leonard L. Smith of Columbus, Ohio, being his son by a former wife. Their children were Lettice, born May 8, 1823, at Rochester, N. Y.; E. W. Rumsey, born Nov. 24, 1825, at Ann Arbor, died April 5, 1827,—the first white child born in Ann Arbor; Mary, born June 23, 1827, at Ann Arbor; Syrena, born Feb. 28, 1829, at Ann Arbor; Sarah I., born April 24, 1831; Martha Ann, born Aug. 27, 1833, at Ann Arbor; Harvey Miller, born Aug. 8, 1840, at Ann Arbor. Mr. Smith and family arrived at the new settlement at Ann Arbor on the 29th of May, 1824, Mrs. Smith being the second white woman, and Lettice the first white child of the settlement. The first shelter Mr. Smith constructed was made by supporting an inverted wagon box on poles driven into the ground, and suspending blankets from its edges. This rude covering protected the family partially from the chilly night air, though it did not shut out the music of the wolves that frequently serenaded the settlers with notes of questionable welcome. This kind of tabernacle soon gave place, as civilization advanced, to a hut, constructed of poles, and covered with bark peeled from the forest trees, which was in its turn exchanged, about the 1st of October, for a log house, erected on Main street, north of the court-house square. This house was soon sold to a new comer, and another built, which was soon disposed of in the same way. Thus, within seven years, the family exchanged one home for another 13 times. Among the houses erected by Mr. Smith was a frame, built about 1828, supposed to have been the first frame house in the town; also the first school-house, standing on the site now occupied by Zion's Lutheran church. This school-house was the place where the first public religious assemblies were convened, and was the cradle of the Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches that now bless the city. In 1832 Mr. Smith moved to the lower town (now Fifth ward), business, at that time, tending in that direction. There he built the first brick block east of the river, on the south side of Detroit street, where he lived two years and kept a cabinet shop. In 1839 he purchased a house of John Everett, on the north side of Detroit street, east of the Washtenaw House. This was his home several years, and place of business until his death, Feb. 13, 1844. During the last seven years his residence was on the corner of Brown and Traver streets.

He then came into this city, where he has lived to the present with the exception of four years passed on a farm near here. He was for four years dealing in agricultural implements. For the past three years he, in company with James Osborne, has been buying wheat at this city. Mr. Treadwell represented his town as Supervisor one term, but has generally kept out of politics.

He has been in this business longer than any other merchant in the city, and ranks with the pioneers in trade. In 1849 he built the store which he now occupies, No. 21 South Main st.

C. Walker & Bro., carriage and wagon manufacturers, Ann Arbor, commenced in business only a few years ago, and their present prosperity is an index of what may be accomplished by steady perseverance and skillful workmanship. They began the manufacture of carriages in 1868, and two years later Christian Walker began the erection of their present commodious structure, where a large force of skillful mechanics find constant employment.

Thomas Walker, one of the early settlers of Washtenaw county, was born in Nottinghamshire, England, in 1816, son of Thomas and Mary Walker, natives of the same shire. The subject of this sketch passed away many years' of his industrious life in his native country, where he learned the butcher's trade. He married Lavina Hill, and 5 children were born to them, all of whom are living. In 1842 he located in Washtenaw county, and for a period of 16 years was a successful farmer. Since he has resided in Ann Arbor he has owned a meat market and accumulated considerable property.

William Walker (deceased) was born in Rensselaer Co., N. Y., and while a resident of that State, was united in marriage to Silena Taylor, a daughter of Willis Taylor, of Mount Holly, New Jersey. Six children, 4 boys and 2 girls, 5 of whom are living, were the result of this alliance. Walker is a good mechanic, and has built several fine residences in Ann Arbor and vicinity.

Edwin W. Wallace, Sheriff of Washtenaw county, was born in Livingston county, N. Y., Nov. 6, 1830. The same year his parents, Daniel D. and Laura R. Wallace, removed to Washtenaw county, and settled on 160 acres of land three miles west of Saline, purchased from Government. Mr. Wallace was a carpenter and joiner by trade, and in after years erected many of the business houses in Saline village. The old "Chicago turnpike," between that city and Detroit, ran by the house, and three years after his settlement Mr. Wallace built a large tavern, called "Wallace's Hotel," where many a weary traveler was refreshed. He also built a large barn which was used as a "station" for over 15 years, often having 40 head of horses in the stable at one time. Edwin well remembers the scenes and incidents of those pioneer days, when the shrill blast of the stage-coach horn was heard echoing through the valley of the Saline river, followed in a few moments by the arrival of the "coach and four," the bustle and hurry in changing horses, the farewell blast of the horn—and away over the road to the next station, and also remembers the first time he ever heard a locomotive whistle. He thought it very similar to the blast of the old horn, only a little more plain and distinct. He died at Saline in 1877. Mrs. Wallace is residing at Chicago. Mr. Wallace, the subject of this sketch, was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1860, when he purchased the stage, express and mail line that ran from Saline to Ypsilanti. He continued in this business until 1873, when he was elected Deputy Sheriff. In 1879 he was elected Supervisor, and in the fall of 1880 was elected Sheriff. Oct. 11, 1855, Mr. Wallace was married to Rebecca Fellows, born in this county Nov. 13, 1834, and daughter of Festus H. and Harriet Fellows, natives of New York. Two children have been born to this union—Lida J. and Fred. F.

Edward L. Walter, Ph. B., Professor of Modern Languages and Literature in the University of Michigan, was born in Hillsdale Co., Michigan, in 1840. He prepared for college at Albion Seminary. In 1862 he enlisted in the Fourth Michigan Infantry volunteers as a recruit. He remained until 1863 when on account of illness he was discharged. In 1864 he entered Michigan University, from which he graduated in 1868. He was at once appointed Assistant Professor of Greek and Latin, which position he held one year. In 1869 he was made Assistant Professor of Latin and retained this position until 1879. Two years of this time, 1871-'2, he was acting Professor during the absence of Professor Frieze. He was also three years in Europe pursuing studies at Leipsic, where he received the degree of Ph. B. In 1879 he was appointed to the chair which he now fills. When he received this appointment he obtained leave of absence and went to Paris, where he remained until Feb., 1880, pursuing studies.

Ludwig Walz, grocer and confectioner, Ann Arbor, was born in Germany in 1843. In 1845 his parents moved to America, and located in Ann Arbor. In this latter place young Ludwig grew to manhood, learning the trade of confectioner with H. Schlottbeck, and shortly after entered into business for himself. Mr. W. married Aggie Pfeifle, a native of Germany, by whom he has 5 children—Sophia, Louisa, Amanda, Willie and Rosa. During the spring of 1880 Mr. Walz entered his present commodious quarters.

Rufus Waples, attorney at law, Ann Arbor. The subject of this sketch is the son of Robert Waples, and is of the sixth generation in this country counting the first English immigrant of the name who was one of the early settlers of Delaware. He was born in that State in 1825. Twenty-three years later, in 1849, he emigrated to New Orleans, where he graduated from the law department of the University of Louisiana, and was admitted to the Bar of the Supreme Court of that State in 1852. He began the practice of his profession with his brother, Stephen Harris Waples, Esq., who was afterward appointed Judge of one of the District Courts, and was later with Mr. Eustis (late of the United States Senate). He was for several years a member of the law firm of Waples & Eustis. In 1858 he married the daughter of A. G. Alsworth, a planter of Texas. He continued the practice of law in New Orleans till the beginning of the Rebellion, when he returned to Delaware with his family, and was admitted to the Bar there and also to the Philadelphia Bar. He made many speeches in his native State against rebellion and slavery; then went to Washington city, where he was admitted to the Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States, and remained with his family at the capital till 1863. President Lincoln, upon the recommendation of loyal members of the New Orleans Bar, but without application by Mr. Waples appointed him District Attorney of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana. Returning to New Orleans in May, 1863, he entered at once upon the duties of his office. The United States District and Circuit Courts remained in session continually nearly two years, and the number of Government cases was unprecedented. Mr. Waples was a member of the Louisiana Convention which framed the Constitution of 1868; officiated two years as Attorney for the corporation of New Orleans, and has been the recipient of a number of honors, among them the Doctorate of Laws. He remained in New Orleans practicing his profession, serving for some years on the City School Board and as Trustee of Straight University, and Fellow of the New Orleans Academy of Sciences, etc. In 1878 he removed to Ann Arbor, Mich.; and in April of the following year was admitted by the Supreme Court, to the Bar of Michigan. In politics, he was a Whig, and on the organization of the Republican party in Louisiana, took an active part in it, and was, for a time President of its State's Central Committee. He was reared a Presbyterian, and joined that Church just before his majority. He helped to form a Congregational Church in New Orleans during the war, and has since adhered to that denomination. His life has been fruitful of events, especially during the war, but there is not room for their recital in our limited space, even were his objections to their narration removed.

Edgar Warren, Ann Arbor, was born at Plattsburg, N. Y., in 1834, and is a son of William Warren. He received an academic education, and in 1850 went to California, where he obtained a situation as clerk on the steamer John Macklin, the second steamer that ever plied between Sacramento and San Francisco. He was also clerk on the Gold Hunter. In 1864 he settled in Franklin county, N. Y., and during the war was a resident of Washington, D. C., where he secured employment as a bookkeeper. He resided for some time in Ypsilanti, where he dealt extensively in horses and cattle. In 1876 he was appointed turnkey of the Washington county jail, but relinquished that position in January, 1881.

Roswell Waterman, retired merchant and farmer, was born in Otsego county, N. Y., in 1817, son of David and Zilpah (Truesdell) Waterman, natives of New York. In 1835 he accompanied his parents to Detroit, and thence to Bronson, Michigan, where he bought 80 acres of land from Government. In 1837 he married Elsie Rose, daughter of Lester Rose, a pioneer of Michigan. From 1840 to 1847 he was actively engaged in mercantile pursuits. From the latter date to the present time (1881) he has been a successful farmer, now owning 160 acres of good land. Mr. Waterman has been a member of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw county since its organization, and is a consistent member of the M. E. Church of Ann Arbor. Many years ago he was a Captain in the State militia.

John M. Weinmann, dealer in fresh and salt meats, Ann Arbor, was born in Germany in 1836. In 1837 he emigrated to America, and a year later settled in Ann Arbor. He first found employment with an elder brother, on a farm near Ann Arbor, but of late years has been engaged in business in the city. He occupies a substantial brick building on the corner of Fifth and Washington streets. It is 72x24 feet, and two-stories high, and built especially for the meat trade. Mr. Weinmann was married in 1863, to Dorothea Stein. They have 4 children—Bertha, Lewis, Emma and Louisa.

Owen Welch (deceased), of Pittsfield tp., was born at Middletown, Orange Co., N. Y., in 1809. His father was a farmer and one of the old residents of that vicinity. There Mr. Welch was educated and lived on his father's farm until he was 21 years old, when he came to this county, locating in Pittsfield. There he was a leader in the Democratic party although never holding any office. He was never admitted to the Bar, but used often to practice in the early justices' courts of the county. He was an earnest supporter of education and general advancement. In 1833 he was married to Miss Celia Comstock, of Pittsfield, daughter of Mrs. Zariah Comstock, who in 1832 came here from New York with her children. To them were born 1 son and 2 daughters. The son, Colonel Welch, of the 16th Mich. Inf. Vol., was killed in the late war. Mr. Welch died Nov. 13, 1855. Since then Mrs. Welch has resided in this city.

W. W. Wells, proprietor Washtenaw Hotel, Broadway street, Lower Town of Ann Arbor, was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., and grew to manhood in the city of Utica, where he was educated and learned the wagon-maker's trade. Many years ago he settled in McHenry Co., Illinois, where for a period of four years he was employed to oversee Col. Capron's extensive land interests. In 1857 he settled at Ann Arbor, and subsequently purchased the hotel property which he owns at present. He married Diana Mead, and 2 children were born to them. Mr. W. transacts a large and growing business in the hotel line, as he is quick to discern the wants of the traveling public, who, in turn, appreciate the generous qualities of a courteous landlord.

J. M. Wheeler, attorney at law, Ann Arbor, Mich., was born at Providence, Saratoga Co., N. Y., in 1821. His elementary education was received at his birth-place and at Amsterdam Academy. In 1841 he graduated from Union College at Schenectady, N. Y. He then began the study of law, and in 1843 was admitted to the Bar in Indiana. He located at Wabash, Ind., where for 15 years he followed his profession. He then intended going East to live, but after going there he decided to remain in the West permanently, and came to Ann Arbor, where he has since remained. Mr. Wheeler is a member of the Washtenaw county Bar, but has not practiced law since coming here. In 1872 he was appointed Treasurer of Michigan University, which position he held until they wished the treasurer to reside in the building, when he resigned the position. He is a member of the Episcopal Church, and has traveled extensively, mainly for the education of his children.

Eber White (deceased) was one of the oldest and most respected citizens of this county. He was one of that noble band of pioneers who startled Washtenaw county out of the lethargy into which it had been resting for ages; cleared the forests, tilled the virgin soil, and started in on that high road to prosperity which it enjoys at the present time. He was born at Schenectady, N. Y., in October, 1798. His father was a "tiller of the soil," and the subject of this sketch learned that practical business, which he found to be of great advantage to him in the near future. When comparatively young his parents moved to Orangeville, N. Y. At this latter place Mr. W. received his educational training, and in 1823 was seized with what was commonly called the "Western fever." He came to Michigan and stopped within the borders of "fair Washtenaw." It was properly named, for a more fair and beautiful region than that which greeted the eye of the lonely wanderer in Washtenaw county did not exist within the borders of the United States. The forest was all green with luxuriant foliage; flowers of every conceivable hue and color abounded in the richest profusion; the rivers of the Huron and Saline teemed with the many colored fins of the piscatorial tribe; game of all description roamed over the prairies and through the dense underbrush at will. It was a paradise on earth to this westward-bound emigrant, and he resolved that this beautiful country should be his home for the remainder of his life. He entered the southeast quarter of sec. 30, in Ann Arbor tp., and after bidding adieu to the few solitary wanderers who had then commenced their pioneer life here, he started back to the land of his birth, the "Empire State." He was impatient to get home to tell of the wonderful elysium he had discovered in these Western wilds. In June, 1826, he commenced the trip to his adopted home. He married Polly Rogers, who was born in Fabius, Onondaga Co., N. Y., July 13, 1802, and his young bride consented to cast her lot with his, and to bravely face the perils and privations of a pioneer's life in the "far West." After arriving the first thing he did was to "roll up," as it was called, a log cabin; this he did while stopping with the family of George Allen, and in a few days the building was completed. It was rough in appearance, but when the husband and wife stepped into the door, they felt that it was a "home," and intended that it should be a home in every sense of the word to them, as also the wandering emigrant who might wish for a night's lodging, or to partake of a humble meal. This cabin stood across the street from the present residence of the family. After the cabin was finished he set to work to clear off the 160 acres of land which he owned, and endured many hardships while so doing, often making a meal of bread and pork. He labored so industriously at this new work, that it was not long till 120 acres were cleared and ready for the seed. When he arrived at his new home there were only six or eight houses to mark the spot where to-day is the seat of learning for the grand State of Michigan. In 1840 he built once more, this time a house of larger dimensions than the "old log cabin" in which he had spent so many hours of joy and sorrow. This dwelling is to-day the "old homestead," and stands on West Liberty street, in Ann Arbor. He was engaged in agricultural pursuits the greater part of his life in this county, and in matters relating to the advancement of the educational or religious interests of the community always stood in the front rank. He was one of six of the first class of the Methodist Church organized in Ann Arbor, and long before any steps were taken toward the erection of a church. In politics he was "an old-line Whig," and in slavery days was a prime mover in the underground railroad, and many a slave after reaching Canada has thanked God for the help given him by Eber White and his trustworthy friends. When the Republican party was organized in 1854, Mr. W. was one of the first to enlist under its banner, and through the trying scenes of the civil war, aided by voice and contribution the brave soldiers in the cause in which they were so valiantly fighting. During their life in Washtenaw county, Mr. and Mrs. White were blessed with the birth of 6 children, 5 of whom are still living—Maria, wife of Daniel Hiscock, a prominent farmer of Ann Arbor; Mrs. Alty Steward, of Ann Arbor; Polly, Mary and Adelia. Clark Sullivan (deceased) was born Oct. 1, 1832, and died Sept. 24, 1833. Mr. White filled several official positions in the militia of this State, among which are the following: In 1831 was appointed Ensign by Lewis Cass; in 1832 Lieutenant, by Gov. Geo. B. Porter; in 1835, Lieut. Col. 1st Div. 2d Brig. 1st Reg., by Gov. Stevens T. Mason. On July 2, 1864, the wife of his bosom, who had proved a good help-mate to him along the thorny path through life, was called to "come up higher." Aug. 19, 1872, the old veteran pioneer was laid to rest, to await the great and final judgment day. He had finished his course, had made a good fight, and closed his eyes, believing that in due time he should receive the reward prepared for those who bear the yoke in meekness and spirit, through the rough and broken path of this world below.

Mr. White's portrait appears in this work.

L. D. White, M. D., Ann Arbor, was born at Cazenovia, Madison Co., N. Y., in 1839. His parents, J. D. and Emily (Dean) White, were natives of Massachusetts. When L. D. was 11 years of age his parents moved to Michigan and located in Pittsfield tp., this county. Here he was reared and educated. About 1869 he began the practices of the healing art under the clairvoyant system, and eight years ago moved to Ann Arbor, where he is engaged in his profession. He was married to Mary Kellogg in 1859.

Col. Orrin White (deceased) was born at Elmira, Wayne Co., N. Y., growing to manhood in Palmyra, where he received a liberal education. When the war of 1812 began, he was but a boy, but his love for the old flag was so intense that he enlisted in a New York regiment, and made a good, honorable soldier. While a resident of the "Empire State," he married Ann Thayer, and in May, 1823, he came to Michigan, and located a tract of land in Ann Arbor tp., bringing his wife and 3 children out the following year, and permanently settling on the land. At that time Ann Arbor consisted of but two or three log houses, one of which was used on "training days," for the State Militia, of which body Mr. White was Captain, and subsequently Colonel. Mr. White was also an active participant in the famous Toledo War. At the first Fourth of July celebration held in Washtenaw county, Mr. W. and his family were present, having been conveyed thither by an ox team. During the celebration the oxen thought their time had also come to show their patriotism, and they did so by running away. The Col. and his family had to walk home, on the lower Ypsilanti road, and their evening walk was made pleasant by the howling of the wolves, a kind of nocturnal music frequently listened to by the early pioneer of Michigan. An intimate acquaintance of Col. White says of him: "He was the most strictly upright man I ever knew, and his unswerving integrity and unbending honesty marked him among men, and gave him an enviable character. At different times he was raised to positions of honor and trust, serving in the capacity of Justice of the Peace, Supervisor, Sheriff, Associate Judge, member of the Constitutional Convention, and member of the Michigan Legislature. He died full of years and honors, and his memory is held in grateful remembrance by the pioneers who still survive him." His wife came to this county when a few scattered log houses marked the spot where now stands a city teeming with life and enterprise. As a faithful wife, a loving mother, and a true friend, her example may well be imitated. Too much praise cannot be given to such women, for if they receive not a share of this enviable meed, they will vanish out of sight, and a nondescript race will succeed them; worth nothing, and wanting in everything pure and blessed. Mr. and Mrs. White were blessed with 7 children, of whom 3—Charles T., Henry K. and Mary—were born in New York. Henry grew to manhood in this county, receiving a better education than usually falls to the lot of pioneer boys. In 1847 he married Martha P. Stone, daughter of Nathan H. Stone, an old pioneer of Jackson, Mich. They have 3 children—Murray, Frank and Edward. Like his father, the years of Henry White's life have been strewn with the honors attached to an upright and just existence. Mr. W. speaks of early pioneer days with keen enjoyment, and his relations of incidents and anecdotes are more than ordinarily interesting. He is the oldest settler now living in the county. Mr. W. has prospered with the years that have come and gone, and at present is the owner of 107 acres of valuable land, on which is erected a handsome residence. In 1840, while yet a youth, he wheeled all the stone, and burned all the lime that entered into the construction of the old stone homestead.

Joseph Whitlark, sec. 19, Ann Arbor. was born at Sherwood Hill, Nottinghamshire, in 1829. His father was John Start Whitlark, who came to this county in 1836. He was a man of prominence here and was well known as "Uncle John." Mr. Whitlark was educated by his father, who felt a hesitation in sending his children to the district schools. When 16 years of age he was sent to New York and Pennsylvania, spending one year at school in each State. When 19, he went to England where he spent the next three years in learning the trade of tailor. He then returned to this county, where he has since been engaged in farming. He has long been interested in the subject of draining and tiling; while living near Whitmore Lake he started the project of lowering the lake by draining, for the benefit of the surrounding low lands. This was accomplished with the aid of Jos. Pray and the County Drain Commissioners, by widening and deepening the outlet, that making a ditch four feet deep and 16 feet wide. In 1880 he purchased the right for manufacturing endless concrete tile in this county. Mr. Whitlark has held a number of offices in his district but has no taste for politics. He is a member of the Unitarian Church. In 1853 he was married to Miss Lucy B. Bilbie, of Ann Arbor, a native of England. She is a direct descendant of Jas. Hargreaves, the inventor of the carding machine and spinning jenny now in common use. To them have been born 4 sons, 2 of whom are living. Walter, connected with his father in business, graduated from the department of pharmacy in Michigan University in 1876. Mr. Whitlark has on his farm the largest peach orchard in the county. In this, Judge E. Lawrence is a partner, and they have 23 acres, containing 3,300 trees set.

Richard O. Willits, farmer, sec. 4, Ann Arbor tp.; P. O., Ann Arbor; was born in Ohio in 1824, and is a son of Richard and Margaret (Robinson) Willits. Mr. W. was a manufacturer of farming implements, while a resident of the "Buckeye State," and had an extensive establishment of that kind at Ontario Lake, Ontario Co. He was married at Union Springs, to Eliza A. Fish, a daughter of Isaiah and Catherine (Yawger) Fish. In 1867 he settled in Ann Arbor tp., where he bought 120 acres of improved land, and has been quite successful as an agriculturist. They have 2 children—Isaiah and Mary, both married and residents of this township.

Hon. Jeremiah Day Williams. When Michigan Territory was yet a wilderness there arrived within its borders a race of men, in color, white, and contrasting strangely with the appearance of the noble red man, who then claimed this region as his own. These men entered land, built log cabins, felled the mighty trees, and planted crops of corn, wheat and oats in their stead. They were called "pioneers," and to this class belongs John Williams, the father of Jeremiah. He was born in Orange county, N. Y., and emigrated to Washtenaw county in the spring of 1828, and located in Webster tp. His wife was Lydia Hughlitt, and they were the parents of 10 children, of whom Jeremiah was the seventh, and was born at Sempronius, Cayuga Co., N. Y. When his father came to this county, Jeremiah was in his 13th year, and he was reared on a farm, and did his full share of the hard work in clearing and cultivating what now constitutes four farms. Before he came to Michigan he was sent to winter schools, but made very little progress in learning the three R's, "reading, ritin', and 'rithmetic" being all the main studies undertaken. Millard Fillmore was the first male teacher whose school he attended as a pupil in New York. In 1834, a school-house was built in the neighborhood wherein he lived, and subsequently he attended a select school in Ann Arbor, taught by Wellington A. Glover, and an academy, over which Henry H. Griffin and John McNeil officiated as instructors. In 1839, he was appointed Postmaster of Webster tp., the commission bearing date Feb. 1, 1839, and signed by Amos Kendall, Postmaster General. He officiated in this capacity for nearly two years. The same year he was elected Township Treasurer, and from that time until the present he has served the people almost continuously in different official positions. In November, 1854, he was elected Representative to the State Legislature, from the fifth district of Washtenaw county, and faithfully looked after the interests of the Washtenaw citizens during his term of office. During 1841 and '42 he traveled through the greater portion of the New England and Middle States, and returned home in the fall of 1842. He was a farmer of Webster tp., until March, 1873, when he sold his farm and moved into Ann Arbor city. He lived there until the spring of 1877, when he purchased a farm in the south part of Ann Arbor tp., where he resides at present. With the exception of the year and a half he spent in traveling and attending school, he worked for his father until he was 28 years old, at which time his earthly parent was gathered to his Father, and there awaits the final day. Mr. Williams was united in marriage, Nov. 19, 1843, to Frances B. Smith, at China, St. Clair Co., Mich. The companion of his bosom was laid away in the cold and silent tomb, and May 13, 1846, he was joined in the bonds of holy wedlock with Jane L. Stark, of Webster tp., Washtenaw Co., Mich.

Mr. Williams' portrait is given in this volume.

Charles T. Wilmot, farmer, was born at Paris, N. Y., in 1816. His parents, Tracy and Rhoda Wilmot, were natives of Connecticut, but moved to New York at an early day. Tracy Wilmot bore a conspicuous part in the war of 1812, being a Major the greater part of the time. Charles received his early education at the common schools, subsequently attending Cazenovia Seminary. His early years were spent on a farm; when 19 years old he came to Michigan and located in Ann Arbor tp., on land that he had purchased at $8 per acre, and which he sold previous to the war. In 1837 he married Harriet Anderson, a daughter of Sheriff Anderson. Mrs. W. died in 1850, and was buried at Ann Arbor. About one year later he married Mrs. Catherine Watkins, wife of John Watkins (dec.), and a daughter of Benjamin North. Three children were born to them—Alta E., Charles C. and Carrie J., the latter a student at Michigan University. Mr. W. was a prime mover in the organization of the First National and Savings Bank, of Ann Arbor. He is one of the most liberal and public-spirited citizens of Washtenaw county.

Alvin Wilsey, dealer in musical instruments and goods, Ann Arbor, was born in Pittsfield tp., this county, Nov. 17, 1842. There he received his primary education and later graduated from the high school, Ann Arbor. His earlier years were spent in teaching and study. About 1861 he located at Ann Arbor. He taught day school and singing classes in this vicinity until 1864, when he opened a music store in this city. He followed this for some years and then went on the road for a time. He then returned to his old business at Ann Arbor, where he has since remained. Since coming to Ann Arbor he has almost constantly been teaching vocal music. For the past 17 years he has been leader of the choir of the Methodist Episcopal Church of this city. Mr. Wilsey is a genial gentleman and has by his kind and courteous acts won many friends.

Alexander Winchell, LL. D., Professor of Historic Geology and Paleontology in the University of Michigan, author and lecturer on scientific subjects, was born at North Easton, New York, December 31, 1824. He is a descendant of Robert Winchell, an Englishman, who settled at Dorchester, Mass., in 1634, and removed to Windsor, Ct., with the first settlers in 1635. He early manifested, under his father's tuition, a great fondness for mathematics. On the sixth anniversary of his birthday, he recited, without mistake, the entire multiplication table. He was destined for the profession of medicine, and spent two years with a great-uncle in South Lee, Mass., attending the Stockbridge Academy in summer and the village school in the winter. When 16 he began teaching, his patrons supposing him to be a young man of 21. He, in 1842, virtually decided to devote his life to teaching, and feeling that a more extensive course of study was necessary, he made up his mind to secure a thorough education. Rev. Davis W. Clark, then Principal of Amenia Seminary (afterward Bishop) urged him to enter the seminary, which he did in September, 1842.

In the spring of 1844 he was designated teacher of the classes in algebra in that institution. Previously he had been assistant teacher in the English department. In 1844 he matriculated at Wesleyan University as a sophomore, and graduated in 1847. In 1850 he accepted a position as principal of an academy at Newbern, Alabama. In 1851 he was induced to take control of the "Mesopotamia Female Seminary" at Eutaw, Ala., where he remained until 1853. During this time he made many valuable researches in geology in that vicinity, and transmitted a large collection of plants and alcoholic specimens to the Smithsonian Institute. Among these was a new species of fish, which was afterward described by Girard as Hy- bopsis Winchelli, thus showing the appreciation of his work in naming it after its discoverer. In 1853 he was elected President of the Masonic University at Selma, Ala. Yellow fever compelled the closing of the institution. In November of 1853 he received a letter from President Tappan announcing his election to the chair of "Physics and Civil Engineering" in the University of Michigan. This position he accepted and in December following started for the North. He entered upon the duties of his position Jan. 24, 1854. In 1855 he was transferred to the chair of geology, zoology and botany. In 1859 a geological survey of Michigan was ordered by the Legislature, and Prof. Winchell was commissioned by Governor Wisner as Director of the survey, which position he held until the work was completed. This work was of vast importance to the State, showing as it did the various formations, the mineral lands and the locations of the salt-producing sections. In August, 1872, he was elected Chancellor of Syracuse University. By many promises held out of an increased field for operations in science, a higher salary and other things, he was induced to accept the position. In January, 1873, he entered upon the duties of his position as Chancellor. He soon found that the financial affairs of the University were not in the condition he had been led to suppose them, but he worked on to increase its popularity and power. Work was also given him to do which it was expressly understood when he accepted the position was to be done by others, and in June, 1874, he resigned his position. In July he was elected Professor of Zoology, Geology and Botany in the same institution, and with great magnanimity accepted it. He remained there until 1878, endeavoring to build up this department. During this time he had also filled short engagements in other noted institutions of learning, and had delivered many scientific lectures. He then devoted himself to literary work and lecturing, with very marked success. On the 25th of June, 1879, the Regents of the University of Michigan unanimously elected him to the chair of Geology and Paleontology in the University. As a lecturer Professor Winchell has won renown. His lectures are chiefly of a scientific nature. He has sought in them to popularize science, and has been eminently successful. His researches have extended over a wide range, and he has brought to light a number of new species in various departments, several of which have been named after him, in honor of their discoverer. His ability has been recognized in the old and new world, and he has been made a member of societies in both hemispheres. As a teacher he has achieved remarkable success, and many offers have been made to him to teach in different institutions of learning. His works on scientific subjects have been very numerous and full. A firm believer in the existence of man before the time of Adam, according to the old chronology, he has always worked to harmonize science and the Bible. He was married Dec. 5, 1849, to Miss Julia F. Lines, of Utica, N. Y. To them have been born 1 son and 5 daughters; of these, but 2 daughters are living. For a more extended notice of his writings, see the chapter on Authors and Artists in this work.

Phillip Winegar, of Ann Arbor, was born at Union Springs, Cayuga Co., N. Y., in 1827, his father was Ashabel and his mother Elizabeth (Carr) Winegar, natives of New York. Phillip grew to manhood in Cayuga county where he also received his preliminary education. He spent some time also at Carey Collegiate Seminary, in Genesee county, and at Auburn Academy. His father was a farmer and a woolen manufacturer, and young Phillip kept his books. From Cayuga county Phillip went to Ontario county, where in 1850 he married Miss Elizabeth A. Bentley, a daughter of Thomas Bentley. To them has been born 1 son—Franklin E. In 1854 Mr. Winegar came to Michigan and settled in Northfield tp., where he remained until 1863, engaged in farming and teaching school. During three years of this time he was Supervisor. In 1860 he was a candidate for State Senator, and though he was far ahead of his ticket, he was defeated by a small majority. In 1862 he was elected Sheriff, and in 1864 was re-elected to that office. In 1867 was elected Supervisor, and in 1880 Justice of the Peace for Ann Arbor. He has also done work in connection with the offices of Register and County Clerk. While a resident of Northfield tp. he was appointed Postmaster of Gravel Run, by President Buchanan.

Daniel Wines, contractor and builder, Ann Arbor, was born in Connecticut, in January, 1812. His father, Daniel B. Wines, was a native of New York, and his mother a native of Windham county, Conn. They settled in this county in 1837, where they both passed the remainder of their lives. Daniel passed his early life in this county, necessarily witnessing many important changes that transpired in Southern Michigan, and during his youth frequently walked to Detroit. He was married in Long Island to Anna Maria Baker, a daughter of Abraham Baker, a resident of South Hampton, Long Island. Two sons—Charles A. and Abraham, of Ypsilanti, were born to this marriage. Mrs. Wines died in 1850, and during the latter part of the same year he married Mrs. Phoebe Douglas. Two children were sent to bless this union—Levi D., a teacher in the Ann Arbor high school, and graduate of Michigan University, and Anna. Mr. Wines has erected many of the best business houses and private residences in Ann Arbor.

Austin A. Wood, retired farmer, is a native of Danbury, Ct., where he was born in 1828. He came with his parents to this county in 1836, and in 1848 was married at Port Huron, Mich., to Mary J. Glover, of Lodi tp., Washtenaw Co. Of this marriage there are no surviving children. Mrs. Wood died in 1849, and in 1854 he was united in marriage to Hannah Mitchell, of Maumee, Ohio, who died the same year. On Nov. 28, 1855, he married Sarah M. Phelps, of Saline tp., this county. Mr. Wood is a Deacon, and also Treasurer of the Congregational Church of Ann Arbor, and while a resident of Lodi tp. was leader of a choir in the church of that denomination.

Darius Wood, retired farmer, Ann Arbor, was born in Connecticut in 1807, and is a son of Abijah and Submit (Camp) Wood. Darius grew to manhood in his native State, and in 1828 married Nancy J. Jones. They have 4 children—Samantha L., Melvina D., Lyman B. and Fanny. In 1829 Mr. Wood moved to Seneca Co., N. Y., where he taught school a number of years; thence to Yates Co., N. Y., and from the latter place to Michigan, in 1834. He located nine miles south of Ann Arbor, where a farm of 80 acres was purchased. He cultivated the land during the summer months, and in the winter was engaged in teaching school. Many years ago Mrs. Wood was laid at rest in Washtenaw county, and in 1868 Mr. Wood married Mrs. Deborah L. Maynard, relict of William S. Maynard, formerly Mayor of Ann Arbor, and President of Washtenaw county bank. He settled in this county in 1828, and bore a prominent part in the early history of Ann Arbor village. In 1867 Mr. Wood settled at Ann Arbor where he resides at present in very comfortable circumstances.

George S. Wood, retired farmer, was born in Danbury, Conn., in 1825. His parents, Ira and Maria Wood, settled in Lodi tp., Washtenaw county, at an early day, purchasing 40 acres of land from Government, where the former died in 1855; the latter is still surviving. In his youth and early stage of manhood George S. displayed unusual ability as an agriculturist, and was especially successful in sheep-raising, taking numerous prizes on his specimens at the county and State fairs. Oct. 17, 1849, Mr. Wood married Phidelia Beach, a native of New York, and daughter of William G. Beach, a native of New Jersey, who settled in this county in 1843. They have 4 children—Arthur A., William J., Georgie M. and Eda B. Ida is deceased.

P. D. Woodruff, contractor and builder, was born in Seneca county, N. Y., in 1818, and is a son of Benjamin Woodruff. Mr. W. remained a resident of the "Empire State," receiving a liberal education, until his 17th year, when he came West to Ohio, and in 1836 settled near what was then familiarly termed "Carpenter's Corners," in Washtenaw county. In 1847 he married Phoebe Woodruff, and 3 children were given to them, 2 of whom are living. Mr. Woodruff has officiated as an Alderman, also as city Treasurer of Ann Arbor city. In his building capacity, he has done much toward increasing the value of property by the erection of many costly and handsome business blocks and fine residences.

Isaac Wyncup, farmer, Ann Arbor, Mich.

George Zeebe, farmer, Northfield tp., sec. 35; P. O., Ann Arbor; was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1835, where he was also educated. In 1853 he came to America and settled in Ann Arbor, where he lived until 1870. In that year he moved to Northfield tp., where he now lives. In 1858 he was married to Mrs. Katherine Souder. To them have been born 4 sons and 4 daughters, of whom 1 daughter has died. Mr. Zeebe is a member of the Lutheran Church.

SUPERIOR TOWNSHIP.

The township of Superior is particularly an agricultural district, —one-half of oak openings, unsurpassed in the fertility of its soil or the advantages of its water-courses; but Fleming's creek and Huron river are the only streams that can be utilized for milling. Ten sections are without any water-course. Frain's, or Hour-Glass lake is on section 9, and is the only important body of water in the township. The River Huron enters the township on section 31, flows north into section 30, again south through section 31, where it forms two small islands, and enters Ypsilanti at the northeast corner of section 6 of that township. Fleming's creek waters the west portion of Superior. The M. C. R. R. crosses the river at three points in this neighborhood.

Beech and maple forests yet remain in this township. "Superior" is stamped upon its lands, and is said to extend itself to the people and their homes.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

The area of Superior township is 21,774 acres, of which 14,726 acres are improved and 7,048 unimproved lands. The land is in possession of 222 occupiers. The area sown under wheat in 1879 was 2,708 acres; that planted in 1880 was 3,094 acres. In the former year the product averaged 1,841 bushels per acre, or a total of 49,850. The corn-fields, extending over 1,382 acres in 1879, produced 55,260 bushels; 862 acres under oats gave a yield of 35,100 bushels; 431 acres under clover gave 631 bushels of seed; 291 acres under barley produced 7,940 bushels; 93 acres under potatoes yielded 9,608 bushels; and the meadow lands, comprised in 2,214 acres, produced 2,453 tons of hay. It will be understood, that this estimate is only an approximate, yet based upon official reports and collected by township officers.

ORGANIZATION OF SUPERIOR.

In the history of Ypsilanti it will be shown that the district now known as Superior formed a portion of that township. On June 30, 1828, the Legislative Council enacted: "That from and after the passage of this act, all that part of the township of Ypsilanti lying north, including township numbered 1 and 2 south, range number 7 east, in the county of Washtenaw, be, and the same is, hereby set off as a township, by the name of Panama, and that the first township meeting be held at the house of John McCormick; provided, that nothing in this act shall affect the assessment or collection of taxes heretofore assessed in the township of Ypsilanti." This new division comprised the present townships of Salem and Superior. In 1831, under authority given by act of the Legislative Council, the people of the southern part of Panama organized the township of Superior. Henry Kimmel gave it its present name.

Sackrider bought the w h of the sw qr and the e h of the se qr of sec 30, 127.35 acres, June 27. Sam. W. Dexter bought that part of sec 30 s of the river, Sept. 7, 24.95 acres. Isaac Thomas, Sept. 27, bought the se qr and the e h of the sw qr of sec 7. John Dix bought the w h of the sw qr of sec 7, Sept. 28, 56.60 acres. Lawrence L. Hugh Christie bought the ne part of sec 31, 67.25 acres, Sept. 29. John Phillips bought, Sept. 16, the e h of the nw qr sec 32, and Oct. 4, the ne qr of sec 32. The above are all the lands bought in 1824 in the township of Superior.

Robert Geddes bought the sw qr and the se part of nw frac qr of sec 31, May 19, 1825, 232.06 acres. Henry Kimmell made his first purchase July 23, 1825, of the w h of se qr of sec 22. He bought the e h of sec 22 and all of sec 23, but e h of the se qr. He bought one lot on 14, two lots on 26, and one lot on 25--15 lots in all. John Brewer bought the sw qr of sec 12, April 3, 1826. Joseph Wickoff bought, May 28, 1827, the n h sec 5, 280.40 acres. Esek Pray bought the sw qr of sec 8, July 3, 1825. Sold it to John McCormick, and then bought, Nov. 24, 1825, the e h of the ne qr and the e h of the se qr of sec 3. He afterward bought the w h of the se qr and the e h of the nw qr of sec 3. Ichabod Crippen bought the e h of the nw qr and w h of the ne qr, June 27, 1831. David Moore bought the w h of the ne qr of sec 30, May 18, 1830.

Ichabod Crippen is the only person in the township that is now living on the land bought from the United States. Esek Pray bought, July 28, 1825, the e h of the nw qr of sec 8 and June 23, 1825, the e h of the sw qr of sec 9. There were 167 first purchasers in the township. The last piece of United States land sold was the s h of the w h of the sw qr of sec 14, to Curtis R. Whitney, Sept. 2, 1847. The next last piece was the sw corner of the sw frac qr of sec 32, .78 of an acre, B. Kercheval, Nov. 22, 1836. G. C. Bedell bought the sw qr of the se qr of sec 4, March 22, 1836. Eldridge Gee built the first house on the e h of the ne qr of sec 33 in February and March, 1823. He says he moved there Feb. 16, 1823. There were then no white persons residing in the county of Washtenaw. John Dix built next in May and June, 1824. Dix built the first frame barn in Superior township and probably the first in the county. It was raised in July, 1825. I was at the raising. Dix built a saw-mill in 1826, and a grist-mill some time after, all on sec 18. John Dix was from Boston, was said to be a ship captain and was shipwrecked at sea, and it was plain to see he would fail in Washtenaw. He was the most unpopular man in the county. It may be asked why. There were probably several causes. One was, he was reared in Boston. Such appears to be the tendency, of things, where people congregate in large bodies they become unfriendly and unsociable, whereas in new countries, as Washtenaw then was, the inhabitants are extra friendly. John Dix left for Texas in the fall of 1833, and died there a few years ago. He was the proprietor of the village of Dixboro. Henry Kimmell was from Somerset county, Pa., from there to the mouth of the Illinois river, and from there to Washtenaw in the summer of 1825. He preferred timber land. He left Illinois because of its unhealthfulness. Henry Kimmell died in August, 1868, aged 82 years.

Hiram H. Tooker removed from Auburn, Cayuga county, N. Y., to that part of Superior known as the Free Church neighborhood, in June of 1826. This settlement had been opened the September previous by Col. John Brewer and brother, and Hiram Robison, also from Cayuga county; but it was not until July of 1826 that they found the land office open and ready to sell and convey to them their selected lands. The name of John Q. Adams, as President of the United States, appears on the parchment titles of conveyance.

In this early summer a number of names were added to the list of settlers,—John Brewer, Hiram Robison H. H. Tooker, Ebenezer Stacy, John Bramble, John Newell, Moor Spears and Robert Barr. Two and one half miles south of this opening settlement, the name of Henry Kimmel was a kind watchword, to these brave men and their wives. Mr. K. had been over all that land in 1824, and on account of the unhealthfulness of Indiana, concluded to move his family and effects to Michigan in July of 1825. He owned both landed and mill property in Kaskaskia, Ind., and in selling out there, on account of scarcity of money, took large payments in stock. It formed a scene worthy of an artist's sketch to view the caravan as it moved on, and into that wilderness country. First was the primitive ox-cart, the fellies of which were eight inches wide, without tire, made so as not to sink into ruts and mud-holes, drawn by four yoke of oxen, the cart principally filled with ox-yokes, and feed for the horses in the rear. Behind the cart were several yoke of oxen, driven by the swimmers, who had been engaged by Mr. K. to ford the streams, into which, when arrived at, they would plunge, taking a small rope between their teeth. They would soon reach the opposite bank and select a landing place, and then return and make preparations for crossing. Next in the procession was a heavy four-horse team, drawing a large wagon, with tent and other fixtures for living and cooking purposes. Conspicuously remembered was the barrel churn, in which milk was made into butter on the road. Next came a lighter wagon, drawn by one span of horses, carrying the family, together with trunks and cooked provisions. One other wagon followed them, which the men employed as drivers of cattle called their resting place. Then followed closely behind 100 head of cattle, always having more or less numbers of young deer with them, captured by the agile men called drovers, who had the cattle in charge. They were 39 days on the road, not entering a house for living purposes during the long journey.

Mr. Kimmel purchased a one-half section of land, and the first year erected a large ashery and pearl-ash refinery, which, together with clearing up the land in a rapid manner, employed 30 men constantly. You can easily imagine what a blessing such an entering in as that proved to the near settlement in which I was born. Soon every settler had a cow, and in the autumn of 1826 a payment became due Mr. K. in Indiana of 300 hogs, which were driven in and butchered, and sold principally to the settlers. George McKim, known to many people of Washtenaw as a worthy, energetic pioneer of those primitive days, made all the barrels to pack the pork in, and also those used in the ashery. In the short space of four years the one-half section purchased by Mr. K. was all cleared up and paid for, by the ashery, it being the rule to put up one ton of saleratus every ten days. That was taken to Detroit, passing down the Territorial road, and brought Mr. K. $120 per ton.

The wife of this settler, Mrs. Sovengire Kimmel, was one of the most useful women of pioneer times. She extracted teeth, bled the sick, fed and ministered to a family and household of 40 persons for years, besides being a tender, kind-hearted neighbor. She had a tall, commanding figure, with gentle blue eyes, and clear, pink and white complexion, everywhere commanding attention and respect. She died about 10 years ago, surviving her husband a few years, at the advanced age of 82 years, and she sleeps in the cemetery at the Free Church, surrounded by her children and neighbors whom she so loved.

When H. Tooker arrived in 1826, only about two acres had been cleared off. Col. Brewer, with his brother Abram, had come in late the September previous, accompanied by H. Robison. They came without their families, and the sickness and death of Abram drew largely upon their time and strength, so that they accomplished but little beyond getting small tenements ready for spring. The next death that occurred was that of Eben Stacy, father of Mrs. Charles Collins, of Ypsilanti, who, with his young wife, Charlotte Sutherland, of Newton, Chittenden county, Vermont, arrived also in June of 1826. Mr. Stacy, having been bred a farmer, was held in very high esteem by the other men of the colony, who, without exception, had been bred to trades. He died in February, 1827; John Bramble's wife died in April following. Thus death so early was writing sadness and thoughtfulness upon the brows of those brave men and women.

Mrs. Stacy and Mr. Bramble were married the following year—their lands joining. In one and a half short years afterward, Mr. Tooker having been back East, upon his return found his house shut, and noticing that a great stillness rested upon the little neighborhood, which usually resounded with the woodman's ax, went on further south, and met a funeral procession, a litter borne by six men; on it lay Mr. Bramble, being carried to his last home! Mrs. Tooker was walking with the already twice-widowed woman, next the bier, there being as yet no horses owned in the little settlement. Can you shut out the present, and go back to that scene? The distance was nearly a mile by a woody pathway—the newly opened grave in a dense forest! All told, there were 12 or 15 neighbors in the little procession. Do you wonder that when the Methodist circuit-rider called upon that little colony, he found hearts open for his lessons of an inheritance beyond, where death never enters nor any weeping? Twice in that short year death visited them. In an instant J. Newell was killed by a falling tree. One almost wonders how they gathered courage to go on. The story of their sorrows, privations and hardships has told the finale. There now remains but one living of those first pioneers of that portion of Superior. The thrice-widowed woman, whose sorrows you have before looked upon, Mrs. George McTim, yet lives upon the land purchased from the Government in 1826. She is upward of 84 years of age, with mind clear, memory active, heart alive to the experiences of those first eventful years. I spent a few hours with her a short time since, glad indeed to sit at her feet and listen to her story.

A school-house was erected in 1827; Pamela Pattison, the first teacher; wages paid her, $1.00 per week. She being married to David Frost, the next year her sister Delight taught the school. The family removed to Nankin, Wayne county, in a few years, but they deserve more than a passing mention here. Long were their loving ministrations remembered by those who had suffered "in mind, body or estate." The town of Panama, as it was then called, began in 1828-'9 to be settled in almost every available spot. Captain Dix and John McCormick, father of C. McCormick, of Ypsilanti, were already settled at Dixboro. Esek Pray was on the Plymouth road, about as far north of us as H. Kimmel was south, and was a leading, energetic, kind man. He was Justice of the Peace and kept a country tavern for many years. Law suits were held at his house, also public meetings of the Town Board. Distance did not separate friends and acquaintances in those times. The Tafts, of Plymouth, who settled there in 1825, greatly aided the settlers of Panama, coming to their "raisings" and often making selections of land, and helping pioneers to reach it. Death was also there; Mrs. James Taft died in 1827, and in a few short years James and Job Taft had passed away.

Mrs. H. H. Tooker, formerly Mary Taft, arrived with her husband in Michigan, and settled in Superior, June, 1826. This lady acted well her part in the early history of the township.

Eldridge Gee visited in Washtenaw in June, 1823, in company with his father-in-law, Epa Mattison, Joseph Young and Giles Downer. This party left Mrs. Downer's house, on the Rouge river, and reached Godfrey's trading post. Following the river trail, they arrived at the mouth of Mill creek, thence to the location of the present city of Ann Arbor, and from that point to the district now known as Saline, finally returning to Mrs. Downer's. At that period there were no white people living in the county. During this visit Mr. Gee erected a shanty, constructed of boards which he brought with him, and six weeks later built a log house on the northeast quarter of section 33, in the present township of Superior. Mr. Gee stated that he dwelt there for 15 or 16 months, when he was evicted by William Sines, who purchased the location from the United States, he having neglected to enter it at the United States land office. He then removed to Woodruff's Grove, where he remained until June, 1824, when Captain Dix asked him to move to Dixboro. He went thither, and while there Mattison entered the east half of the southeast quarter of section 13, in the township of Ann Arbor, July 24, 1824. During that month Mr. Gee assisted his father-in-law in building a house. There cannot be a doubt regarding Mr. Gee's early visit and subsequent settlement; but the statement that he preceded the Woodruff-Grant party seems at variance with the generally accepted fact that Woodruff's Grove was the first settlement of American pioneers in Washtenaw county. Presuming that Mr. Gee made his first exploratory trip into this district in June, 1823, as is stated in his paper, the "first log house" could not be built by him "about the first of March" of that year. It appears very probable that the story of this first settlement is correct in many respects, the dates alone being a little confused. There is no more reason to state that Mr. Gee was the first settler than to give the four fishermen of Monroe precedence on account of their former visits to Godfrey's.

A MODERN BURNS.

William Lambie, a countryman of Robert Burns, settled on the Moan farm, in Superior township, June, 1839. After "a fair, square battle with privations, exile and penury" he won success. Forty years after settlement he addressed the following lines to the pioneers of Superior:

We welcome every honest heart into our friendly meeting;
 To every man that led the van we send a kindly greeting;
 All honor to the gallant band who always led the way,
 And made the State so rich and great, now crowned with silver gray;

Brave and good, they earned their food, privations long enduring,
 By waving woods and flowing floods along the winding Huron.
 The farms will stand to enrich the land through all the coming years,
 The fields they won tell what was done by the good old Pioneers.
 They fought the battles of the free, and no bloody banners bore,
 The grandest of the peaceful brave in the good old days of yore.
 The Heroes of the sylvan woods, workers in sun and rain,
 Who sowed the fields, rich autumn yields, and reaped the golden grain,
 Women refined, and men of mind, as good as you ever saw,
 In happy homes they sung their songs over all our Washtenaw.
 The youngsters glad, in homespun clad, made fields and forests ring,
 And girls and boys, with glee and noise, did in the green wood swing.
 In autumn days, through rural ways, the young were sent to school,
 To learn in youth to speak the truth and pay their debts in full,
 When fields were cleared the church was reared, for worship, prayer and praise,

Hearts were given to hope and Heaven and sacred Sabbath days.
 A righteous cause, no bankrupt laws, with good work for all to do,
 They spent happy days in work and praise, where hearts were kind and true.

They worked for funds, received no duns, or credit from the bank ;
 They gained in health and honest wealth without a paper stamp.
 Farm stock was watered at the rills, in fertile fields they trusted ;
 They held plowshares in solid hills and banks that never bursted.
 They got good interest, paid in wheat, the harvest failing never,
 The rainbow painted on the sky their "trade-mark" true forever.
 The birds sung in the fields and groves on every summer morning,
 The wild flowers and the apple bloom their peaceful homes adorning ;
 The bob-o-links flew over head, free concerts to them bringing,
 The streams went gliding down the glens along the green banks singing.
 They had the "rocks," but not the votes, no ballots for them throwing ;
 They had no need of public feed with granaries overflowing ;
 They reigned on every hill and dale over all the balmy West,
 The heaven's blue dome their palace home, the greatest and the best.
 Some may honor regal kings, wearing their crowns of gold,
 We honor men with glory crowned—the Pioneers of old.

THE VILLAGE OF DIXBORO.

The village is prettily situated on Fleming's creek, in the midst of a rich agricultural country. It was platted in 1826 by Surveyor A. B. Rowe, for Captain John Dix, into 64 lots, with a reserve of 16 rods by 8, and a public square of equal size, north of the south road. Main street, or the western extension of the Detroit road, divided the plat, leaving 22 lots west of the reserve, and square on the north side of Main street, and eight lots east of the square. Dix's barn stood north of the Detroit road, just east of the village boundary, and his dwelling house on the south side of the road. The grist and saw-mill, were located on the creek east of the south road. This plat was recorded Feb. 28, 1828, by Cyrus Beckwith, Registrar of Washtenaw county.

This little town, situated about five miles from Ann Arbor, on the Dixboro road, was located by Capt. Dix. Capt. Dix was New England born, and had spent most of his life on the sea, up to the time of his emigrating to the then Territory of Michigan. He bought at this place a large tract of Government land, put it under cultivation, erected a flouring mill containing two run of stone, and kept a little store for the accommodation of his neighbors.

Capt. Dix possessed a little of that hauteur, which is so characteristic of the sons of Neptune.

Mrs. Dix and the other ladies that came with them to these Western wilds were high-toned families, and acquainted with Boston city life.

Capt. Dix's wife was familiarly known among the old settlers as lady "Trass." The old settlers have made frequent mention of her in connection with her exploits in horsemanship and the use of fire-arms, in watching "deer licks" on summer evenings.

Capt. Dix disposed of his property at this place about the year 1833, and moved to Texas. It is said that lady "Trass" received one league of land from the Texas Government for teaching an infant school.

From the time that Capt. Dix left this place until within a short period, Dixboro has been on the wane,—but as Byron sang, "A change came o'er the spirit of my dreams." Dixboro, after slumbering for years and haunted by the ghost of departed spirits, has come out clean and unscathed as a living monument, showing that civilization and Christianity early made their imprints there.

During 1858 a protracted meeting was commenced under the charge of the Rev. Mr. Donaldson. An organization was formed and the following trustees were elected: James Fair, Isaac N. S. Foster, C. B. Cook, W. S. Waterman, D. B. Newton, H. S. Crippen and F. D. Galpin. It was attended with very good success, and society took a different tone. It was then proposed to build a church, and now, to the praise of Dixboro, it can be said that they have one of the best built and most commodious (Methodist) churches anywhere in the county. Its cost was about $2,200, exclusive of carpets and furniture. And here let us say that the worthy high-sheriff, born in Dixboro, although not a member of this Church, took such an interest in the matter, that the beautiful lamps and chandelier which light the church were donated by him.

Some of the citizens of Ann Arbor, after helping build the church, contributed toward the furniture.

There was one other present we wish to mention, because it was given by a lady, who had taken a very lively interest in seeing the house completed, but disease taking hold of her vitals, she only lived to see the edifice completed. The lady, after giving several tokens of Christian love to her friends, donated a beautiful set of silver-ware for the communion service. So ended the last moments of Mrs. Peter Ingals, a pious woman and an esteemed friend.

THE DIXBORO GHOST.

The ghost excitement of 1845 was one of those strange uprisings of popular superstition which vary the monotony of life, and result in the accumulation of valuable experience. It appears that on the night of Sept. 27, 1846, Isaac Van Woert, who arrived in the village on the preceding day, took lodgings in an untenanted house pointed out to him by Jackson Hawkins. While standing in front of the window, and at a moment when his wife had stepped into Mrs. Hammond's home, he saw a light within the room. After a closer survey he saw a middle-sized woman holding a light in her left hand; her head was bound in a white cloth, while around her was hung a loose gown. The strange figure moved slowly across the room, entered the bed-room, the door of which she closed. VanWoert followed the woman, but on entering the room found nothing there. Before entering, however, he heard one of the bureau drawers open and shut. After the lapse of a few days Woert learned for the first time that the house was occupied by Mrs. M. Mulholland up to the period of her death. The apparition reappeared in October. Van Woert then saw the woman within five feet of him. She said, "Don't touch me; touch me not." Stepping back a little, he demanded what she wanted. The apparition replied, "He has got it. He robbed me little by little until they kilt me. They kilt me; now he has got it all." She further said, "J—— J——, yes, J—— has got it at last, but it won't do him long. Joseph! O Joseph! I wish Joseph would come away."

An affidavit of Van Woert was sworn before Wm. R. Perry, a Justice of the Peace, at Ann Arbor, Dec. 8, 1845, from which the foregoing is summarized. In continuation the witness of these manifestations says: "The third time I saw her I awoke in the night; know not what hour; the bed-room was entirely light; I saw no candle, but saw the same woman, who said, 'J—— can't hurt me any more; no he can't, I am out of his reach. Why don't they get Joseph out of the way? Oh, my boy! why not come away?'"

"The fourth time she appeared was 11 o'clock at night. I was sitting with my feet on the stove hearth, when all at once the door stood open and I saw the same woman in the door supported in the arms of a man whom I knew. She was stretched back and looked as if she were in the agonies of death. She did not speak, but the apparition of the man said, 'She is dying! she will die!' and all disappeared, and the door closed without a noise. The strange and unwelcome visitor appeared four times, always speaking of crimes committed and expressing fears of others to follow. The main subject of the ghost's complaint was supposed to connect the doctor and some of her former relatives with the murder of herself and another person. The body of one of their victims was, according to the specter's testimony, cast into a well at the corner of Main and Mill streets, and that of the other into the waters of Frain's lake." The credulity of the people actually led them to search both well and lake for the victims of the murderers; there was no discovery which might lead to the realization of Woert's gigantic dream. Many are inclined to believe the story of the "Dixboro Ghost," but the great majority ascribe the cause of all this excitement and trouble to a well-laid conspiracy, having for its object the banishment of a medical man from the settlement, and the disgrace of others. If this were the fact, the conspirators succeeded; the persons stigmatized by the specter of Mrs. Mullholland left the district within a brief space of time.

In the earlier years of the township the milling interest received much attention. No less than eight saw-mills have been in operation there, each completing its round of duty and falling into disuse. Of those mills seven possessed a water-power, and one steam-power. Two of them were located at Dixboro; two at Lowell; Pine's, on section 25; Fowler's on section 36 and Wansey's on section 26. Murray's steam saw-mill has passed away like the others. This mill was situated on section 12. The three flouring mills, two of which were built by Captain Dix and R. K. Ailes, at Dixboro, and the other at Lowell, have disappeared. The mill built by Dix was torn down, and Ailes' mill was erected on its site. Those mills were destroyed by fire. The paper mill at Lowell, referred to in the history of Ypsilanti, is the most recent and greatest industry ever established in the county. As late as 1834 there were two stores owned by Clements and Shaw. A tavern kept by Clements and another by Kelly existed also. The first postoffice at Dixboro was kept by Captain Dix.

The wild-cat bank of Lowell progressed so far as to print bills, but prior to the issue of such paper currency the project fell through.

OTHER ITEMS.

There have been seven suicides in Superior, the first of which was perpetrated in 1850.

A gang of horse thieves existed in the township about 1837; yet the township has not furnished a tenant to the State's prison.

The school-houses of the township number 10, five of which are brick, one stone, and four frame structures. The first school-house was built in the Free Church neighborhood. The first outside the Free-Church neighborhood was that on the Ypsilanti and Superior town line.

The churches comprise the M. E. church and the Free church. The first was erected in 1858, and the second built by Col. Brewer and Abel Parkhurst about 1855, intended as a house of worship for all denominations.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The history of Superior township will now be continued by the presentation of brief biographical sketches of several of its most prominent old settlers and other citizens.

Aaron Campbell was born in Livingston Co., N. Y., July 27, 1844, and is a son of Hiram and Elizabeth Campbell, the former a native of Massachusetts, of Scotch descent, and the latter a native of New York, and of German ancestry. Mr. Campbell was married, Dec. 29, 1865, and 4 children have been given them—George W., Rachel E., Olive L., and Benjamin F. Mrs. Campbell was born Nov. 7, 1844, about 16 miles from where Mr. Campbell first saw the light of day. Her parents were natives of Pennsylvania, and of German descent. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are members of the M. E. Church. Mrs. C. had three brothers in the Union army, two of whom were killed in battle, and Mr. C. enlisted in 1862, but was not old enough.

Samuel Casey, farmer, was born at Lanesboro, Berkshire Co., Mass., July 7, 1803. He was the son of Edward and Martha (Stearns) Casey, both natives of Rhode Island. His father and uncle were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, and participated in the battle of Bunker Hill. The elder Casey died in Pittsfield, Mass., in 1815, and his wife in Lewis Co., N. Y., a few years after. Samuel resided in Lewis Co., N. Y., with his mother and brother until 21 years of age. He came to Michigan first in 1826, and remained one summer, returning to New York in December of that year. In 1830 he married Lucinda Jones, and for some time afterward kept a public house in Peoria, eight miles from Geneseo, N. Y. In 1837, Mr. Casey removed to Michigan, and settled at Ypsilanti, for some time thereafter working a farm on shares. In 1847, he purchased the farm he now occupies, lying north of Ypsilanti, in Superior tp., consisting of 80 acres. Mr. Casey was the father of 6 children—Charles, Martin E., Elizabeth H., Edgar, Martha, and an infant not named. Mr. C. has been so unfortunate as to lose the entire number by death. Mr. Casey and wife celebrated the 50th anniversary of their marriage in Aug., 1880, and although the weather was unpleasant, 80 guests were present from Ypsilanti and vicinity, and the appreciation of their friends was shown by the presentation to Mr. Casey of a gold-headed ebony cane, Mrs. Casey receiving from her friends a pair of gold-bowed spectacles. Mrs. Casey's parents were John and Elizabeth Jones, born at Charlestown, Montgomery Co., N. Y., where they spent their lives. She has one sister living in Ypsilanti.

Alanson Chase, (deceased) was among the early pioneers of Washtenaw county. He was born in Massachusetts, April 6, 1806, and a son of Nehemiah Chase, of English descent. His mother was of Scotch parentage. He was reared on a farm and received a common-school education. He was married Jan. 12, 1854, to Melissa Laraway, and 2 children have been given them—Diadama Amorett, a school-teacher in Saline tp., born Dec. 9, 1864, and Edwin A., who was born May 4, 1865. Mrs. Chase was born Feb. 11, 1825. He entered land from Government when he came into the county, and at the time of his death owned 175 acres. He died Nov. 7, 1880, and was mourned by numerous friends and relatives. He was an honest and intelligent citizen and well respected throughout the county.

James P. Clements (deceased) was born in Saratoga county, N. Y., Jan. 12, 1807. He went to a district school until 15 years of age, when he entered the employ of Squire Ketchum, as clerk in a clothing house at Bemis Heights, N. Y. He remained there six years. He then started on a Western trip as traveling salesman for the above named firm, paying his own expenses and receiving only a small salary. In 1836 he gave up this business, and, in connection with his brother, purchased what is known as the "Dix property," in this county, where he remained two years. In the fall of 1839 he went East, and was married to Mary Ann Finch October 29, daughter of Daniel Finch, Drum-Major in the war of 1812. After remaining a few months in Saratoga county, N. Y., he returned to Michigan and entered the photography business. He built a "car" and traveled through the "Saginaw valley" until 1861, when the Rebellion broke out. In the spring of 1863 he was sent to Baltimore with a soldiers' donation from Superior tp. He returned and again entered the photography business, this time at Ann Arbor, where he remained a term of years. He subsequently retired to his farm at Dixboro. His wife died Aug. 9, 1878. She was a pioneer of the county, and a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. Clements died of pneumonia, Feb. 9, 1880, leaving a family of 4 children, 3 boys and 1 girl—Sarah E., William S., Millard F. and Edgar D.

Daniel Crippen (deceased). Perhaps no man within the borders of Washtenaw county was so well known in former years as the subject of this sketch. Daniel Crippen was born at Middlebury, Schoharie county, N. Y., in 1794. His father was a soldier in the Continental army, and during his three years' service encountered many hair-breadth escapes. Daniel was endowed with the same noble patriotism that characterized his father, and when the war of 1812 was declared he was one of the first to shoulder a musket in defense of his beloved country. He volunteered, but was never mustered into service. He remained in his native State until 1827, when he turned his face toward the setting sun, and started to find a home for himself and family. He arrived in the Territory of Michigan and settled in Washtenaw county, entering 160 acres of land on section 21, Ann Arbor tp. The country was then an unbroken wilderness, and Mr. Crippen was forced to cut a road two miles long to connect with the main road. He assisted in the raising of the first grist-mill, known as the Dixboro Mill. Mr. Crippen was a local preacher of the M. E. denomination for over 50 years, and was a man of sterling integrity and unblemished character. He was always foremost in matters of public enterprise, and a leading spirit in those relating to education and religion. He departed this life March 1, 1876. In 1816 he married Charlotte Gale, a native of Dutchess county, N. Y. Eight children were sent to bless this union, 7 of whom are living—Henry S., Anna, Roger, Ira, Phoebe, Perry and John W. Harriet is deceased. Henry S. Crippen, the eldest child, was born in Albany county, N. Y., in 1817, and came with his parents to this county in 1827. He obtained his education in the old log school-houses, having to walk two and a half miles to enjoy the benefit of even that rude institute of learning. In 1842 he married Mary Wickoff, a native of New York. Four children were born to them—Charles W., William H., Frank B., and Celestia, all married, and recognized as citizens of character and integrity. Mr. C. has been elected to fill different positions of trust in Ann Arbor tp., and was identified with the roads, school-houses and churches built within its borders. He is a faithful member of the M. E. Church. His first vote was cast for William H. Harrison, President of the United States. They have 4 children—George D., Daniel L., Ira W., and Anna, all residing at home.

Ira Crippen was born in Albany county, N. Y., in 1826, and came to this county with his parents at an early day. He remained at home on the farm until he was 21 years of age, and for three years engaged in the carpenter and joiner's trade. He then returned to agricultural pursuits, and in 1864 bought 100 acres of his father's estate. He has made subsequent purchases, and increased his farm to 320 acres of well-improved land. Mr. Crippin is a man of integrity, and liberal in all features of education and general improvement. He has served in different official positions and always enjoyed the respect and confidence of his constituents. Mr. C. was married in 1854, to Charlotte Douglas, a native of Michigan. They have 4 children—George D., Daniel L., Ira W. and Anna.

Ichabod Crippen was born July 10, 1807, in New York. His parents, Ichabod and Mary (Whiten) Crippen, were natives of New York, and of English descent. Mr. Crippen was married in 1830 to Elizabeth Sitzer, who was born in New York Feb. 4, 1811. They have 3 children—Marcus, a farmer of Washtenaw Co.; Elizabeth, married and residing in Superior tp., and Phœbe, wife of Robert Martin, a successful farmer, who owns 160 acres of well-improved land on sec. 18. Mr. Crippen came to this county in 1831, locating land on sec. 20, where he still resides. He is probably the only pioneer in Superior tp., who resides on the land first entered from the Government. Mr. Crippen's military record is confined to the Toledo war, in which strife he officiated as enrolling officer of this region. Mr. and Mrs. Crippen have been connected with the M. E. Church for over 44 years, the former being elected Class-leader after his first two years connection with the Church. He served 15 years, then resigned and accepted the position of Steward and Corresponding Secretary, officiating in that capacity 15 years. Mr. Crippen and wife are honored and respected citizens of Washtenaw Co., and bear the good wishes of all with whom they are acquainted. Mr. Crippen is Republican in politics, and has served as School Director in Superior tp. He has accumulated his present worldly effects by his own efforts, and deserves commendable mention in this volume.

Marcus Crippen, son of Ichabod and Elizabeth (Sitzer) Crippen, natives of New York, was born in Washtenaw Co. in 1832. He was raised a farmer's boy, and received a common-school education. He was married in 1853 to Mary Ann Martin. Of their 4 children, 2 are living—Marcus R. and John T. Mrs. Crippen died in 1863. Mr. Crippen was again married in 1864, to Martha Gawley. They have 3 children—Alice, Ichabod T. and Linus. Mr. and Mrs. Crippen are members of the M. E. Church.

A. F. Dennis was born near Rochester, Monroe Co., N. Y., in 1824, and is a son of George B. and Abigail (Day) Dennis. He received his education in the common schools of Oakland Co., Mich. Mr. Dennis removed to Washtenaw Co. in 1865, and has been engaged in agricultural pursuits since. He owns 100 acres of richly cultivated land, on which he has lately erected a good residence. He was married Sept. 26, 1867, to Lenora W. Robinson, who was born in 1838. They have 2 children—George R., born July 24, 1869, and Maud, who was born April 15, 1874. Mr. Dennis is a self-made man, and well deserves the success which he has achieved.

William E. Eldert was born on Long Island, N. Y., Dec. 8, 1856, and is a son of Wyckoff and Elizabeth (Blake) Eldert, of English descent. William received a common-school education, and by occupation is a farmer. He was married in 1876 to Hattie C. Campbell. She was born in Superior tp., Jan. 18, 1855, and died Feb. 6, 1881. Mrs. Eldert was a faithful and consistent member of the M. E. Church. Mr. Eldert is Republican in politics, and owns 77 acres of valuable land on sec. 18.

Edwin G. Fifley was born at Ann Arbor in 1856, and is the only son of Christian and Clara (Allmendinger) Fifley, natives of Germany. Mrs. Fifley died in 1870. His father was married the second time, in 1872, to Mary L. Druse, born in Washtenaw county, in 1832. Edwin received his education at the Ypsilanti public schools, and has followed agricultural pursuits mainly through life. He owns 80 acres of land on sec. 28. Mr. Fifley was married in 1879 to Tillie Deuress, a native of this county. Mrs. Fifley is a lady of culture and refinement, and noted for her intellectual abilities. Mr. Fifley is a member of the Green-back party, and in his business transactions is very careful and prudent.

Rolland Fletcher was born Aug. 14, 1848, at Sumpter, Wayne Co., N. Y. His parents were Addison and Philinda (Summers) Fletcher, the former being a native of Massachusetts, and reared by the society of Friends. Rolland grew to manhood on his father's farm, and at the age of 19 married Julia A. Millard, and 3 children have been sent to them—Millard, Guy and Elsie. For several years

Mr. Fletcher was in the employ of the Ypsilanti Paper Co., as teamster, but in 1873 he bought the old "Vought farm," consisting of 160 acres, and has put it under a high state of cultivation. He deals quite extensively in stock, always keeping a large assortment on the farm.

Milo E. Gage, farmer, sec. 35; P. O., Ypsilanti; was born in Wayne county Mich., July 21, 1856, and is a son of William and Susannah (Grigley) Gage, natives of Michigan. Mr. Gage received a good education, and in 1868 settled in Superior tp., where he has since lived. He was married Dec. 23, 1875, to Lottie Criphey, whose parents were early settlers in this county. Mr. Gage owns a good farm, and is a faithful member of the Democratic party.

A. J. Gale was born in Albany county, N. Y., in 1829, and is a son of Henry S. and Pacy (Cook) Gale. In 1833 he accompanied his parents to Superior tp., Washtenaw county, where he has since resided. In 1850 he married Martha A. Haner, who was born in New York in 1832. Of their 5 children 3 are living. Mr. Gale was raised on a farm, and has followed that occupation through life, in which he has been very successful. He owns 105 acres of valuable land. His grandfather, Roger Gale, entered land in Michigan Territory at an early date. Mr. Gale has a very large collection of histories, the insurance on which amounts to $50 annually.

George W. Gale was born in Albany county, N. Y., in 1814. He is a descendant of Joseph Gale, a native of Yorkshire, England. His son and grandson were, Roger Gale, sr., who was born at Stamford, Conn., in 1739, and Roger Gale, jr., the father of George W., who was born in Dutchess county, N. Y., in 1771, and was married in 1792 to Anna Sherburne, a native of New York, and daughter of Henry Sherburne, a Pay-master during the Revolutionary war. Mr. Sherburne was murdered for his money, while on his way to make a settlement with the Government. Mr. Gale was one of a family of 13 children, of whom 8 arrived at maturity, and only 4 living at present—Charlotte, wife of Daniel Crippen; Roger, a resident of Middleburg, N. Y.; Isaac, who lives in Shiawassee county, Mich., and George W. The subject of this sketch spent his early life on his father's farm, and in 1833 emigrated to Michigan. He lived alone three months, making corn-meal pudding his principal food, as it was better adapted to his style of cooking. He was married in December, 1839, to Jane Vanmoggin, a native of Solace, Ontario Co., N. Y., and daughter of Louis and Jane (Westfall) Vanmoggin. They have 1 child—George F. Mr. Gale has been a farmer through life, but of late years has devoted a large share of his attention to the breeding of fine horses, and was one of the first to introduce the fine-wool sheep into this county. His herd, in 1851, took 17 premiums at the State Agricultural Society. In 1837 Mr. Gale was Captain of a militia company organized in the southern half of Washtenaw county. He is Democratic in politics, and has served in several official positions in this county.

Henry S. Gale, farmer and stock-raiser, sec. 17, Superior tp.; P. O., Ypsilanti; was born on sec. 22, Superior tp., Feb. 10, 1835. His parents are Henry and Pacy (Cook) Gale, the former a native of New York, and of English descent, and the latter a native of Rhode Island, and of German parentage. His father came to Washtenaw county in 1829, locating on sec. 15, Superior tp. Henry was married in 1857 to Harriet Frain, daughter of Samuel Frain. They have 1 child—George, who was born in 1858. Mr. Gale owns a farm of 50 acres, where he has resided for over 15 years.

Frank P. Galpin, son of Freeman P. and Almira D. (Pray) Galpin, was born in Superior tp., Washtenaw county, where he has since lived, and engaged in agricultural pursuits. He owns 100 acres of choice land, and resides in a handsome and substantial residence. In 1876 he married Miss Carpenter, a daughter of Rufus Carpenter, who was born in 1806, and settled at Ann Arbor in 1844, but is now a merchant in Dixboro. He was a prominent merchant of Ann Arbor until 1856. His parents were Jacob and Mary (Bliss) Carpenter. Mr. and Mrs. Galpin are young, intelligent and industrious, and will make a success in life. Mrs. G. is a worthy member of the M. E. Church.

Freeman P. Galpin was born at Rush, Monroe Co., N. Y., July 18, 1825. His parents were Philo and Jane (Townsend) Galpin, who emigrated to this county in 1832. The father purchased a tract of land, and when Freeman became of age he took charge of it, and has resided there since. In 1845 he married Almira Pray, and she bore him 3 children—Philo, Norris and Frank. Mrs. Galpin died in 1853, and a year later Mr. G. married Mary Ruthruff, of Ann Arbor. Seven children were sent to bless this union, 3 of whom survive—William, Elias and Minnie. The deceased are Ida May, Lizzie, Ella and Louella. Mr. Galpin has been honored with several positions of honor and trust by his fellow citizens, and served as Tp. Clerk from 1845 until 1848. In 1873, was elected to represent Superior tp., in the County Board of Supervisors, which position he still retains. He bears the good will and esteem of all his numerous acquaintances.

Philo Galpin, one of the pioneers of Superior tp., was born at Landsdown, Leeds Co., Ontario, in 1804. His father was Nathan Galpin, and when Philo was nine years of age, he removed with his family to Rush, Monroe Co., N. Y., where he was engaged in farming for several years. In 1832, emigrated to Michigan, and located land on sections 8, 9, and 17. This estate included 240 acres of "oak openings," and when improved, made a fine and productive farm. Mr. Galpin was ill about one year after their arrival in this county, and they endured the privation incident to pioneer life with patience and fortitude. When they first arrived at their new home, there were few settlers in the immediate neighborhood. B. Hicks resided just east of Mr. G.'s location; John McCormick lived in the first house west, and Capt. Dix had begun the erection of a mill at Dixboro; Isaac Pray lived near them, and Widow Hawkins, with her sons, owned a tract of land in the vicinity. There was no school-house near, but a school was taught that season. By industry, integrity, and good will, Mr. Galpin won the confidence of his fellow citizens, and was elected by them as Justice of the Peace. He is a member of the Methodist Church, and of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw county. He has been the father of 4 children—Freeman P., Aurellia, Susannah and Eliza Ann. He resides near his oldest child, Freeman P.

Robert L. Geddes, farmer, is a son of Robert and Maria (Lane) Geddes. His father came to Michigan in 1825, and was among the few who first entered Washtenaw county. He located about 500 acres on sec. 31, Superior tp., and 36, Ann Arbor tp. He had sold 200 acres of land in Seneca Co., N. Y., for $2,400, and brought that amount to this county, which at that time was considered quite a fortune in this country. His brother John came out with him and entered land in Ann Arbor tp., where he still resides. Mr. G. came to this county a bachelor, but was afterward married, and raised 4 children—Jane, wife of Mr. Barnes, of Ypsilanti; Robert L., Maria and John (deceased). Maria married John Spears, of Lockport, N. Y. The father of these children passed away from earth March 11, 1866. Mrs. Geddes died in Feb., 1837. Robert L., the subject of this sketch, when he was 21 years old entered the west half of sec. 31, including 160 acres, on which there were 75 acres improved. When his father died he received all the land he owned in Superior tp., except a small portion willed to Mrs. Barnes, his daughter. He was married Sept. 23, 1861, to Hannah P. Green, daughter of Ebenezer Green of Ann Arbor.

Watson Geer was born at Floyd, Oneida Co., N. Y., April 5, 1825. His parents were Stephen and Zerniah (Fuller) Geer, natives of New York, the former of English and the latter of Welsh descent. Mr. Geer was reared on his father's farm, and at the age of 12 years was deprived of a mother's loving care. His father followed her a year later. He remained on the old homestead with his 5 brothers and 2 sisters until his 25th year. He then came to Michigan with his brother William, and bought 180 acres on sec. 2, of Superior tp. After living there five years, the brothers divided the farm, Mr. Geer taking the land where he now resides, formerly known as the "Esek Pray farm," and containing 450 acres. Mr. Geer was married Dec. 15, 1852, to Mary J., daughter of Esek and Sally A. (Hammond) Pray, the former a native of Connecticut, and the latter of Rhode Island. Five children have been given to them, 3 of whom are living—Thomas P., Milton W. and Mary A. Willard E. and Clara A. are deceased. Mr. Geer is Democratic in politics, but takes little interest in that direction.

George Gill is a prominent pioneer and farmer of Superior tp. He was born in England in 1803, and was a son of George and Sarah (Mills) Gill. He learned the mason's trade when quite young, which vocation he followed for some time. He was married in 1836 to Susanna Tompkinson. Mr. Gill and wife were among the earliest settlers of Washtenaw county. When they first came here, Mr. Gill only had $25 in money when he arrived, and was forced to go to housekeeping in a school-house, but soon the latter building was rented for its former purpose, and Mr. Gill was again without a shelter. He then bought a small log cabin and one acre of land for his $25. He remarked to a friend that it was the proudest day of his life when he led his wife into their rude log cabin, knowing it was to be a home for them, and the best of all—was paid for. His taxes the first year were 10 cents, an extraordinary contrast to the $100 he expends annually at the present time for the same purpose. He has prospered beyond his most sanguine expectations, and now owns and farms 164 acres of valuable land. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gill, 4 of whom are living—George W., Sarah E., Peter T. and Martha Jane. Joseph A. is deceased. Mr. Gill and wife are members of the M. E. Church. He is a Democrat, and has been a Justice of the Peace for 10 years. These venerable pioneers have a sufficient competency to last them through life, and are living very comfortably and happy. They have 22 grandchildren and 2 great-grandchildren, nearly all of them living near the old homestead. They come often to see "grandpa and grandma," whom they love so dearly, and to hear the wonderful story about "Hold Hingland," which the aged veterans like to relate so well.

Truman B. Goodspeed was born in New York in 1825, and is a son of Shubael and Elizabeth (Blackman) Goodspeed, of English descent, the former a native of Vermont, and the latter of Massachusetts. When Truman was but one year old his parents removed to Washtenaw Co., Mich., and located on sec. 20, Superior tp., where he has resided for over half a century, following agricultural pursuits the greater part of the time. He owns 100 acres of well-improved land. He was married April, 1851, to Caroline McCormick, a native of this county, and daughter of Charles McCormick, an early resident of Superior tp. They have 3 children, all boys—Hiram, born May 3, 1856; Charles E., Dec. 19, 1863, and Truman B., born Aug. 17, 1869. Mr. Goodspeed is Republican in politics, and has filled several minor offices. His grandfather, Cely Neal, came to Washtenaw county when not half a dozen families were residing within the limits of this new prosperous county. He died at the advanced age of 84 years.

Lanus Hiscock was born in this county in 1836, on the farm where he now resides. He has been engaged in agricultural pursuits the greater part of his life, and has succeeded in making his surroundings pleasant and happy. In 1868 he married Martha D. Fair, a native of Ann Arbor tp. The result of this union has been the birth of 2 children—William J. and Walter F. Mr. Hiscock has been honored with several official trusts in the tp. wherein he resides, all of which he has satisfactorily filled.

Leasure L. Kimmel, a resident of this county for 56 years, came here in June, 1825, with his parents, Henry and Susannah (Laubengayer) Kimmel, natives of Pennsylvania, the former of Polish descent, the great-grandfather, Michael Kimmel, having been a Colonel in the Polish army. Three of his sons came to the United States and located in Pennsylvania.

Henry Kimmel, the father of the subject of this notice, moved from his home at Stoyestown, Somerset Co., Pa., to Kaskaskia, Ill., in 1821, with 3 children—Elizabeth, George and Leasure L. At this place he lived nearly four years, during which time 2 more children were added to his family—Reuben and Mary. In 1824 he sold his Illinois farm and started with his family, 100 head of stock and farming implements, for Michigan, going the whole distance by horse-team for family. They had to ford many small streams, make rafts for carrying the goods over, and swim the stock. The trip occupied 39 days.

On arrival here he settled on his land on secs. 22 and 23, which he had previously entered from the Government, 600 acres in extent. There being no house on this land, he had to leave his family in a settlement some 15 or 20 miles distant, where he bought a piece of corn to keep his stock through the winter. Mr. Kimmel got his log house ready in about two months, and moved his family into it. This was on the site of the front yard of the present residence. His nearest neighbors were two or three families at Ypsitanti and Plymouth. Mr. K. prospered and amassed a fortune. Politically he was a Whig and finally a Republican, served in various local offices, gave the name to "Superior" township, and assisted in locating the county seat. Two other children were born in his family in this county—Edgar and Susan. He died in August, 1865, aged 82 years, mourned by his bereaved wife and children, and a large circle of friends. Mrs. K. died some years afterward, at her son's house, surrounded by many devoted friends.

Leasure L. Kimmel, the subject of this sketch, was born April 19, 1819, in the town of Stoyestown, Somerset Co., Pa.; passed his early years on his father's farm, receiving instruction four months in the year in a little log school-house. At the age of 22 he took charge of his father's farm, which he has occupied and managed ever since, paying a debt of some $9,000 which encumbered the estate. He was married Dec. 18, 1845, to Miss Jane Brewer, who was born July 18, 1827, a daughter of John and Samuel (Church) Brewer, the former a native of New York State, and the latter of Belchertown, Mass. They were early settlers in this county, and are now deceased. Mr. B. was killed by a horse running away.

Mr. Kimmel had 7 children as follows: Albert, who was born Dec. 20, 1846, married Margaret Randall, of Indiana, owns 120 acres of land, and lives near the old homestead; an infant daughter, deceased; Cora Bell, who was born Oct. 5, 1854, and died Aug. 25, 1856; Fred W., who married Louisa Houston, of Canton, Mich., and owns 130 acres of the old homestead, on which he lives; Kittie Alice, who was born March 5, 1862; Susie E., who died an infant; Henry Grant, who was born Jan. 24, 1867, and Mary E., born Oct. 16, 1869.

A portrait of Mr. Kimmel appears elsewhere in this history.

Chauncey Knapp (deceased) was born in Massachusetts in 1798, and accompanied his parents to Michigan in 1830, locating at Toxas Plains in Wayne county, and subsequently at Dixboro, Washtenaw county. He then removed to Ann Arbor, and thence to Ypsilanti. While a resident of Ann Arbor he built the first woolen-mill at that place, in 1831. He continued at that business 12 years, and was afterward engaged in the carding business, and agricultural pursuits, up to the time of his death. He was married to Julia A. Bell, a native of Massachusetts. Her father was a soldier in the war of 1812, and her grandfather served in the Continental army, living to be over 103 years of age. Her grandfather, on her mother's side, was with Washington, in that memorable Valley Forge campaign. Seven children were born to Mr. Knapp and wife, 4 of whom are living. Mr. Knapp took an active part in political matters, and for 25 years held the position of School Inspector. He died in 1878, and his loss was mourned by the entire county. His son, Alfred J. After he had cleared off his land he erected a steam saw-mill in Superior tp., probably the first of that kind in the vicinity. He also built a steam flour-mill in Canton, which, though a great convenience to the settlers, proved a disastrous investment for Mr. Murray. It was the cause of his losing the greater part of his property, and in 1857 it was removed to Detroit. Mr. Murray was Supervisor of his tp., and was elected to the Legislature in 1843 and in 1845. He was also a candidate for State Senator, but being a Democrat, and the Republicans in the ascendancy, he was defeated. animal. The boy in company with his sister Catherine, afterward Mrs. George Sutton, of Northfield tp., started for the trap, and when within range, put the gun to his shoulder, and by a well-directed shot, laid low his wolfship. He did not despair, as a great many would have done, but set resolutely to work to earn the necessary amount of money that would carry him farther West. This he did in a short time, and immediately went to Ann Arbor, Washtenaw Co., Mich., where he obtained employment with William S. Maynard. Both were taken prisoners when young, and conveyed by the captors, through most of the then Northwestern Territory. After three years' captivity, they were exchanged at Detroit, and soon after were married. Joseph Wykoff settled on sec. 25, Superior tp., Washtenaw county, in 1826. He was married to Phoebe Parsons, and 13 children were born to them, 10 of whom grew to mature years, were married and reared families; Seven are now living—Charlotte, widow of Abner Bruen, of Lansing, Mich.; Harriet, wife of Abram Shears, of Wayne county, Mich.; William, a resident of Kansas; Floyd, who resides at Howell, Livingston Co.; Theron, who married Cynthia Packard, of Salem tp.; Celestia, wife of E. R. Curtis, who resides near the old homestead in Superior tp., and Elizabeth, wife of William McEwen, of Battle Creek, Mich. Mr. Wykoff was a successful agriculturist, and resided in this county for 52 years. He died at the residence of his son, in Salem tp., Sept. 7, 1878. Mrs. Wykoff is still living and in her 82d year. Her home is in this county, but at present she is living with her son at Plymouth, Wayne Co., Mich. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Wykoff was an "old-line Whig," but in later years, a member of the Republican party. He left 107 acres of good land to his wife and children.

John Young, M. D., Dixboro, was born in Scotland in 1846, and is a son of John and Margaret (Spier) Young. He received his preliminary education in the parish schools of his native land. He emigrated to the United States in 1865, and followed agricultural pursuits until 1870. He then commenced the study of medicine, and in 1872 entered the medical department of the University of Michigan, from which he graduated in 1874. He had fully determined to be a thorough master of the profession, and his present success is a fitting reward for his former diligent and laborious duties. He practiced two years in Tuscola, Mich., and in 1876 removed to Dixboro, where he is now following his chosen profession. He was married in 1880 to Fannie N. Atherton, an adopted daughter of Ransom Townsend, a resident of Superior tp. Mrs. Young's father was a Lieutenant in the Union ranks during the late war and was killed in battle.

YPSILANTI TOWNSHIP.

PHYSICAL AND TOPOGRAPHICAL.

The township of Ypsilanti forms one of the most delightful districts of this county, and therefore of the State. The Huron river, or the Giwitatisgweisibi of the Northern Indians, enters the township in section 5, flows southeast through sections 4, 9 and 16, and at the southeastern limits of Ypsilanti begins its tortuous course through sections 15, 22, 23 and 24, and enters Wayne county at the village of Rawsonville. The Seine-like windings of this beautiful stream and the picturesque valley through which it flows, earned for it the unrepeatable name conferred by the "simple-tongued" aborigines. Paint creek, Willow run and several minor streams course through the township. There is one small lake or pond in the northwestern section, which may be termed Tompkin's lake. The city of Ypsilanti occupies the S. E. quarter of section 5, the southern half of section 4, the western portion of section 3, all section 9, with fractional sections 8 and 10. The southern limits of the city extend into sections 15, 16 and 17. Rawsonville village is prettily situate on the eastern confines of section 24. The M. C. R. R. runs from east to west through the city and northern townships.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

The township of Ypsilanti contains 19,517 acres of land, of which 14,803 are improved, and 4,714 unimproved. This land is laid off into 169 farms, which, equalized, would give 115.49 acres to each.

The area under wheat in May, 1880, was reported to be 3,341 acres, which compares very favorably with the acreage, 2,727, of the former year. The product of this cereal in 1879 was 53,548 bushels, or 19.64 bushels per acre.

The oats crop of 1879, grown on 1,126 acres, was 43,010 bushels; the product of 1,862 acres of corn fields was $137,250; 779 acres of rye yielded 1,357 bushels; 65 acres of barley produced 1,449 bushels; 171 acres of potatoes gave 15,840 bushels; and 2,781 acres of meadow land produced 3,588 tons of hay.

FIRST GRANTEES OF FERTILE LANDS.

The first settlers west of Detroit may properly be said to be Gabriel Godfroy, Francis Pepin and Romaine de Chambre, the French owners of the Otawewigamig or Indian trading house, which was located on or near the place of George Hill's residence on the west side of the Huron. The lands in the vicinity, subsequently known as "the four French claims," containing 2,363 acres, were parceled out in tracts and deeded to the traders. Section 690, a tract of 612 acres, was granted to Godfroy; one of 622 acres to Romaine de Chambre, forming section 691; section 680, containing 556 acres to Godfroy's children, and the south claim known as 681, comprising 562, to Francis Pepin. The date of this wholesale deeding was June 11, 1811, two years after the first settlement of the French traders. The first lands sold by the general Government, after the United States survey of 1818-'19, were portions of sections 9 and 10, in town 3 south, range 7 east. The first purchaser was Eli Kellogg, to whom letters patent were issued July 1, 1822, for 132 acres, forming the south part of section 9.

Augustus Brevoort Woodward purchased the northwest quarter of sec. 10, comprising 80 acres of land, the deed duly registered Aug. 16, 1862. Major Benjamin J. Woodruff arrived in April, 1823, entered the west half of the northwest fractional quarter of sec. 15, on the 22d of that month, and six days later was registered owner of 114 acres in sec. 15 and 22. This tract took the name of "Woodruff's Grove." John Thayer, Robert M. Stitts, David Beverly and Titus Bronson arrived at the same time as did Ben. Woodruff, and settled or located tracts of land one mile southeast of the business center of Ypsilanti, where Chester Yost subsequently made a home, and now the property of Addison Fletcher. To follow up the names of settlers who arrived in the township up to the year 1834, and notice each fully, is impracticable, but the record may be given correctly in an abridged form; therefore in the following list, is given the names of those who made the first purchases of the lands here, and their locations:

Before passing from the subject of the first bona-fide buyers of the lands of this township, it is just and proper to quote from the memoirs of John Geddes. In 1824 there were 14 purchasers, comprising John Calhoun, W. W. Harwood, Walter Oakman, Abram

Avery, Taylor Stewart, Joseph Brown, Benjamin Sutton, David McCord, Ben. J. Woodruff, John Trotter, John Forbes, John Shaw, Daniel Cross and Michael Kamiski. They are probably all dead. Three of them died in Ypsilanti. Thirty persons purchased lands in 1825; of them Jonathan G. Morton is the sole survivor. Lyman Graves died in January, 1880.

Benjamin J. Woodruff was the first settler on land purchased from the general Government. He built a house and moved his family into it July 6, 1823. Woodruff started the first village in Washtenaw. He was the first justice of the peace, the first postmaster, first sheriff and first mill builder in the county. He came from Ohio to Ypsilanti.

On the first day of June, 1825, the road from Detroit to Chicago was surveyed by the United States commissioners, beyond Woodruff's Grove; so the village perished. Woodruff moved to Ypsilanti, where he and his wife died. He was social and accommodating, and made a good landlord. His grave is not marked.

The next purchaser was Titus Bronson, who bought two fractions in Ypsilanti in 1823. On May 5, 1824, he purchased 160 acres in section 32, Ann Arbor township, adjoining section 29, which was first platted for that city. He exchanged with John Allen for the N. W. quarter of section 17, in Pittsfield township. He disposed of this land to Leonard Morris, and went on a visit to his birth-place in Connecticut. Bronson returned the following spring to Tallmadge, Ohio, and subsequently settled at Kalamazoo, which he named Bronson. A vote of the citizens changed it afterward to its present title. Returning East in 1853 he died, and a headstone marks his grave in the quiet church-yard of a Connecticut valley, bearing the words, "A Western pioneer has returned to sleep with his fathers."

Thomas Sackrider was the third occupying purchaser. He built a house on his land and opened a wheat-field in 1824. In the fall of 1825 he sold 15 bushels of wheat to Robert Geddes at $1.25 per bushel. Subsequently he sold his property, migrated to Lenawee county, and died there some years ago.

Oronte Grant was the fourth grantee. He settled here with his family in April, 1824. John Bryan and family arrived at "the Grove" Oct. 23, 1823; in 1824 purchased land, erected a house, and moved into it Dec. 31, the same year. He was a carpenter and the builder of the first bridge over the Huron in Washtenaw, during the fall of 1827, at Ypsilanti. He built the county court-house in 1834, and after the completion of this work moved to Constantine, St. Joe county, where he died years ago. Hiram Tuttle, the sixth purchaser in order of time, arrived with Major Woodruff, settled on the banks of the Huron below "the Grove," and died there. Hiram Johns, the seventh purchaser, located on the east side of the Huron, adjoining Eli Kellogg's land. David McCord and Robert Fleming bought lands at the same time; the latter built the first saw-mill in this county on section 25, Ann Arbor township, in the summer of 1824. It was located on a little creek running through that portion of the county, subsequently named Fleming's creek. He was a non-resident. Harvey H. Snow was the tenth buyer, and the owner of "Snow's Landing," now called Rawsonville. This settler disposed of his interests to Abel Millington in 1825 or 1826, and emigrated. Erastus Guilford was the 11th purchaser; Daniel Cross, the 12th buyer of Government lands, sold out in 1825 and emigrated to Saline, where he resided for a time, afterward changing to Manchester and ultimately returning to Ypsilanti, where he died, Feb. 15, 1875. George W. Noyes was the 13th purchaser in Ypsilanti township. He moved to Ann Arbor in 1824 and two years later was the principal actor in building the first grist-mill there. While assisting at the raising of Andrew Nowlan's house, Nov. 23, 1826, he was accidentally killed.

THE STORY OF THE FIRST IMMIGRANTS.

Among the names in the list of land purchasers are those of Oronte Grant, Ben. Woodruff, William Eiclor, Hiram Tuttle, David Stiles, Willard Hall, George Hall and Captain Fair. The four last named were settlers of Monroe for some years previous, and formerly neighbors of Grant and Woodruff; so that when the first named men arrived in Michigan, they found acquaintances to receive them. Stiles, Fair and the Hall brothers were fishermen in 1823; they carried their operations up the Huron as far as Godfroy's trading post. They knew the country well, and advised the new comers to settle near Godfroy's on the Pottawatomie trail. In accord with such advice the immigrants and their friends of Monroe left en route for Godfroy's, Wm. Eiclor alone remaining at Monroe in charge of the cattle and provisions. They arrived at Godfroy's, located their farms and then returned to Monroe for the purpose of bringing forward their cattle and provisions. This they accomplished June 1, 1823. On the same day the party entered upon the erection of a house for Benjamin Woodruff.

A few days later, Grant and Woodruff left for Ohio, with the intention, on the part of the latter, to return with his family by July, so that the anniversary of Independence might be celebrated in the first home of an American pioneer. He and his friends did not arrive until the sixth of July, so that the proposed celebration did not take place until 1824. The date of settlement by the Woodruff family, consisting of Benjamin and Mrs. Woodruff, six children, with Mrs. Snow, is July 6, 1823. Immediately Mr. Woodruff waited upon the Governor of the Territory, who named the settlement "Woodruff's Grove."

Early in 1824, Mrs. Grant, Mrs. Tuttle, Jane Johnson, and Mrs. Alvin (Eiclor) Cross, arrived. At that time, Daniel Cross, John Bryan, S. Noyce, and J. Brainard were located near the Grove; while the Hall brothers and Beverly had their log-cabins built on the opposite banks. Godfroy's trading post was deserted then, nothing remaining of it save a few logs and remnants of the bark which formed its roof. The post was near the "Spring well" of the village of later days, almost on the site where John Stuart built his first house. The first banquet given in the township or county was at the Grove, July 4, 1824. The party included Arden H. Ballard, Judge Fleming, Capt. Fair, Orange Crane, Wm. Eielor, W. W. Harwood, Benj. Woodruff, Oronte Grant, Hiram Tuttle, Thomas Sackrider, David Stiles, Leonard Miller, Sanders Beverly, David McCorrel, J. Mahen, H. Mallett, John Bryan, J. Stoddard, Mrs. Woodruff, Mrs. Grant, Mrs. Bryan, Mrs. Tuttle, Miss Johnson, Miss Mallett, and Miss Eielor, with the children of Woodruff, Tuttle and Bryan. John Phillips and Walter Oakman, two Irishmen, are said to have gone to Detroit to celebrate the day there. The season of chills and fever arrived in August following. Oakman died. Nothing less than the attention which Mrs. Woodruff bestowed upon the ailing members of the little community, warded off death in many other instances. This lady prepared porridge for the sick, and appointed Miss Eielor (Mrs. Alvin Cross) the distributor of such food in the homes of the sufferers. Rev. John Baughman is said to have preached the first sermon in the Grove, in the house of Brooks, in 1825. The same year Woodruff erected the first grist-mill, a half mile south of the Grove. Mallett was the first violinist, or "fiddler," who performed for the Terpsichoreans of Washtenaw, long before it was organized as a county, July 4, 1824. The first school without the village was taught by Catharine Rosencrantz. Walter Oakman died in 1824 and David Beverly in 1825, being the two white men for whom the first graves were excavated. The first marriage was that of Eliza Cross to Andrew McKinstry, contracted in November, 1825; and the first birth, that of Alpha Washtenaw Bryan. The first regular store was opened by Jonathan G. Morton and Aretus Belden, where now is the office of the Commercial, N. W. corner of Huron and Pearl. Morton employed blacksmith Elmer and started him. If the trading post of Godfroy, which was located nearly opposite, is considered as a store, that of Morton's must lose precedence; yet it must be conceded that Mr. Morton was the first American merchant of this township as well as of the county. The first field of wheat was sown in 1824 by Wm. and Alvin Cross. Benj. Woodruff kept the first hotel as well as grist-mill at the Grove. Robert Fleming built the first saw-mill in 1825, in what is now Ann Arbor. John Bryan constructed the first bridge over the Huron in 1827. Abel Millington constructed a saw-mill at Snow's Landing, or Rawsonville, in 1826. Lyman Graves erected a saw-mill on Paint creek in 1829.

Jonathan G. Morton, referring to his early settlement here, differs from the generally accepted opinion, that Major Woodruff was the first settler. If the first house-builder and first resident constitute a first settler the honor belongs to Woodruff and not to John Bryant. He says:—

"In the month of August, 1824, I came to Ypsilanti from Detroit. At that time there was no road between these places, and I traveled on foot by way of Flat Rock, following an Indian trail. The first settlement in the township of Ypsilanti was at a grove about a mile below the present city, and it was called Woodruff's Grove. When I arrived, there were six log houses at the Grove, occupied by the following persons: Benjamin Woodruff, Robert Stitt, Leonard Miller, Jason Cross, John Bryant and John Barney. Where the city now stands there were two shanties constructed of poles and occupied by George Hall and John Stewart.

"John Bryant and Daniel Cross were the first settlers at the Grove, and I think were the first in this county. The first white child born in the county was a son of John Bryant, and he being the first was named Alpha. The first death was a young Irishman from Ireland, who died in 1824, at the Grove. I brought some dry-goods to Detroit in 1824, and in the spring of 1825 transferred them to Ypsilanti. They were taken down the Detroit river to the Huron river, and poled up the Huron in a small boat. I think these were the first goods brought into this county, except such goods as were brought in to sell to the Indians when there was an Indian trading-post at this place. I opened a small store in company with Aretus Belden, who came to Ypsilanti with me. I had previously purchased two village lots for $5 each.

"The next day after my first arrival at Ypsilanti I came to Ann Arbor on foot, and followed an Indian trail. There were then only two log houses in Ann Arbor, situated near the creek that crosses Huron street. Walker Rumsey and John Allen occupied these houses. Oliver Whitmore and Mr. Maynard (father of Wm. S. and John W. Maynard) then lived at Mallett's creek, between Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti. About that time Deacon Carpenter, Mr. Parsons and Samuel McDowell settled there.

"The first party with dancing that occurred among the earliest settlers of Ypsilanti and Ann Arbor combined was at Mr. Rumsey's, in Ann Arbor. The young people of Ypsilanti, on or about the 1st of January, 1826, got up a sleigh-ride for the purpose of making Ann Arbor a visit. It was good sleighing, but there was only one sleigh in the vicinity, and this had been brought from the State of New York. The balance of the company went in 'jumpers' made of poles. This company, on arriving at Ann Arbor, stopped at the log house occupied by Mr. Rumsey, who then kept a public house. It was soon proposed to have a dance, if the necessary music could be obtained. It was soon ascertained that John Allen's father was the man for the occasion. He owned a violin, and could produce the music in good style. He was then an old man, with locks as white as snow. He was induced to come over to Rumsey's and play for this party. Among others, there were present at the party: William and Alvin Cross and their two sisters, Olive and Almira Gorton, Catherine and Hannah Rosencrans, Aretus Belden, Andrew McKinstry, Jonathan G. Morton, J. Whitmore and his sister Vcnus, and Mr. Dexter, afterward well known as Judge Dexter. The latter had been to Dexter and was on his way back to Detroit, and had stopped at Mr. Rumsey's for the night. A number of the settlers of Ann Arbor were present, and a good, jolly time was had. All felt that it was good for them to be there. Society was then a unit, and everybody was welcome. There were no fashionable cliques, and people were esteemed rather for their good deportment and industry, than for the value of their wardrobes and the number of flounces they wore. The dancing was up stairs; a long table, upon which was spread an excellent supper, monopolized most of the room below. A lasting impression was left on the guests from Ypsilanti, that Mrs. Rumsey was an excellent landlady and cook, and that Mr. Rumsey was a man of more than ordinary intelligence, and that he knew how to keep a hotel."

ORIGIN OF THE NAME.

The first part of the following paper was addressed to the writer and compiler of this historical sketch; but the name of him who deserves credit for the compilation was not given. He says:

"So much has been said, written and printed, on the mooted question of the origin of the name Ypsilanti, that I have thought I might help, with the aid of dates and letters before me, to confirm Mr. J. Morton's statement of recollections concerning it. He is undoubtedly correct as regards the early owners of the soil, these men having purchased of the earlier French claimants—Godfroy, Pepin, Le Chanbre and others. John Stewart and William Harwood were living here when we arrived in June, 1828. Mr. Morton also mentions Mr. John Bryan and family, as among the earliest settlers at the grove. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bryan were personal friends of mine, and were true, reliable persons. We found them here in 1828; were intimate during the years of their residence here, and have corresponded since their removal to Constantine, in this State, where Mrs. Bryan is still living. In a letter received not long since she alludes to the mistake of Mr. John Geddes in supposing the name of the town was given by 'Major' Woodruff. She says he had at that time no interest in the new village, his home and interest being a short distance below, at Woodruff's Grove; that he, with many others, as Mr. Morton states, wished the town to be called Waterville. At the preliminary meeting Mrs. Bryan says her husband always opposed it, and took sides with Judge A. B. Woodward, one of the first judges of the infant Territory, and who had the honor of giving his name to its first code of laws. This was called the 'Woodward Code' and was signed by Governor Hull, and the two judges, Augustus B. Woodward and Frederic Bates.

"His influence finally prevailed, to secure the name of Ypsilanti. Early in 1825, the same year, Congress passed an act giving power to the Governor and Council to divide the Territory into townships, to incorporate the same, and to provide for the election of officers, etc.

"The story of the Greek revolution had reached our shores as early as 1823, and the most harrowing accounts of sufferings and destitution of the Greeks reached this country. The inhabitants of the Eastern towns and cities were aroused; meetings were called, the women were enlisted in the work, and clothing and much provision gathered. A vessel was chartered, and Dr. Howe, of Boston, was sent in charge of the distribution in 1824. Foremost among the patriots of this time were the noble Princely family of Ypsilanti, of whom a few facts are here appended.

"Constantine, born in 1760, in Constantinople, conspired to free Greece, was pardoned, and died in Kiev, Russia. His sons, Alexander and Demetrius, distinguished themselves in the Russian service. In 1820 Alexander took the leadership to promote the independence of Greece; in 1821 he surrendered to Austria and remained a prisoner for six years. He was finally released in 1827 by the interposition of Nicholas, of Russia, but with health hopelessly destroyed. He died the following year. His younger brother, Demetrius Ypsilanti, joined the insurrection in 1821; took part in the siege of Tripolitza, which he carried by storm in October, but was repulsed at Nauplia in December. In June, 1822, he was chosen President of the National Assembly. Met with varying successes; but in July distinguished himself by audaciously holding the citadel of Argos with 300 men and three days' provisions, against a three days' siege, from an army of 30,000 men. The Greeks having exhausted their scanty supplies cautiously withdrew during the night and forced their way through the Turkish lines without losing a man. In 1823 he withdrew from public life, but in June, 1825, opposed, successfully Ibrahim Pacha, at the Mills of Lerni. In 1826 he opposed receiving a "protectorate" from England. In 1828 he was made commander of the troops in Eastern Greece. In April, 1832, he was chosen one of the seven commissioners, and held that office until his death. His sister, Maria Ypsilanti, with patriotism equal to his own, gave her dowry, worth $150,000, to aid her suffering country. With such associations as these may we not rejoice in the firmness of Judge Woodward in giving to our town the honored name of 'Ypsilanti,' instead of the unmeaning 'Waterville.'

"Aside from the sentiment connected with the name we may congratulate ourselves that its five consonants will always hinder it from being a popular title. While Pennsylvania rejoices in the possession of seven Danvilles, the whole United States has but one Ypsilanti.

"The following extract from an old Detroit Tribune shows the different ways Ypsilanti was spelled upon the envelopes of letters which passed through the division distributing postoffice during six months in the early settlement of Washtenaw county:

"We know of no better standpoint to witness and weigh the general stupidity of mankind than is possessed by the attachés of our larger postoffices. The specimens of chirographical, orthographical and syntactical blunders that daily tax and puzzle their ingenious faculties, are always marvelous and sometimes miraculous. Through the kindness of some of the gentlemen connected with our own postoffice, we are enabled to lay before our readers a number of more ludicrous and novel occurrences, that occasionally vary the monotonous routine of duty, which may prove amusing if not edifying.

“No one can appreciate the labor of making-up mails until he understands the great difficulty of determining from the envelopes the destination of the enclosure. The percentage of letters properly directed is small, and that of those decently written is still less. Foreign letters especially distort the names of American postoffices into the most unearthly shapes, so that only a perception, sharpened by long practice, could detect the semblance. As an example we give the following list of the various methods in which the word ‘Ypsilanti’ has been spelled upon the envelopes of letters passing through our postoffice during the past six months, taken down by Mr. Cargill, in charge of the Michigan Division of our distribution postoffice :

The following reminiscences of Mr. Ezra Lay are interesting and valuable: The first visit of that pioneer to Michigan was in the month of May, 1822. He landed in Detroit from the steamboat Henry Clay, and after spending a few hours in Detroit, came out on the Chicago road to Ypsilanti, and crossed the plains east of Ypsilanti, little thinking then that he should spend over forty years of his life a resident of those plains. From Ypsilanti he went to Geddes on the Huron river, and thence to Ann Arbor, by following the Indian trail near the river. After looking round Ann Arbor he started the next morning for Salem and stopped over night with an old acquaintance. Passing through what is now Northville, he found a small improvement and one house there. Most of the way from Ann Arbor to Pontiac was then a wilderness, with a few settlers just making a beginning in the woods. After leaving Pontiac he went to Detroit, and took the steamboat Superior for Buffalo.

THE GREAT NURSERY.

In the month of May, 1833, he returned to Michigan, for the purpose of establishing a nursery; and after traveling through Washtenaw, Jackson, Calhoun, Kalamazoo, and St. Joseph counties, arrived at Ypsilanti, and located a place for a nursery on the farm where he resides, and returned to Western New York. In the fall of 1833 his brother, Z. K. Lay, and himself, came again to Michigan, and brought with them about 25,000 cultivated fruit trees, consisting of apples, pears, peaches, plums, cherries, grapes, etc., together with a large variety of shrubbery. It was the first nursery of cultivated fruits of all kinds, started in Michigan. In the fall of 1834 was built a small green-house which was the first green-house in the Territory that there is any knowledge of. For the first few years of residence in Michigan, the roads a part of the way from Ypsilanti to Detroit were almost impassable. Two and a half days have been spent in making that journey with a team, and only half a common wagon load at that. The wolves used to howl around the plains the first few years, and one night attacked a calf on what is now a part of the Lay farm, leaving the calf minus a tail.

METEORS AND WOLVES, IN 1833.

In November, 1833, the celebrated meteoric shower (or falling stars, as commonly called) occurred, and a man living just east of the Ypsilanti plains happened to be up and saw it. He was very much frightened, thinking the end of the world was near at hand. It being a bright, moonlight night he started for the tavern about a mile from where he lived, and when he got about half way there he met a drove of wolves in the road. They commenced howling and he was more frightened than ever. The noise he and the wolves made aroused those in the neighborhood, and they afterwards declared they could not tell which made the most noise, he or the wolves. But the wolves gave him the disputed territory, and he got to the tavern where, it is presumed, he felt more safe.

THE WOLF HUNT.

In the winter of 1835 the citizens of Ypsilanti, together with those of the town of Ypsilanti, and a part of Superior, got up a wolf hunt in the town of Van Buren, in Wayne county, and after surrounding a piece of land southeast of what is now Dentonville succeeded in killing some seven or eight deer but no wolves. Speaking of this hunt Benjamin Emerick states that the tract of country surrounded was much more extensive than the description of it by Mr. Lay would lead one to suppose.

ORGANIC.

Immediately after the settlement of Woodruff's Grove, when the people sought for municipal organization, Major Woodruff was appointed the first Justice of the Peace, the first Sheriff and the first Postmaster in the county. The Territorial Governor appointed other officers, and ultimately approved a bill attaching the district to Wayne county for judicial purposes. Abel Millington was the first Supervisor, receiving the entire vote of the township, which, in 1827, numbered 59. Subsequently, under authority of the Legislative act of 1827, the four eastern townships were detached from Ann Arbor township, and organized under the name of Ypsilanti. The first township meeting was held at McKinstry's Hotel, where the Worden Block now stands. Dr. Abel Millington was elected Supervisor with Asa Reading, Township Clerk. The following is a copy of the act:

That all that part of the county of Washtenaw included in the surveyed townships 1, 2, 3 and 4 south, in range 7 east of the base line, shall be a township by the name of Ypsilanti, and the first township meeting be held at the house of Andrew McKinstry in said township.

That all the remaining part of township number 4 south, of range 6 east, and sections numbered 35, 36, 25, 26, 23, 24, and the south half of sections 13 and 14, in township 3 south, in range 6 east, be set off and form a part of the township of Ypsilanti: Provided, That nothing in this act shall affect the assessment and collection of taxes heretofore assessed in the township of Ann Arbor.

Ypsilanti township, as constituted by this act, embraced the district now forming the four eastern townships of the county, viz.: Salem, Superior, Ypsilanti and Augusta.

YPSILANTI CITY.

In the completion of this sketch of Ypsilanti, the valuable papers prepared by Mrs. Alvin Cross, Mrs. Finlay, Jonathan Morton, John Geddes, Alvin Cross and S. M. Cutcheon have been made the basis of information. The members of the Pioneer Committee, Messrs. Chauncey Joslin, Benjamin Thompson and Wm. Watling, have made very important additions to all that had been already written. Dr. F. K. Rexford, whose intimate association with the village of former days, as well as with the city of the present, suggested many items for the history. F. P. Bogardus, in his precise paper on the banking houses of the past and present, contributed to render the labors of the writer light in this connection. To Frank Joslin, City Clerk, is due, in a great measure, the accuracy of the list of village and city officers. W. C. Hawkins, Mrs. Perry and Benjamin Emerick have given the information on which the history of the old and new hotels is based. In a word, every effort has been made to collect material for a full history of the city. The old settlers displayed a desire to co-operate with the compiler, and it is hoped that the result of their valuable suggestions and the wish of the writer to be accurate and impartial, will render this historical sketch worthy of the people of whom it has been written, and fully satisfactory to the people of the county, to whom the volume is dedicated.

A DESCRIPTION.

The city is beautifully situated on the Huron, which river enters it at the northwestern angle, flows southeast, and forms an expansion west of the northern limits of what now is known as the east side of the city. The expansion may be said to extend as far south as Mill street or Forest avenue bridge, where the river returns to its original channel, and takes a southerly course. At the foot of Follett street it enters on a southeastern course, and again between that point and Independence island, forms a semi-circular curve; from the head of this island to Race street bridge a complete curve is made, so that both half circles, the one beginning at North street on the east bank, the other ending at Race street on the west bank, form an S. From the latter points it flows through its tortuous channel in a southeasterly direction to the city limits. The river with its expansions and dams, assumes at this point an appearance peculiarly agreeable. Here is a great industry, there a milldam or a race, there a bridge, there a residence, on each bank half a city; on every side evidences of comparative prosperity. Along the west bank are the dwellings of D. L. Quirk, L. A. Barnes, G. W. Lee, John Starkweather, Cornelius Cornwell, Wm. B. Clark, Wm. Wortley, Mrs. McAndrews, Chauncey Joslin and S. Wortley; on the east bank, the dwellings of Pluto Ferrier, Wells Burt, Charles Seigmond, A. H. Smith, Charles Ferrier and Mrs. C. P.

Worden; while rising gradually higher and higher are seen the stately mansions of modern times, the school building of the city, the churches, the domed Opera House, and the hundred modern buildings dedicated to the strength and health of the country,—trade.

A village which boasted of 121 dwelling-houses in 1837 now counts them by hundreds, if not by thousands. Then shaded streets, sidewalks, splendid buildings, did not exist; now they are present, rendering Ypsilanti a little city of beauty, a town for which nature and artifice labored. The streets are comparatively regular. With the exception of Congress, from Adams to the river, a few blocks on Washington, and two on Huron streets, devoted to commercial business, the west side is given up to private residences, beautiful gardens, green parterres, and shaded streets.

Long years before Surveyor Brookfield platted the village, the rude log house of the French traders stood beside the Pottawatomie trail, and thus was the first house erected here. From that rude beginning how has the place advanced! The logs of the old buildings were removed before many of the old settlers came to seek the former home of Godfroy. Later, the visitor of olden times came to view the den of the counterfeiter, or, perhaps, hunt the deer on the untenanted lands beyond the river; but the den was turned into an ordinary sand hole, and the deer had fled to districts yet unapproached by the American pioneer. Every remnant of the Indian's and Frenchman's occupation died out within a brief space of time after the pioneers arrived, the face of the valley was changed, the wigwam and the traders' hut gave place to the settlers' log cabin or the merchants' frame store, and those, in time, gave way before progress, until now a city looms up over the ruins of primitiveness.

GODFROY'S TRADING POST.

Reference after reference has been made to the Godfroy trading post; many naming its exact location, and as many reaching wide of the mark. To settle this point forever, Jonathan G. Morton and others have been consulted. Mr. Morton, whose connection with the early mercantile interest of the Godfroy settlement renders him an authority on such a question, states emphatically that during the year 1825 one McCloskey, a son-in-law of Godfroy's, with a band of 20 fellow trappers called at his store, situate at the north-west corner of Huron and Pearl streets. Before leaving, McCloskey pointed out the ruins of the old trading post; the entire party visited it and pointed out to Mr. Morton the charred logs, which formed the walls of the cellar. During their later visits, the old trappers of the Huron never failed to make a pilgrimage to that cellar. He is also inclined to believe that the trading post was burned between the years 1812 and 1815, and, further, that the logs and fragments of bark roof as seen by Mrs. Cross and others formed the remains of a temporary trading house, built by Godfroy and company about the fall of 1815, after the war. This house stood directly north of the Arcade Block.

THE STORY OF EARLY SETTLEMENTS.

Ypsilanti city was founded by John Stewart in the summer and fall of 1824, on the north French claim. On the first of June, 1825, the Detroit and Chicago road was surveyed by the United States surveyors under Orange Risdon, through what is now Ypsilanti city. The line of said road was then made the base of Ypsilanti. When it struck the section line between sections 9 and 10, it took a due west course until about one-fourth mile west of the Huron river, where it took a southwestern direction. Shortly after the laying out of this road, John Stewart, Augustus Brevoort Woodward and Wm. W. Harwood made a plat of the village—Stewart and Woodward on the west, and Harwood on the east. Mr. Harwood had previously secured the property of Eli Kellogg in 1824. Each of the proprietors had a name for the village. Judge Woodward's choice prevailed, and so the place was called Ypsilanti, after the Greek general. Woodward at this time owned the Godfroy claim 690, containing 612 acres. The line of the Chicago road struck the northeast corner of Woodward's land, where it crossed the river; but as the line of the French claim runs 17° south of west, it soon struck Stewart's south line. Woodward resided at Detroit during this time; Stewart and Harwood were residents of the proposed village. The former was a native of Seneca Co., N. Y. He sold out in 1831 to Jason Cross, and traveled westward. Judge Woodward disposed of his lands to Judge Larzelere, went to Florida and died. Wm. W. Harwood remained for some years, sold out to John Gilbert, moved into Pittsfield, and there closed his career.

On the right bank of the Huron and north of the French claims, on section 5, Josiah Rosencranz bought from the general Government 114 acres, May 10, 1825. Hiram W. Johns purchased 66 acres, north of Harwood's location, on section 9, this being the southeast fractional quarter of section 4. Henry Burlingame bought a quarter section May 23, 1825. The northeast quarter of section 4, containing 160 acres, was purchased by Ezra Mead, April 25, 1825; while Major Woodruff bought a tract of 37 acres adjoining Harwood's land in section 16. In September, 1825, David De Forest Ely and Jonathan T. Ely established a store at "Woodruff's Grove." Early in 1826 they transferred their business to Ypsilanti, and in August of that year moved to Ann Arbor, and there built a two-story frame house in 1827, on the corner of Main and Ann streets. As merchants they were unsuccessful, and left the State early in 1829.

The first store-keepers were Jonathan G. Morton and Erastus Belden, who established their houses here in June, 1825, and also carried on the business of blacksmithing at Ypsilanti. Mr. Morton's day-book, as well as other books, are in his possession still.

Moses Clark, a hard-shell Baptist preacher, is said to have preached the first sermon in Ypsilanti in the summer of 1825.

John Stewart, jr., died near Battle Creek, Jan. 29, 1881. He is said to have been at one time part owner of the land on which Ypsilanti now stands, and to have laid out the original village. He deeded the city a park, as it is said, on condition that it be used or no other purpose. However, it was otherwise used, and a report has gained credence that his heirs are instituting a suit to recover the property. Mr. Stewart has 21 brothers and sisters, and lived on the farm where he died for nearly 40 years.

VILLAGE ORGANIZATION.

As early as 1829 the township of Ypsilanti was organized, under authority of a Legislative enactment approved Oct 1, 1829. Three years later the villagers of Ypsilanti assembled within the shop of John Bryan, to carry out the provisions of another Legislative enactment, which provided for the organization of their village. This meeting was held Sept. 3, 1832, and resulted in the return of John Gilbert as Village President; E. M. Skinner, Village Recorder; Ario Pardee, Village Treasurer; and Abel Millington, Mark Morris, Thomas R. Brown, James Vanderbilt, Walter B. Hewitt, Village Trustees. The transactions of this corporation, and indeed of all its successors, were of a most simple character. Committees were appointed to supervise the various improvements resolved upon by the council. These committees are said to have faithfully performed their duties, the village recorder issued orders to the village creditors, the treasurer accepted and paid such orders, and here the labors of this little municipal organization ceased. For years the people were satisfied with the order of affairs; but, at length, discontent entered the village, and those inhabitants of the east side sought a divorce from their Western friends, because it appeared to them that much of the tax collected on the east side was expended in improving the west side. As recently as the year preceding the incorporation of Ypsilanti as a city, the State Legislature passed an act enabling the township treasurer to collect the village taxes, thus abolishing the office of treasurer in the village. The act of incorporation of 1858 remedied all this disaffection; a city was organized under a mayor and 10 aldermen. To this assembly was applied the motto, "Plus sages que les sages," because its administration was characterized by wisdom, and its meetings by propriety.

Some time prior to the granting of a city charter, that portion of the old village lying east of the Huron was organized as the village of East Ypsilanti, with its own president and trustees; however, when the proposition to unite under a city government was made, the people of the east village were among its strongest supporters.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES OF A CITY.

Ypsilanti contains within its limits many beautiful gardens. The improved lands of the city comprise 398 acres; the unimproved 120, aggregating 418 acres. However strange it may appear to the people of the future, it has to be recorded, that within the city proper no less than 18 acres were given to wheat culture in 1876, and 60 acres in 1880. The total product of the former year is set down at 490 bushels, or a fraction over 27 bushels per acre. The corn-fields of the city covered 38 acres in 1879, and the oat-fields 24. In the former case 2,470 bushels were reported, and in the latter 590 bushels. The kitchen gardens given up to potato culture occupied seven acres, and produced 445 bushels. The grass lands of the city covered 34 acres and yielded 35 tons of hay. The competing city of Ann Arbor exhibits even more of this rus-in-urbe appearance; but the period is fast approaching when these fields will be hidden beneath the crowded buildings of industrial centers. Let the motto of this city be quod petis hic est. Its advance rests with its citizens now. Nature has acted her part.

CLOSING YEARS OF THE VILLAGE COUNCIL.

The common council of the village of Ypsilanti convened at the office of D. B. Dodge, Oct. 12, 1834, when Delos Showerman took his seat as President of the common council, with M. A. Parks as Recorder. On July 9, 1855, at a meeting held at Hewitt's Hall, there were elected D. Showerman as President, and M. A. Parks as Recorder. In 1856 Arden H. Ballard was elected President, with M. A. Parks Recorder. The election of 1857 resulted in the return of Messrs. Ballard and Parks to fill the positions held by them the previous year.

A charter, approved Feb 4, 1858, conferred upon the village all the privileges of a city. This was revised Feb. 15, 1859, wholly revised in 1869, and again, in 1877, subjected to a total revision.

FIRST MEETING OF ALDERMEN.

The old village council convened for the last time in 1858, at the call of the last Village President, A. H. Ballard, who presented Hon. Chauncey Joslin, the first Mayor, and the Aldermen elect to the people. Mr. Joslin having taken the chair, the roll of aldermen was called: James M. Chidister and Isaac Crane, 1st ward; Parmenie Davis and Philip Eddington, 5th ward; Philo Ferrier and Benj. Follett, 4th ward; David Edwards and Robert Lambie, 2d ward; Charles Stuck and A. S. Welch, 3d ward, answered their names. The city elected two aldermen for each ward and the entire number was present, with John McCreedy, Clerk Martello Warner, City Marshal; Charles H. Tisdale, City Auditor Thomas Ninde, City Attorney; Dr. C. F. Ashley, Health Physician; Benj. Clark, Treasurer.

This city council ordered that a city hall be erected, and in 1859 the present building near Cross street bridge was dedicated as the council chamber of the city.

The first meeting of the city council was opened by prayer, and the inaugural ceremony carried on in strict accord with the forms laid down for such occasions. Since that period the city has been beautified in every particular. Advances have been made of which the people of 40 years ago could scarcely dream, and still progress is noticeable. The people possess a justifiable ambition to excel as citizens; they take a just pride in their city; they can look back over the past and claim for themselves all the credit which pertains to an industrious and intelligent community.

The following is a list of citizens who filled the offices of Mayor, City Clerk and Treasurer since 1858:

Aldermen:—First ward, George W. Kishlar, Wm. Robbins; Second ward, Reuben D. Roys, Donald G. Fraser; Third ward, Martin Cremer, Bernard Kirk; Fourth ward, F. J. Swaine, Joseph Follmor; Fifth ward, John Terns, Wm. H. Deubel.

THE FIRST SOCIETY

organized in Ypsilanti was known as the "Temperance Society of Ypsilanti," the nucleus of which was formed Dec. 18. 1829.

The society proscribed only ardent spirits. At that time Messrs. E. M. Skinner, Dr. Hays, Darling, and 30 villagers enlisted themselves in the cause of abstinence, established a society and did much to save the people from the drunkard's grave. Rev. I. M. Wead states that notwithstanding the efforts put forth by this little band of workers in the cause of humanity, "intemperance, Sabbath-breaking and profanity were awfully prevalent; the moral and religious influences of the place were few and feeble." How agreeably surprising is the change! During a stay of some months in the district, one is forced to conclude that the days of evil have passed away, that intemperance and its accompanying vices are unknown here.

A LEAF FROM MARK NORRIS' NOTE BOOK.

July 9, 1827.—Left Buffalo on steamer Marie Antoinette, Captain Whittaker, for Detroit, which was reached July 16, only a seven days' passage.

July 18.—After waiting a day for the stage, I started on foot for the interior. Walked as far as Springwells, when I took a due west course of about six miles. Crossed the Rouge, a sluggish, dark, muddy stream, with plenty of rich land on either side, and rich in fever and ague too, I should judge. Traveled about 24 miles. Stopped all night at Andrew's Tavern on Togus Plains.

Ypsilanti, Friday 28.—Have spent most of the day in viewing the village. Nature and art have combined to make it a place of business. It is situated on the Huron, nine miles below Ann Arbor, and four miles above the landing, where boats of twenty-tons burden arrive from the lake to unload. Land is already valued very high.

Saturday, 29.—To-day bought two village lots (half an acre) for which I paid $100, and returned again to Ann Arbor.

Sunday, 30.—Spent most of this forenoon in searching for a man lost in the woods, and supposed to be dead. Made no discovery. There is no church and no preaching here to-day. It seems to be a place for lounging and gossip. In the afternoon attended a wedding and saw Mr. Highy united in "hymen's gentle bonds" to Miss Ann Gorham.

Monday, July 31.—Went with Dr. W. to Saline. Find good land, but somewhat broken, and I believe sickly. Returned by way of Ypsilanti, a fine country of land between the Saline and Huron.

Tuesday, Ypsilanti.—This day I have been viewing the lands in the vicinity of this village. Concluded to purchase within a short distance of the village. The lands on the Chicago road, now being built from Detroit west, are mostly taken up by speculators, and also on the river.

Aug. 5.—Staid in this village last night. This morning took a deed for the farm purchased yesterday and returned to Ann Arbor.

Aug. 6.—Left Washtenaw for Detroit. Traveled to the Rouge within six miles of Detroit. Retired to bed very much fatigued, but the mosquitoes would not let me sleep. They attacked on larboard and starboard, and raked me from "stem to stern." I fought them until my patience, if not my ammunition, was exhausted, when I arose and prepared for flight. Started about 12 o'clock for Detroit. The first three miles I met with no incident worth mentioning, after which I was assailed by an army of dogs at every house. Arriving at Detroit I went to the inn, where, after receiving a long lecture from the landlord for being out at that time of night, I was permitted to go to bed again, and slept until a late hour the following morning. Men, who are not pioneers, are allowed in hotels now minus a landlord's lecture.

UNION SCHOOL
YPSILANTI.

THE COMING OF THE BRYANS.

The Chicago road was first cut through to Ypsilanti, in advance of the first ox-team, by John Bryan, who arrived in the valley of the Huron, at Woodruff's, on the night of Oct. 23, 1823. Feb. 27, 1824, Mrs. Bryan gave birth to a son, the first white child born in Washtenaw. Allen and Rumsey, two well known names in connection with the St. Joseph road, called the infant Alpha Washtenaw Bryan. Mrs. Bryan and her son were present at the semi-centennial meeting July 4, 1874. The old man who first entered "Woodruff's Grove" via the new highway died at Constantine in 1871.

CORN MILLS.

For a period extending over two years, corn bread was generally used, and the meal had to be prepared in a mill, which Mrs. Bryan graphically describes. She says, in a letter written in 1853, 30 years after her arrival on the bank of the Huron:

"It was amusing, the first fall and winter, to hear the corn mills in operation every morning before daylight. There were two in the settlement. They were made as follows: A hole was burned in the top of a sound oak stump; after scraping this clean from coal, a stick about six feet long and eight inches in diameter was rounded at one end, and suspended by a spring pole directly over the stump; a hole was bored through this pestle for handles, and the mill was done. A man would pound a peck of corn in half an hour, so that half of it would pass through a sieve."

THE RIVER KINGS.

Opposite Woodruff's Grove, on the west side of the Huron, was the settlement of the "River Kings." Within a brief period after Major Woodruff's settlement, the two Hall families arrived, and, locating on the opposite bank, were not slow to style themselves "Kings of the River." It is said that each member of those families was peculiarly wild, if not savage. Their language was a never-ending blasphemy; their presence had an effect similar to that of a band of Sioux warriors. Those white wild men did not reign over the district very long. As the settlers poured in, the Halls were compelled to check their savage manners, and being deprived of their former license to stalk over the lands, with insult on their lips for every one, they sought new and more congenial homes. There were others here almost as bad, among whom were the Moores and Trotters. Their great boast was that they could "whip any man in the country."

NAVIGATION OF THE HURON.

On Aug. 13, 1833, a meeting was held in the village, to consider the advisability of building a boat for its navigation. A resolution was passed to this effect: "That we proceed to build a boat this fall, provided we can raise money sufficient." A committee was formed, comprising Elijah Grant, Salmon Champion, and Mark Norris, who asked for subscriptions to further this project. Elijah Grant, Isaac Otis, Henry Adams, Henry Kimmel, Joseph Brown, W. B. Hewitt, Abel Millington, A. Champion, Wm. R. Post, James Forsyth, Abner A. Wells, Edmunds and Godard, A. Clark, Peter Miller, Abram Voorhees, Jason Cross, jr., Wm. Cross, John Gilbert, Matthew Woods, Madison Cook, Jacob Emerick, Richard E. Morse and Mark Norris, then citizens, subscribed $240. This boat was to be propelled by "setting poles," and built in the yards of Hiram and James Ashe, at a cost of $1,334.50. The proprietors called her Enterprise. She was a long, low-keeled vessel, ribbed throughout, and lathed with the best oak, with bow and stern decked, and a treadmill walk for the polers along each gunwale. She made several trips between Ypsilanti and Detroit, with freight equivalent to 150 barrels in bulk. The Enterprise proved unprofitable to her owners. L. Pratt, an officer of this vessel, wrote from Detroit, to the effect that he had goods on board for S. Champion, jr., and Mark Norris; two or three tons for Truxes, at 18 cents per hundred; a ton for Smooth (Flat) Rock, at 25 cents per hundred; that he was out of potatoes, and borrowed one dollar from Throop and Woolsey; that he had hired two hands, one at $14 per month, and one at six shillings per day, and that he hoped to get back to Johnson's, at Flat Rock, about May 23, 1834. Under date July 8, 1834, T. E. Schoolar, of Mongoquanong, wrote to the company at Ypsilanti, that he would wish to charter the Enterprise, if delivered over to him at the mouth of the Huron, together with a sail, mast and good boatman. This letter was addressed to the postmaster, with a request that the answer should be "franked" to him. Mr. Schoolar's letter received very little attention; but a brick-maker at Dearborn chartered her for the brick-carrying trade, between the village of the Arsenal and Detroit. In December, 1834, the Enterprise was wrecked, and the shareholders forgot her in their chase after new business enterprises.

Previously, and as early as 1823, flat-boats of 20-tons burden came up the river as far as Rawsonville, then called the "Landing." The "mariners" were men of rough but comparatively honest parts, and when their leisure hours gave them an opportunity of visiting Ypsilanti, they made their presence known by boisterous laughing and swearing, or a call for more whisky for the boys.

An act to create slack-water navigation on the Huron was passed in 1839. J. M. Edmunds and Gen. Van Fossen employed Samuel Pettibone to make a survey of the river, but after an expenditure of over $1,000 the enterprise was abandoned.

THE FAST MAIL.

The days of the stage have passed away, but its memory lives on. Who is he, among the old settlers of this Western village, who has not experienced the delight which burned within him when for the first time he learned that the Western mail would reach Ypsilanti within 15 hours after its dispatch from Detroit? Few of them forget the early enterprise of the villagers, when one dollar bonus was offered to the drivers every time the journey would be made within 15 hours. Yes, that offer was made, and faithfully carried out in the many instances where the drivers earned it. Not always could the three drivers, each with a fresh relay of horses, accomplish that trip within the specified time. The first Detroit and Chicago road was no easy one to travel.

INDIAN VISITORS.

The Indians may be said to have entered on their western movement in 1818-'20, immediately after the United States survey of this district. However, bands of red men visited Ypsilanti at intervals to scan the works of the white men, or see their old hunting grounds transformed into cultivated fields. In July, 1826, while the population were celebrating the glorious anniversary of Independence, a Sioux band numbering 500 arrived in Ypsilanti. They were en route from Chicago to Malden in Canada, to receive the blood money earned from the English Government during the war of 1812. The savages remained in the village for six days, during which time the settlers supplied food to the lazy rascals. The great war-dance of the Sioux nation was actually held near the present location of the Hawkins House. It was attended with all the pomp that savage magnificence could bestow.

THE VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.

During the year 1838 many malcontents paid visits to the settlement, committed many robberies and depredations, and created a panic of no usual character. To remedy such an evil, the citizens assembled at the house of Abiel Hawkins, considered well a proposition to organize a committee of defense, and at a second meeting held at Mr. Hawkin's house, Dec. 15, 1838, decided to form a society known as "The Ypsilanti Vigilance Committee." The official roll of this organization shows that James L. Gillis was President; James M. Edmunds, Secretary, and M. V. Hall, Treasurer. The executive or directory comprised such citizens as Chauncey Joslin, Mark Norris, Abraham Sage, Marcus Lane, D. C. McKinstry, Arden H. Ballard and Walter B. Hewitt. This Central Committee had the direction of the various orders of the society, the meetings were of a most secret character, and the method employed for bringing the guilty to justice at once practical and thorough. This fact will be more apparent when it is considered that before the expiration of the year 1839, 112 evil-doers were convicted, $10,000 worth of stolen property recovered, and a number of terrible characters banished the district.

INDEPENDENCE DAY, 1824.

The celebration of Independence Day has been the grand occasion of the citizens from the earliest American pioneer period to the present time. It is said that the first celebration of the day in Ypsilanti was that held July 4, 1824, in a grove which then occupied the site of Mr. Joslin's present residence. The good citizens assembled on that occasion did not exceed 25 in number. Elias M. Skinner took the role of orator, and, with that dignity, a position on the limb of the grove's monarch oak. In 1851 that tree, from the arm of which Mr. Skinner delivered the oration, reached the last stages of decay. The fact was noticed by many of the pioneers, spoken of with peculiar sorrow, and the cause of its decay ascribed to Skinner's oration, which "took all the sap out of it."

JULY 4, 1845.

In 1845, the Fourth was commemorated on the little island between Congress street bridge and the lower paper-mills. J. M. B. Sill delivered the oration, and Rev. H. P. Powers named the islet Independence Isle. Lyman D. Norris, now of Grand Rapids, said of this first celebration, by the people of Washtenaw, of Independence Day, that in 1824 all the then inhabitants of Washtenaw, variously given from 14 to 29, assembled near Woodruff's Grove, where on the 4th day of June, the year previous, the first white woman—Mrs. Woodruff—had come with her husband, the redoubtable Major, to make a pioneer's home in the West. At the first celebration Judge Robert Fleming presided. The field piece was a bored-out, iron-bound, oak log, and the distinguished guest the Indian Chief Blue Jacket. It was doubtless a day of jollity, with song, speech and dance. It was nearer the great day of 1876, and patriotism was higher than it is even now, although the people may not have had a higher sense of the honorable achievements of those men than we now have. But the press had not scattered its sheets like the autumnal leaves in the vales of Vallambrosa, and the people listened more patiently to speeches, and were happier in their frequent gatherings. Doubtless whisky was present that day. Then people waited not to inquire whether it was food or poison, whether it was assimilated with the blood or was only a stimulant; it was with them a necessity, or at least a "good spirit" for curing rattlesnake bites, alleviating fever and ague, and in families not possessing a cow, a barrel per week was considered a small allowance, as all were hospitable, and he was the churl in those days who did not put the bottle to his neighbor's lips.

THE WILD-CAT MANUFACTORY.

Prior to the advent of the American pioneers to Ypsilanti, a band of counterfeiters made "Godfroy's, on the Pottawatomie trail," a rendezvous. It appears that in 1835 Isaac Kimball and Harry Gilbert were engaged in carting clay from the face of the eastern plateau, for the purpose of grading the lot on which Major Gilbert's house was then erected. Those men had not progressed far with their labors when their spades struck timber. They were not a little surprised, and growing curious, determined to explore this new formation. In the course of their research they discovered a net-work of new timbers; removing one plank they beheld a cave; descending they found a room ten feet square and eight feet in height; and finally a furnace, half a metal shell filled with a peculiar greasy substance, in which was a wick partly consumed. Presently Kimball and Gilbert discovered the exit, a burrow, 100 feet in length, running south into the ravine, and having its outlet in a dense shrubbery near Dr. Davis' present residence. This den of infamy had its subterranean location 20 rods south of Congress street, on the slope of the eastern plateau, and was doubtless the hiding place of a gang of counterfeiters, if not of more terrible enemies of human happiness. The date of its construction cannot be even guessed at. Its builders have passed away, leaving that home of their secret works to relate the story of their infamy and their fall. There is a strange fact in this connection, and that is that great numbers of the pioneers fail to remember anything regarding such a subterranean establishment; however, they acknowledge the existence of a counterfeiters' workshop, south by east of Shad's Hotel.

THE FIRE OF 1851.

On the last Thursday of March, 1851, the fire destroyed the entire line of buildings on the north side of Congress, from Washington to the river, including Joseph Stockdale's dwelling-house, wagon shop, blacksmith shop and stable on Huron street; the engine house; R. D. Brower's store, corner Washington and Congress; C. Millington's dwelling-house; the house, shop, warehouse and lumber yard of G. Davis; Bresler's fur store; Worden's tin-shop; the "nunnery," owned by Wm. R. Post; shop and hearse shed, owned by G. Davis; the Hewitt store; C. Millington's store; A. Craddock's grocery; M. A. Park's jewelry store; J. W. Van Cleve's brick store; A. Voorhees' brick store; C. Millington's new store; W. B. Hewitt's two stores; E. Yost's grocery. The loss on buildings, etc., is credited as follows: E. Yost, $600; E. Bresler, $3,500; P. W. Sage, $450; G. Davis, $3,000; J. Stockdale, $1,400; A. Guest, $600; Lespronce & Smith, $300; S. H. Dimmick, $1,800; Mrs. Ovracker, $200; E. Samson, $3,500; Loveridge & Camp, $2,000; J. M. Brown, $2,100; G. M. Osborne, $2,800; J. Cross, $200; C. C. Chase, $1,200; A. Worden Bros., $800; M. A. Parks, $400. There were many others whose losses were of a trivial character.

THE VICTIM OF THE UXORICIDE.

Feb. 28, 1860, Mrs. Lucy Washburne filed a bill of divorce against her husband, charging him with personal violence, drunkenness and adultery. While the suit was still pending, Washburne attempted to persuade the woman to quash the bill; but she, persisting in her determination, was murdered by him in the most brutal manner, on the afternoon of May 21, 1860. Washburne was a butcher, cruel and inhuman in his dealings with the lower animals; rude and cowardly in his intercourse with men; a low dastard with women. The government of the State, by its act abolishing capital punishment, saved the uxoricide from the hangman, leaving him to carry the terrible burden of a murderer's conscience, and bear the undisguised scorn of men.

June 12, 1860, informations were filed against Geo. W. Washburne, charging him with the murder of his wife, in May. The murder was committed in a house on the southeast corner of North and River streets, latterly occupied by Hiram Day. The prisoner was brought before Justice Gardner, of Ann Arbor, to be examined; but this examination was waived, and he was held to appear before the judge of circuit. The session of this court opened the following week, before Judge Edwin Lawrence. Chauncey Joslin and the prosecuting attorney represented the People, and Olney Hawkins the prisoner. The trial lasted two days. His two children, boys of six and eight years of age, were the witnesses for the prosecution, and on their testimony, chiefly, the unfortunate uxoricide was convicted. The jury rendered a verdict of "guilty of manslaughter" June 21, 1860, and Judge Lawrence sentenced him to a 12 years' term in the State's prison. The bill of exceptions was taken to the Supreme Court July 30. Jan. 31, 1861, this bill was allowed by the circuit judge. In April, 1862, the case was heard in the Supreme Court, and the judgment of the lower court affirmed. The counsel above mentioned appeared for and against the uxoricide in the higher court. This was a most diabolical murder; Washburne excelled the Moor of Venice in his brutality, as after smothering his wife with the pillow he drew her forth to the head of the cellar stairway, and cast the lifeless body down, so that it would appear her death was due to accident. The guilty wretch served a term of years, enjoying the hospitality of the State immensely, and actually returned to the scene of his crime unabashed; made a short stay among a people who loathed him, and leaving, went into the world who knew him not. Though other murderers have been arrested here, he was the only one who committed such a heinous deed within this township. He was the first to stain a record otherwise fair, with the story of a wife-killer, and, therefore, deserved the light punishment inflicted by justice, together with the terrible one which the unquiet conscience entails. It is a subject for inquiry how some women are so woefully ignorant as to link their fortunes with such barbarous characters. That they will continue to make such mistakes is not contradicted. Monsters, such as Washburne was, will appear upon the stage of life from time to time, so that in the near future some provision must be made to remove the unoffending and defenseless women from the dangerous neighborhood of that terrible scourge—an uneducated or drunken husband.

LIGHT AND SHADE OF EARLY TIMES.

Man must not be ever in a serious mood. In his proper element he cannot be, for good health depends in a great measure on an occasional laugh and moments of gaiety snatched from time. The ancient people so believed, the early settlers of this city practiced the salutary merriments of life, and often their peals of hearty laughter rang through the surrounding forests, floated in echo down the river and died away in the distance. The thoughtful Indian, having heard, wondered at its boisterousness and reality. Such a laugh and such a time cannot be mimicked now; they have almost faded from memory. This is the age of money, when such pleasures are forgotten in the chase after gold. Few remain of the true old men who brought joy with them in their travels, and reveled in simple gaiety in their homes. Let us review a few of their leisure hours.

THE MOOT COURT,

better known in Southern counties as the "Surrogate Court," was a creation of the olden times. No citizen was without its jurisdiction, the habeas corpus was entirely ignored, and the slightest suspicion of crime, however trivial, suggested the arrest of the Ypsilantian. The docket of this court is a record of convictions and fines. It was a terrible tribunal, and though the punishment was not corporally severe, the seriousness and eloquence of prosecuting counsel, and the consciousness of having to pay a penalty often subjected citizens to much trouble. After a few terms of this court, the victimized citizens conspired to bring the principal organizers to some little trouble. They watched one of the leading lawyers for days, and actually caught him in the act of making sundry grimaces, and indulging in many comical gestures, with a view of satisfying himself that he did not care a "Jack Robinson" for Justice Van Cleve, then out of the village at Clairmont, one mile away, on what is now known as Washington street, south. A charge was immediately preferred against this able lawyer. His conviction for ajidewidamowin on the first count of the indictment, and for contempt of court on the third count, followed soon after. That lawyer mended his evil ways, and soon became one of the most popular and able advocates in the State.

THE LOST BOY.

In the summer of 1833, the son of one of the early settlers, Lyman D. Norris, wandered from his home in search of berries, and lost himself in the recesses of the land. Not returning at that time when hunger generally prompts a boy to seek his home, the parents were much troubled, yet waited a few minutes before consulting the neighbors. These were minutes of terrible anxiety. At length the villagers learned of the little fellow's loss; they speculated as to his whereabouts: indeed, one old lady wondered whether it was a massasauga or bear which eloped with him. Many good citizens credited the milldam with his reception; others stated definitely that that temperance lecturer from Detroit was a kidnapper. The wildest theories prevailed. Every one was bewildered—not every one—Mr. Champion, one of the early store-keepers of the village kept actually below zero on the subject. His coolness and reticence were so perplexing that many men who returned from a fruitless search, asked him if he knew where the boy was. "What boy? A boy lost, and you come to ask Champion! Did you search for him?" "We did! we did!" replied a chorus of voices. "Where?" "Down by the mills, in the milldam and along the river, round the town, down as far as the corner, and every place; but we cannot find him." "Well," said Champion, "I guess you're the ——— set of fools ever came in here. Remember this; and if you want to find the boy, go where no ——— boy ever went before, where no ——— boy ever thought of going, and there you'll find the little cuss."

That crowd of searchers went forth to find the cause of all this trouble, acted precisely on Champion's directions, and found the youth sleeping beneath the kettles in the old ashery, a few hundred feet north of Cross street!

THE COMMERCIAL POLICY OF THE PAST.

The pioneers who read over these sketches may probably remember the advent of Mr. Ballard to Ypsilanti. His object was to establish a store here, which would hold as good a stock as that in the possession of Mr. Champion. It was not a very difficult matter to establish a trading depot in those days, and so Mr. Ballard succeeded in inaugurating his enterprise. A few days later the conventionalities of the times pointed out to Mr. Champion that a friendly visit to the store of his brother trader was necessary. He carried out the dictates of etiquette; but during his brief visit did not fail to notice that Ballard came here determined to charge a good price for each and every article pertaining to his stock. The visit was mutually agreeable, particularly to Champion, who saw a means of increasing his income. Returning to his store, he looked over his goods, saw they were marked much lower than the wares offered for sale by his new friend, and while regretting lost opportunities, he made resolve that the coming man would neither excel him in the quality or price of goods. That night he marked his stock. The sequel to all this was, that Ballard returned his call next day, saw how the pioneer merchant transacted business and noted the prices which he charged. That night Ballard increased the prices of his goods, so that when Champion made a second friendly call he found his competitor still ahead. During that afternoon, Champion was unusually morose; he called his assistants, and instructing them to be "round after supper," went across the river. Returning, he and his clerks unshelved the stock, marked every article very high indeed, and concluded the labors of that day with the declaration, "I say that no ——— upstart from Detroit will sell goods higher than me!"

What a change does the retrospect present! All our local merchants would scarcely desire better sport than to see "an upstart from Detroit" open an establishment and follow up Ballard's business principles.

BABYLON WAS FALLING.

Almost 20 years before the war which gave liberty to the negroes of the Southern States, "old Black Sam" found a refuge at Ypsilanti. Notwithstanding the fact that he was one of the ugliest "niggers," he possessed a few good qualities, which soon won for him a certain amount of toleration from the villagers. He swore that if he could do it, not another one of his race would find a home here, and this oath he observed as strictly as possible. In 1838 a negro barber arrived in the city, who, shortly after, opened a little shop in a little frame house which then stood near the southeast corner of Congress and Washington sts. Against him "old Black Sam" conceived a terrible aversion. One night a few citizens were sitting outside the Hawkins House, when they heard a crash. Rushing across the street, they saw the negro barber in the act of casting a stone at a man who ran east on Congress street, saw the man fall, and presently had a look at the little shop. The front was forced inward, as if struck by a locomotive. Evidently the fallen man was the modern Samson, who performed the feat. The onlookers then proceeded to take a survey of the barber's victim, and to their surprise beheld the terrible "Old Sam" ensanguined in his own blood. While Sam was thus situate, the barber lodged a complaint against him, and had him arraigned before Justice Voorhees. In reply to all charges, the fierce old negro denied that he was present, saying: "May't please de court, I wasn't dar! I wasn't dar at all, at all!" The negro was literally covered with blood, and his denial so surprised the barber, that he exclaimed, "You wasn't dar! You wasn't dar,—eh! Sam? Den how de d——l did dat stone hit you?" The Justice was a patron of "old Black Sam," and let him off with $10 fine and costs. The old man continued to wage war against his brother negroes for about 10 years.

YOU GENEROUS JEW!

Previous to the days of the Vigilance Committee, a settler complained of having lost a horse. Mr. Joslin employed Private Detective Bromfield to search. He found the animal at Flat Rock, reported the matter, and a warrant was issued for the arrest of Springstead and his father, Gordonier, celebrated horse-thieves. The prisoners were brought before Justice C. W. Lane; lawyer Joslin prosecuted. While engaged in laying down the charge, Gordonier, who was in the sheriff's custody, dashed forward to chastise the lawyer, when the latter presented a revolver, saying, "Gordonier, if you advance a step, I'll shoot you!" During the scene, the crowd in the court drew back toward the wall, bent their heads and crouched as low as the densely packed mass would allow. Gordonier drew back, and the lawyer continued his address. The criminals were held to the Circuit Court. After the trial before Justice Lane, Emerick came forward to thank his advocate, and also to pay him the fee so well earned. He said: "Now, sir, how much do I pay you? You have got my horse and convicted the thieves." "Now," said the lawyer, "you know what I have done: give me what you think fair." He was under the impression that Emerick would pay a respectable fee; but, to his surprise, the old man drew forth an "Ypsilanti shin-plaster," valued at 25 cents, and offered it in payment. The lawyer looked astonished, yet accepted the "shinplaster." Young Woodruff, who witnessed the transaction, treated his legal friend to a lecture, if not to some abuse, and cautioned him never again to tell a — Dutchman to make the lawyer's fee.

THE REPORT.

In 1849 Arden H. Ballard, James Martin and Wells Chamberlain were Commissioners of Highways. A sum of $350 was voted, to be expended by those commissioners during that year. At the annual meeting ensuing, the commissioners reported through A. H. Ballard, who concluded his statement with the unique phrase, "Last year the township voted $350, which sum we have expended to our entire satisfaction." At that time, such reports were read out before the people from the piazza, so that Mr. Ballard's innocent presumption was hailed with the cheers of the people. Such a report as this was actually signed by that trio of highway commissioners and presented to the people.

VICISSITUDES OF EARLY INDUSTRIAL CONCERNS.

Looking back over a period of 55 years, one is forcibly reminded of the energy which characterized the early mill-builders. As early as 1824, a grist-mill was built on a water-power south of the city, which power had a natural fall of 11 feet, and claimed to be the third best power on the Huron. This project was started by Major Woodruff; the mill was opened in 1825 and continued in operation until 1830. The first miller was Mr. Stephens, and among the first to furnish the grist was William Wilson, who at that time made the settlement his home. The power of the water at this mill did not necessitate the construction of a dam.

The first mill-dam was built by Hardy & Reading on the river, between French claim 691, and the southeast quarter of section 4. The obstruction forming this new water-power being of brush, clay and logs, it would appear to be the work of the beaver tribe, instead of enterprising men; however, the rude barricade, which confined the Huron at this point, was swept away by the flood of 1832. That dam was located where the woolen-mill dam now is.

The First Saw-Mill.--It has been stated on very good authority, that John Stewart built the first saw-mill, in what is now Ypsilanti city, as early as 1826; but many, probably the majority, claim that Hardy & Reading's, built in 1827, was the first. This was erected where the woolen factory stands. Subsequently Hardy sold his interest in the mill and water-power to Mark Norris, and Reading disposed of his interests to Timothy McIntyre; the latter sold out to Anthony Case and Chester Perry, who purchased one-fourth of the water-power with the saw-mill. These men sold in turn to Arden H. Ballard, and he erected on the site a flouring mill, known as "The Eagle Flouring Mills," built in 1839-40, and destroyed by fire in 1856. Some years afterward Ballard disposed of his interest to Dr. Clarke, of Detroit. This sale was effected in 1843. Five years later Clarke sold to Thomas O. Hill, who, in 1850, transferred his interests to Mark Norris and B. Follett. In December, 1853, Norris disposed of his half interest in the Eagle Mill and his interest in the Ypsilanti Mill to his son, Lyman D. Norris; while Follett sold out his share in both concerns to Chauncey Joslin. In January, 1856, Mr. Joslin purchased the interests of Norris, and became sole owner of both industrial establishments. In October, 1856, the dramatic history of the Eagle Mill began and ended.

It appears that in September of that year Mr. Joslin invested $16,000 in wheat, which was not delivered at these mills for thirty days, owing to the carelessness or want of freight cars on the part of the Central railroad. In October $16,000 worth was delivered within three days, of which $7,000 worth was elevated into the grain room of the Eagle, and $9,000 worth into that of the Ypsilanti Mill. The first night after the day of delivery, the enterprising owner was roused from his sleep to witness the fire-fiend in full possession of the Eagle Mill, and the valuable store of grain. He lost by this fire over $10,000.

The second flouring mill was projected by Hardy & Reading, in 1828, just below the location of the present woolen mills. This establishment was razed in 1851. Lyman Graves erected a saw-mill on Paint creek in 1832.

Harwood's Flouring Mill.—In 1829 the third flouring mill was built by W. W. Harwood, and the dam by Mark Norris and W. W. Harwood, just south of Congress Street, on the left bank of the Huron. The former sold the water-power to the latter in 1832. Harwood sold to John Gilbert in 1835. In 1839 Gilbert gave a half interest to his son-in-law, Abel Godard. These men purchased the water-power on the west side of the river, in April, 1839, from Major Abram Larzelere; the year following they sold their entire interest in mill and power to Alfred A. Hunter, whose management resulted in its passing into the hands of assignees, the property being assigned to Mr. Beckwith. The concern was operated by lessees or renters from the assignees, until 1854, when it was sold to Nathan Follett and Alexander Ross. In 1858 or '9, Ross disposed of his interest to Follett, who was sole proprietor until 1861, when he sold to Isaac N. Conklin. In 1862 the mill was purchased by B. Follett, and subsequently conveyed to Nathan Follett in 1865, and in 1873 to Messrs. Deubel Bros., the present owners and operators.

The Iron Foundry.—In 1832 Mark Norris leased to A. M. Hurd a water-power two feet square, with a fall of five feet, for the purpose of a motive power in connection with the proposed iron foundry. Here Hurd and Sage erected a building, 50x80 feet, put up the machinery, and employed Benjamin Thompson to set the machinery in motion. He turned the first wheel in 1832. For a short while the business of the foundry was continued on a small scale; but the company never found sufficient ore to justify it in erecting a blast furnace. In 1833 it was converted into a plow factory, again into a woolen mill, and subsequently devoted to an iron-casting shop. In 1843-4 it passed into the ownership of Thompson and Levins S. Church. They sold to Timothy Showerman, who converted it into a flouring mill, known as the Ætna Mills. The history of this institution under its new dress and name is not without its sensational features. The new proprietors evidently utilized the water-power belonging to Norris, who was not slow in instituting law proceedings. All this resulted in the stoppage of the mills. Norris & Follett purchased the lease and building, which they subsequently conveyed to Norris & Joslin, who transformed it into a sash, door and blind factory. To this, three departments were added, including a planing mill, an ax-handle factory and a gypsum mill. The entire property was afterward purchased by Chauncey Joslin, who, in April, 1858, disposed of one-third of his interest to Messrs. Follet & Conklin, and one-third to Mark Norris. In June following a flood swept over the east end of the dam, carried away the mill and all the stock, valued at $12,000, scattered the manufactured goods along the banks of the Huron, leaving nothing but the water wheels and planing machine.

The new planing mill, operated by Fulmer & Scoville, now stands on the site of the above mentioned works. It was built by Follett, Conklin, C. Joslin and Mark Norris. The last named parties sold to Mr. Follett, who afterward sold to Quirk, Dow & Boyce.

In 1830 there was a race dug by direction of Judge Jacob L. Larzelere, of Seneca county, N. Y., who caused a saw-mill to be erected just below the west end of the dam of Cornwell's paper-mill. This was used until 1842 as a saw-mill, when it was converted into a woolen factory by John Y. Larzelere, the son of Abraham Larzelere, who inherited the property. This was an important industry of the times—employing from 15 to 20 hands, and shipping its manufactures throughout the State. In July, 1847, John Y. Larzelere died, and the estate allowed the mill to fall into decay, so that the flood had little difficulty in washing it away later. Alfred A. Hunter and John Y. Larzelere built a dam above the location of this saw and woolen mill in 1847. In 1855 or '56, Cornwell bought the land where the lower paper-mill stands, and with it half the water-power. Mrs. Larzelere put in the west side water-power as so much stock in the paper-mill, Mr. Van Cleve put in $1,000 stock, and thus the first paper factory was established. In 1863 the mill was very prosperous, when Van Cleve and the Larzelere estate sold out to Cornwell, who with his partners continue to operate it at present.

Regarding the dam, said to be constructed by Alfred A. Hunter, Surveyor Woodard states, that the credit of this enterprise should be given to J. Y. Larzelere, who built it immediately before his death.

The "pail factory" was situate on the west bank of the river, on the west end of the Huron mill-dam. This factory was fully 35 feet above the power, to which a shaft descended. This little industry was among the things of the past even in 1836. It was operated by Chester Perry.

In 1829, after the completion of the dam for the Harwood Mill, Mark Norris erected a woolen or carding mill below Harwood's flouring mill. The mill passed into the hands of Chauncey Knapp, who operated it until 1839.

The concern known as the "Ypsilanti Flouring Mill," referred to in a sketch of its sister industry, "The Eagle," was built in 1839-'40 by Norris.

In 1825 Mr. Rawson operated a saw-mill at "The Landing," now known as "Rawsonville."

The "Brick Hotel's" relation to the seminary.—The early enterprise of the Detroit Land Company in erecting a building at Ypsilanti for hotel purposes, is well deserving of some little notice. Among the stockholders of this real-estate association were such enterprising men as Arden H. Ballard, Marcus Lane, Shubal Conant, De Garmo Jones, and Le Grand Morse. Anxious to build up a village on the new highway to Chicago, and also to eclipse the Central railroad in the character of their buildings, they decided to erect a brick hotel building overlooking the proposed junction of the railroads. This they accomplished so far as the building was concerned, but the hotel was never established there. Shubal Conant, the trustee of the stockholders, disposed of their entire interest to Chas. W. Lane, a lawyer of Ypsilanti. This sale was made in January, 1844. Lane sold the "Brick Hotel" to Abiel Hawkins immediately after, and he in turn to Rev. L. H. Moore, who disposed of his interest therein to the School Board. The original building is said to have cost about $9,000. Rev. Mr. Moore is supposed to have purchased it for $2,000, and to have sold his interest therein to School District No. 4, in 1848, for $2,400, reserving the west quarter of the block, together with the house now occupied by Dr. Kinne.

Previous to these last named transactions, Mr. C. Woodruff, now of the Sentinel, rented the building for school purposes, formed both English and foreign classes, and really inaugurated an educational village. Succeeding its purchase by the School Board, the State Legislature passed a special act organizing this as the first district school. In 1852-'3 the district built an addition to the original house at a cost of $3,000. This new building together with the old were destroyed by fire March 29, 1857, and thus the "Brick Hotel," or Seminary, passed into the past. So with the other two follies—the great frame structure, built on the east side on the southwest corner of Congress and River streets, for hotel purposes, never reached the point designed by its projectors. The "nunnery" also fell into disuse, and was destroyed by the fire of 1851. Wm. R. Post built this house about 1827, for manufacturing purposes.

LIVING INDUSTRIES.

We now pass to a brief contemplation of the manufacturing industries of modern times.

The Huron Flouring Mill.—In the papers devoted to the early milling interests of Ypsilanti, the history of this pioneer establishment is carried down to the period of its sale to the Deubel Brothers. At present it has six run of stone, turbine water-wheels and all modern improvements. The mill is capable of producing 15,000 barrels of flour per annum, for Detroit and Eastern markets, together with grinding 24,000 bushels of grain for its local patrons. The building, machinery and water-power are valued at $20,000.

The City Mill.—This industrial concern is situated on the east bank of the Huron, near Cross street bridge. Like the Huron Mill, this building, or rather a portion of it, has been handed down from the pioneer period. After passing through a series of vicissitudes, it was purchased by T. C. Owen and E. B. Ward, the building being hitherto improved, and new machinery introduced by Quirk, Daw & Co. Its capacity is stated to be 100,000 barrels of flour per annum, together with a local grist trade of 30,000 bushels of grain. The building and machinery is valued at about $50,000, exclusive of the value of the M. C. R. R. side track, which has been carried to the loading platform. It is now owned by the Deubel Brothers.

Ypsilanti Distillery.—Captain Norton, Cephas Hawks, Wm. Jarvis and A. H. Ballard erected a distillery on the ground where is now the Ypsilanti ashery, in 1826. In 1845 Ballard & Edmunds became sole proprietors, and converted the building into a distillery and flouring mill. In 1849 Ballard sold to James N. and Newton Edmunds, who, retiring from such a business, left it to be turned into the less profitable but more useful ashery.

Cornwell & Co.'s Paper-Mill.—The paper-mill of this company is noticed in dealing with the pioneer enterprises. To Cornwell is the honor due of being the first to introduce this great industry into Ypsilanti. Through his influence and energy the mill of 1856 was inaugurated, and from that period to the present time he has continued to advance the paper manufacturing interest, until now the products of the mills are welcome in the markets of the United States. The pioneer paper-mill was partially destroyed by fire in 1871. Another house was soon erected, which had the same fate; yet enterprise pushed onward, and raised the present pile of brick buildings, known as "Cornwell's Paper-Mills." The main building, 66x130 feet, is occupied as the machine room; another room, 50x107, is the store or freight house; and the third, 36x120, forms the engine room. Both water and steam power are used. The quality of paper manufactured is "news-print."

Ypsilanti Paper Company's Mills.—In 1874 this company erected a paper-mill one half mile above the Peninsular Mills. The structure is brick, with stone foundations, similar to the Cornwell Mills. It is operated by Messrs. Cornwell, Son & Brothers. This has been justly named the most extensive paper-mill in the State of Michigan. The water-power is considered the best on the Huron river, with a head of 17 feet.

The Cornwells own the mills, formerly noticed, in the south part of the city; the above mills; the Geddes Pulp-Mill, with an 11-foot water-power; a large paper-mill situated on the Huron, on the western limits of Ann Arbor township, together with still another mill in course of erection at Ann Arbor. This company own 53 feet of water-power on the Huron river, between Ypsilanti and Dexter.

Cornelius Cornwell, senior partner in the Ypsilanti Paper Company, first entered a woolen factory, to learn the trade; when 21 years of age he bought out his partner at "Foster's," this county, and at 25 he erected a grist-mill there; and at that place, too, he built and operated his first paper-mill, since which time the brothers have erected one mill at Ann Arbor and one at Ypsilanti, a pulp-mill at Geddesburg, and another at Jackson, also a woolen factory at Newport, or Foster's, and they have a wholesale paper store at Chicago, Ill. The Ypsilanti Paper Company employs probably about 500 hands. We give Mr. Cornwell's portrait.

Peninsular Paper Company, Ypsilanti.—Under the general law of the State of Michigan for the incorporation of stock companies in the State, the stock company known as the Peninsular Paper Company was organized and papers filed in 1867.

The capital stock of the company was $50,000, which was divided into 2,000 shares of $25 each. The first officers were: L. A. Barnes, President; I. N. Conklin, Vice-President; J. W. Van Cleve, Secretary and Treasurer.

The site of the works of this company is just outside of the northwestern limits of the city of Ypsilanti. In the spring of 1867 the construction of the company's mill number one was begun and the first paper was made in 1868. Mill number one is located on the south side of the Huron river and consists of a main building with dimensions 40x100 feet, three-stories high, a wing 30x120 feet, one-story high, and an annex for office use 16x24 feet in size. The main building is used for the preparation of stock; the wing is used for making and finishing paper.

On the same side of the River Huron and located on a side track of the M. C. R. R. is a three-story warehouse, 40x100 feet in size. The demands for their manufactured paper increasing, the company in 1872 began the construction of a mill on the north side of the river, directly opposite their first mill, to be known as mill number two. This was completed and manufacturing therein commenced in 1873. The product of this mill is exclusively of the quality known as super-calendered book paper. The dimensions of this mill are as follows: The main building, 40x116 feet, two stories and basement, and wing, 40x132 feet, one story and basement, the main building being used for preparing stock and the wing for making and finishing paper. The motive-power of these mills is supplied by three turbine water-wheels in each mill, one 66, one 42 and one 30 inch, under 13 feet head. Attached to each mill is a fire-proof boiler room containing 150-horse-power boilers. The company manufacture print and fine book paper exclusively. The production of the first year's work was about 150 tons of paper, which was sold for about 16 cents per pound. The business has increased to such an extent that in 1880 these mills produced 1,500 tons of paper. The machinery required to do this work consists of eight paper-mill engines, four in each mill, one rag cutter and duster in each mill, one large rotary boiler in each mill for boiling stock, besides one open tub, and two Foudrinier paper-machines, one 72-inch and one 66-inch. To do the work required, 110 persons are employed, about one-half of whom are women and girls.

The productions of the mills find market in this State and the city of Chicago. Since its organization this company has enjoyed general prosperity. In 1876 the capital stock was increased to $100,000. The officers of the company now are L. A. Barnes,

J. G. Morton

Almira Morton

Pres. and Treas.; Samuel Barnard, Vice-Pres.; J. W. Van Cleve, Secretary.

The actual amount of money invested is $50,000, the market value of which is 350 per cent. This fact alone is the highest testimony to the character of the management.

The foundry and machine shops of Ferrier & Son, located on River street, near the M. C. R. R. depot, form one of the great industrial establishments of the city. The foundry is principally devoted to the construction of mill machinery and corn-shellers. The buildings of the firm are extensive and substantial; the main building is 60x130 feet, two-stories high, with return house containing foundry and machine shop. A 10-horse power engine is the motive power used. The firm employs a large number of skilled workmen.

McCullough's Plow-Factory.—The firm of J. & W. L. McCullough, manufacturers of plows, cultivators, and large kettles, operate the foundry on Congress street, just east of the bridge. For many years these iron founders have carried on an extensive business.

Foltmor & Scovill's Mill.—The saw-mill of this company is devoted to the manufacture of hard-wood lumber and dressed lumber. The mill comprises three large buildings, modern machinery, and a water-power capable of supplying all demands:

McKinstry & Van Cleve's Factory.—The planing-mill established by Edwards & Cooper is now operated by the men whose names are given in the heading. The mill and factory stands at the northeast corner of Congress and Adams, just west of the opera house. It is a two-story brick building, 56x64 feet, with engine room, etc., etc. Together with the building, planing, sash and door departments of this concern, it is said that they ship over 40,000 base-ball bats annually. This factory gives direct employment to 15 men, transacts business in a business-like way, and takes an important part among the industries of the town.

Whitmore & Co.'s sash, door, and blind factory is located on Cross street. The machinery of their factory is worked by steam power.

Parsons Brothers.—Messrs. S. W. and G. W. Parsons first organized as lumber, lath, and shingle dealers in 1867. They continued in this business exclusively until 1869, when they purchased the "Ypsilanti Spoke Factory" and machinery, to which was added machinery for the manufacture of sash, doors, and blinds. The size of their factory is 30x64, with wing 30x30 feet; engine and boiler room, 20x20; paint-shop, 15x26 with a return 12x26; the warehouse is 20x44, and two-stories high; office, 20x36; and dry kiln. These are substantial buildings of brick and stone. In 1868 the "Monitor Washing-Machine" was patented, and its manufacture was undertaken by the firm subsequent to its improvement in 1872. The Messrs. Parsons are also manufacturers of Crich's Hinged Frame, and of Folding Spring Bed Bottoms; and also of the O. K. and Peerless Coffee Roasters. The "Storm-King" windmill is one of their latest enterprises. The business of the firm appears to be conducted on principles which must necessarily insure its continued increase and success.

Climax Threshing-Machine Works.—Edward D. McPherson, proprietor of these works, purchased the "Novelty Works" from John Gilbert, October, 1880, and commenced the manufacture of machines that month. This factory occupies two acres, fronting on Grove street. The buildings are laid off into machine, foundry, finishing shops, and dry kilns. The former is 55x60 feet, three-stories high; the foundry 45x60, and the finishing shop 105x22. The engine is 50-horse power, the engine room 20x60, and the boiler house 10x30. In the construction of these buildings by the original owner, Mr. Gilbert, no expense was spared. For many years he carried on a most extensive business, including the manufacture of the Eureka Safe and Settees. The material for railroad fences was also prepared here.

In the possession of such buildings, Mr. McPherson is enabled to turn out 500 threshing-machines annually. He has been, for a number of years, with the old experienced firm of McPherson, Glasgow & Co., of Fingal and Clinton, Ont., Canada, who have been engaged in the manufacture of threshing-machines there more than thirty years, and do by far the most extensive trade in this line of any firm in Canada. The 35 per cent. protective tariff and the large number of Canadians now residing in Michigan, to whom the high character of the "Climax Thresher" is well known, suggested the propriety of establishing a factory here. Mr. McPherson possesses all the elements which should belong to a business man. The success of his enterprise here is already insured, so that the citizens may congratulate themselves on the establishment of an industrial concern, equal in importance to that of the "Novelty Works."

Sweet Brothers' Factory.—The sash, door and blind factory established by Sweet & Henderson in 1869 is now operated by Sweet Brothers, one of whom purchased Mr. Henderson's interest early in 1880. Their factory is situated at the corner of Congress and Hamilton streets. The main building is 66x75 feet in size, five-stories in height, with extensions for dry-kiln and storage purposes. The machinery consists of a new combined four-side surface planer and matcher, band saws, mortising machine, lathes and all attachments necessary to the manufacture of sash, doors, blinds and moldings, all propelled by a 40-horse power stationary engine. The firm also carries a stock of seasoned pine and hard wood for retail trade.

The Curtis Carriage Factory stands on the southwest corner of Congress and Adams streets. It is a large two-story brick building designed for a first-class factory and warehouse. Since its establishment in 1868, the product of the concern has been annually increased; the workmanship has gained a higher place in popular esteem, still continues to advance, and gives promise of being, in the near future, one of the principal industries of the State.

Ypsilanti Carriage Co.—This stock company was organized in October, 1879, with a capital of $25,000 and is now under the direction of H. Batchelder. The buildings of the company have a frontage of 100 feet on Washington street, are 60 feet deep, with a building in rear 40 feet deep. Employment is given to 20 skilled mechanics, who build sleigh and buggy bodies for the Western markets. The annual value of such manufactured goods may be set down at $30,000. This company is the successor to the "Beach Carriage Manufacturing Company," of which S. M. Cutcheon was President, and S. W. Beach, Superintendent. The present company comprises R. W. Hemphill, Hiram Batchelder, J. C. Batchelder and J. S. Cutcheon.

Laing & Martin Shops.—This firm was organized in 1868, when the present quarters were rented, and opened a blacksmith's shop for general jobbing and repairing work. Through close attention to business and industry the firm has been enabled to add other branches to its business, until now it is extensively engaged in making wagons, carriages, sleighs, cultivators, harrows, etc. The Defiance windmill, one of the most perfect machines of its kind in the market, and one which finds a ready sale throughout the State, is also constructed in their shops. The shops are equipped with all modern machinery needed, which is driven by a 12-horse power steam-engine.

The Gas Governor Manufacturing Co. was organized in May, 1874, for the purpose of manufacturing "Horne's Patent Automatic Gas Governor." The business of the company has steadily increased, until now it occupies a high position among the individual industries of the town. Among its projectors and present officers are men whose connection with it is full evidence of its prosperity, past and present.

The shops of O. E. Thompson comprise a paint shop, "clover and grass seed-sower" manufacturing shop, and the agricultural implement show room. Mr. Thompson is a son of Benjamin Thompson, one of the early settlers of Ypsilanti,—a man of enterprise, and the patentee of the "Clover and Grass Seed-Sower." This useful agricultural implement is manufactured by him. It is now becoming popular and its manufacture promises to add another important industry to the city.

The Manufacture of Cabinets was introduced here by Mr. Vanderbilt, continued by D. Coon, H. Vinkle, McAndrew & Wallace, and is at present represented by McAndrew & Wallace and Clark. Each of the two establishments does a fair trade.

Corey & Grant's Factory.—E. W. Grant & A. L. Corey's factory is bounded by Adams, Michigan and Hamilton streets. One building is 30x80 feet, with a wing 25x100 feet, with engine house, engine of 30-horse power, etc. It was erected in 1874, and opened the same year by E. W. Grant. In April, 1875, Mr. Corey entered on the manufacture of the Elastic Rubber Bucket, and since that time continued the business, extending it throughout the United States as well as the Canadas and Prince Edward Island.

The woolen-mill, of the Ypsilanti Woolen-Mill Co., situated below Mill street bridge, is among the great industrial concerns of the city. The mill proper is a five-story brick building 33x108 feet, with a return three stories high, 40x50 feet. The building and machinery cost over $100,000. In addition to the main building may be named the wood house, a two-story brick structure with basement, each floor or loft giving an area of 2,000 square feet.

The Gas Works, situated on the Huron at Forest avenue, were established in 1858, and put in operation on the day the second Union school building was dedicated. They have continued to enlighten night, even as the school enlightens man, down to the present. The corporation does not patronize the works at present, believing gasoline to be more economical.

The Whip-Socket Factory of Worden Brothers was established in 1868. During that year Mr. Curtis, of the Curtis Carriage Factory, invented a whip socket and patented it the same year. This patent he sold to Worden Brothers, who entered immediately on its manufacture. During the last 12 years, this firm of manufacturers has achieved a success, which to many appears wonderful. The buildings and machinery are so many evidences of progress, and the extensiveness of the present trade a record of business tact and enterprise.

Monument and Marble Works.—The firm of Batchelder & Co., manufacturers of monuments, in American and Italian marble, was established here as early as 1850. In 1878 G. W. Loughridge entered partnership with him, and subsequently J. H. Wilcox. The reputation of this company of marble-workers renders the market for the product of their factory, extensive. From Detroit to Jackson, each cemetery holds a testimonial to the excellent quality and style of the monuments sent from their shops. In Wayne, Pontiac, Jackson, Lenawee and many other counties the monuments of this shop are well known.

The Grove Brewery was established in 1869 by Taufkirth & Trockembrod, who placed some machinery therein. The trade of the brewery was limited until Foerester Bros. took possession of the concern; during the last decade, the product has increased from 50 to 200 barrels.

Grob's Brewery was established in 1861 by Jacob Grob, who built the first brewery in this city during that year. The brewings are generally successful, and the beer is said to be much appreciated by those who use it.

Grob's Ice-House, in connection with the brewery, was rebuilt in 1864. During the winter of 1880-'1 over 600 cords of ice were "harvested." The original house was built in 1839 or '40 by Arden H. Ballard, as a barrel house. It was established as an ice house by Geo. Wanless in 1856-'7.

Swayne's Malt-House, situated on Forest avenue and River street, is at present a three-story brick building, 50x94 feet. The original house was built for school purposes, but was converted into a small malt-house by L. C. Wallington. In 1872 F. G. Swayne purchased Wallington's interest in the concern and enlarged the building to its present size. The machinery is all modern. The annual product of the malt-house has increased from 11,000 bushels in 1874 to 40,000 in 1880.

The Eagle Brewery was situated on East Congress street. This was built about 1861. The building was operated, previous to its close in 1876, by Andrew J. Leech.

Tannery.—Crane's tannery was one of the important industries of the city. As many as 1,200 calf and 500 kip skins, with 1,500 hides were prepared every year. The leather produced, found a market throughout the Eastern and Western States. The works were erected in 1861, and in 1879 were leased to Irion & Dutton, who furnish an excellent quality of leather and enjoy an extensive trade.

John Howland established a tannery at Manchester in 1838, where he continued the business until 1844, when he moved to Ypsilanti. From that period forward the business progressed. In 1873 Mr. Howland changed the firm name to that of J. N. Howland & Co. and added the manufacture of mittens to the tanning business. The company carry on a wholesale and retail trade.

Cigar Manufacturers.—The factory of Schemmeld & Cook was established in 1873. The company employs from seven to ten men, and the product of the factory ranges from 200,000 to 300,000 cigars annually. Their manufactured goods find a ready sale throughout Michigan, Indiana and Ohio.

The factory of W. J. Randolph was established in 1881. Already there is a liberal patronage extended to this new industry.

Guild & Son were among the first manufacturers of cigars in this city. As early as 1874 their annual trade equaled 360,000 cigars, the various brands being favorably known throughout this and the adjoining States.

Denis Doyle manufactured cigars here from 1876 to 1879.

The Ypsilanti Ashery was established in 1855. In 1878 the works passed into the hands of its present proprietors. The annual product is 60 casks of potash, which finds a ready sale in the New York city market.

The Ypsilanti Lime Kiln was built by Zachariah Shaw in 1862. The stone burned is supplied from the Trenton quarries. The product of the kilns in 1880 was 27,000 bushels of lime, the greater portion of which was used in the paper factories of Ypsilanti.

The Brick Yards of C. McCormick and M. P. Holmes & Co. are classed among the great brick yards of the State.

Rogers' Pump Factory, located on East Congress street, near the bridge, is another industry worthy of notice. Its trade in well and cistern pumps is extensive and gives employment to a number of mechanics.

The Broom Factories of E. R. Forsyth and of A. Gilmore & Co. turn out brooms for the million, employ a large number of men and form important factors in the economy of the city.

The great part which a system of hydraulics plays in the progress of a city cannot be doubted. Notwithstanding the fact that many citizens of Ypsilanti have acted well their part, much remains to be done. There is a water-power capable of turning the mill wheels of a nation, waiting for further utilization. To realize the high hopes for the city, which its position and natural resources would lead one to build up, factories must be erected, manufacturers encouraged, and the 10,000-horse power of the Huron utilized. The immense possibilities which open up to the citizens cannot be overlooked. The greater the number of well-managed factories at a common center, the greater the prosperity of each; and when one takes a survey of the field, which Ypsilanti opens to the manufacturer, of that wild water-power, which may be trained at a comparatively small cost, one stands astonished to think of all that could be done and is not.

BANKERS OF THE PAST AND PRESENT.

That the monetary interests of Ypsilanti have not been left unguarded, is proven in the subscribed sketches of its financial houses. The old banking system of the "wild-cat" days worked its own downfall, and above its ruins was erected that sound system of finance now conferring benefits throughout the land. No doubt whatever may exist in regard to the highly beneficial part enacted by these institutions in that serio-comic play which raised this section of the county from its wild condition; nor can it be questioned for a moment, that to their timely organization, and subsequent good management, the people owe much of their present prosperity. In dealing with this subject, the historical sketch prepared by Mr. F. P. Bogardus, may be taken as a most satisfactory account of banks here, in the past as well as in the present. In its compilation, that gentleman consulted such men as Chauncey Joslin, R. W. Van Fossen and N. K. Towner. Again the paper was submitted, a few corrections suggested, and is now presented as a most valuable addition to this history.

The Bank of Ypsilanti.—The first attempt in this city at banking was the organization of the Bank of Ypsilanti, chartered by a special act of the Legislature, approved March 28, 1836. The incorporators were Henry Compton, Arden H. Ballard, Marcus Lane, Mark Norris, Silas French and Grove Spencer, with Timothy Treadwell, President, and David Balantine, Cashier,—the last named being succeeded in May, 1837, by Benj. Follett. The capital stock of the bank was $100,000, in shares of $50 each, of which 10 per cent. was payable in specie at once, and the balance when the directors might so ordain. Its organization was completed and the office opened for business about two months after the act of incorporation. For three years this bank carried on a large business, sustaining such credit that its notes circulated freely as far west as Chicago, and retained the confidence of the public some time after the "wild-cat" subsequently issued here had gone where the woodbine twineth. During these three years, it was undoubtedly a great help to the few business men then flourishing in our young village; but at this time the stock changed hands, being controlled by Lewis Godard and his associates, and the institution, after their year's administration, was in such a condition that the Attorney General of the State was obliged to throw it into bankruptcy, and wind up its business.

The Huron River Bank.—The next domestic addition to our banking capital was organized in 1838 under the "wild-cat" general banking law, having as stockholders: A. H. Ballard, Henry Compton, James M. Edmunds, Gilbert Shattuck, Richard E. Morse, Leonard Osgood, and some others,—a list of names sufficiently like that of the incorporators of its elder sister, the Bank of Ypsilanti. The Huron River concern began the flood of its promises to pay in 1838, issuing freely, with Arden H. Ballard as President and Myron V. Hall, Cashier. The redemption of these notes was secured by mortgages on real estate property at one half its value. As a specimen of the conscientious care exercised to make a safe valuation, may be mentioned that of the French claim 681, comprising about 630 acres (of which George Mooreman's present farm constitutes a part), cautiously estimated at $65,000, or slightly over $100 per acre; unquestionably well worth it at that early day, covered as it was with a fine growth of timber, only 30 miles from Detroit by the new corduroy road. The institution continued its beneficent career about 18 months, when, failing to redeem its circulation with its standing timber of beech, oak, maple and softer woods, it was incontinently thrown into bankruptcy. Geo. M. Skinner was appointed receiver, and about the same time the Supreme Court of the State declared the law under which it was created unconstitutional. Its creditors, though sharp of scent, lost all track of its assets. In connection with the mortgage referred to above, Ballard had no title whatever to the lands which he assigned. It was the property of the original patentee, Peppin, and fell into possession of his son in 1841-'2. Chauncey Joslin purchased the southeast quarter of this claim in 1849, for $8 per acre, and Benj. Woodruff, two years later, bought the northeast quarter for $10 per acre, from Mr. Backus, of Detroit.

The Bank of Superior.—The next "wild-cat" birth in this neighborhood had its den in what was then called Lowell, near the place where the mills of the Ypsilanti Paper Co. are now located. It was christened the "Bank of Superior," and had for its godfathers, John Van Fossen, President, and James M. Edmunds, Cashier. The stockholders' roll comprised the names of Arden H. Ballard, John Van Fossen, J. M. Edmunds, A. Wilber, and a few other farmers in the town of Superior,—the last fact doubtless suggesting its name. This "wild cat" had neither claws nor tail. Attempting to give the stereotype security on real estate, it was found that, valuable as that real estate ought to be, the titles to it were so defective that no cheek could be brazen enough to issue notes depending upon it for redemption. Nevertheless, about $300 of its notes were stolen and put in circulation. This was so great a blow upon its assets, that it ceased all further attempts to benefit our local public.

Follett, Conklin & Co.'s Bank.—After time had cleared away the fossils of these first banking growths, some sound, vigorous timber succeeded them. In 1852 Benj. Follett, Isaac N. Conklin and Samuel Y. Denton organized under the firm name of "Follett, Conklin & Co." They opened an office at the depot, in the second story of the building, afterward burned, and since known as Carr's Hotel. In 1853 S. Y. Denton withdrew, and his place was presently occupied by Chas. H. Tisdale. In 1854 their offices were removed to the Hewitt Block, and two years later, in 1856, to the building now forming the office of the First National Bank. This property was purchased from Weidenfield Brothers that year. Here the firm continued business until 1862, when the partnership was dissolved.

B. Follett & Co.'s Bank.—In 1862 Benjamin Follett and R. W. Hemphill formed a partnership under the firm title of B. Follett & Co., and began banking operations in the Follett House Block, in the room afterward devoted to the law office of Norris & Uhl. This firm transacted business until 1865, when it changed its name and location,—its name to Cornwell, Hemphill & Co.; its location to "Mormon's Block."

E. & F. P. Bogardus.—This firm of bankers was organized May 1, 1860. Two years later the company purchased the present National Bank premises, and continued to transact business there until February, 1867, when they consolidated their interests with those of the First National Banking Company, hitherto established.

The First National Bank was organized Jan. 4, 1864, by Ben. Follett, I. N. Conklin, Asa Dow, D. L. Quirk, and Cornelius Cornwell. This association was subsequently joined by the members of the Bogardus firm. The present directory includes I. N. Conklin, Edgar Bogardus and L. A. Barnes, with F. P. Bogardus, Cashier.

Benjamin Follett's name alone has been carried down from the days of the "Ballard Banks" to the present day, as the only survivor of all the wild speculators of the past. Entering the Ypsilanti bank as cashier, a few days after his arrival in Michigan, and while still under the age of 18 years, he learned much of the evil system, so that when the time of reformation arrived, he was the first to see a means of establishing a bona fide concern, which would prove profitable to its projectors and patrons alike. In 1852 he established an interest and deposit bank, and from such a cautious beginning comes the well managed First National, of Ypsilanti.

The banks of the present time operated here rest on sure foundations, which cannot fall to pieces, even under extraordinary circumstances. High principles direct the officers; prudence characterizes the directors; this world has bestowed upon their capitalists a large share of her goods, and thus confers upon the city a few institutions where the capital of the unenterprising plutocrat may increase, even though it aids his less fortunate neighbor.

RAILROADS.

The Monroe & Ypsilanti R. R.—In 1836, the Monroe & Ypsilanti R. R. Company was organized, with a paper capital stock of $400,000. The charter provided that the line should run from Ypsilanti, via Rawson's Mill, to within a few miles of Monroe. Twelve miles was to be in operation by the year 1840, and the road completed in 1844. However, the passing of the charter was the only step taken.

The Ypsilanti & Tecumseh R. R.—The incorporation of a company to build this railroad took place in 1838. The capital stock equaled $200,000, with $100,000 loaned to the company by the State. Little was done to carry out the terms of the charter. Engineer Bronson Murray directed a few contractors to enter upon grading their sections, which order was obeyed, and as soon forgotten. The curious traveler may yet view the result of the labors of those contractors, south, in the city limits, a little east of the Monroe road. $60,000 of the State loan were expended, when the State ceased the advance of more money, and with that action the work ceased to advance. The passage of this charter was due to the Speaker of the House, who made a bet that the bill would pass.

Detroit & St. Joseph R. R. carried out some of the provisions of a charter granted in 1831. In 1837 the State bought the road, changing its title to that of the "Central Road." The old company, with a paper capital of $1,500,000, pushed forward the work of construction, and succeeded in grading a few rods east of Detroit. The completion of the road to Ypsilanti Feb. 8, 1838, by the State, after an expenditure of $400,000, was an event of great importance to the villagers. The "Central" at this period should have been named the "Grand Curved Line." The engineer in charge took much care in following the course of the Huron, scarcely giving a half mile to a straight line at any one place. The rolling stock of this road in July, 1838, was four engines, two passenger vehicles, and three freight trucks. Everything connected with the equipment of the road was singularly primitive, and afforded the wits of Ypsilanti full subject for indulging in their penchant. It was the introduction to the great railroad system, which now confers so many benefits on almost every section of the State.

A TRIP TO YPSILANTI BY RAIL.

The first railroad train, which left Detroit, as well as the first to arrive at Ypsilanti, appeared Feb. 8, 1838. The excursionists comprised, among others, Governor Mason, John D. Pierce and Commissioner Willis. The engineer in charge succeeded in coming hither; but in returning, this great fireman of Battle Creek burned out the flues of the engine, entailed a heavy expense on the company, and so disorganized the whole engine that the State officers, with their distinguished guests, were compelled to walk into Detroit.

DETROIT, HILLSDALE AND YPSILANTI R. R.

In December, 1868, J. F. Joy wrote a letter to Chauncey Joslin, suggesting the propriety of building a railroad between Ypsilanti and Hillsdale. On Jan. 1, 1869, a day of storms, Mr. Joslin went to Detroit to confer with Joy. Subsequently he visited Lansing, laid the subject before a few of his friends there, who received the project favorably. Mr. Coon, member from Hillsdale, returned to his home immediately, agitated the subject there, and ultimately arranged for a conference at Ypsilanti. Previous to this meeting Mr. Joslin advised that the road be built from Ypsilanti via Adrian, over the route recently selected by the projectors of the new Butler Road. A company was incorporated immediately, municipal aid demanded and granted, and soon the work of construction was begun. Hillsdale subscribed $100,000, Ypsilanti voted $50,000, and all the villages and townships on the proposed route voted or subscribed large sums of money.

This wholesale pledging of municipalities now attracted some attention. On May 26, 1870, the Supreme Court decided that all aid voted by municipal corporations to railroad companies was unconstitutional, and refused to compel the township of Salem which voted monetary aid to the Detroit & Hillsdale road, to issue such bonds. After the decision in the case of the People vs. Township Board of Salem, of all the bonds issued, every township board and village corporation received back such issue, leaving Ypsilanti's alone in the hands of the company, amounting to $32,700. The balance, $17,300, was delivered to citizens, who, subsequent to the decision of the Supreme Court, subscribed to the capital stock of the road.

Within a week after this celebrated case was disposed of, Mr. Joy, President of the railroad company, wrote to Mr. Joslin that since the Supreme Court had declared the city bonds void, the city owed to the railroad a duty which dictated that the citizens should take stock equal to the amount hitherto voted by them, and offering to return the bonds if they would take $40,000 railroad stock. Mr. Joslin replied that it was impossible to raise that amount of stock. The railroad man returned a proposition that $30,000 of stock would be accepted as an equivalent to the aid voted. To this Mr. Joslin responded, saying that he thought even this sum was not forthcoming; but an effort would be made. Soon afterward D. L. Quirk, a director and superintendent of the road, with L. D. Norris, attorney of the road, called a public meeting to forward the movement of subscribing stock. On the afternoon of the day of meeting Mr. Quirk called on Mr. Joslin, and stated among other things, that the company proposed, if the citizens would subscribe $20,000 capital stock, it would be accepted by the railroad company in lieu of the bonds declared void. It would appear from this that the company held out a threat that the amount of bonds would be collected. This is not so, the only threat held out being that of a breach of honor; for, if the city would not help the company, which had actually completed six miles of the road to Saline, a point of honor would not be sustained by the citizens. This meeting was held in Light Guard Hall. Speeches were made by Messrs. Norris, Quirk, John Gilbert, S. M. Cutcheon, C. R. Pattison, Dr. P. Davis, Chauncey Joslin and a few others. The moral obligation of the people to give aid was clearly established.

The main resolution carried at that meeting approved of the raising of $20,000. Quirk and Norris produced the stock book, and they with others waited on the prominent men of the town, so that, in 12 or 15 days, $19,500 were subscribed, with a sum set down for others, who promised to subscribe, equal to $2,000 more. At this point the stock book was withdrawn, and never presented again to the people. As soon as this stock was paid up, the company notified the city that the city bonds had been sold to Taylor, of New York, and that the said bonds must be paid in full. The city remonstrated, suit was brought in the United States Court by Taylor, the city allowed the case to go by default, and judgment was taken for three years' interest. The fourth and fifth years' interest was paid voluntarily. Then the common council said to the railroad company, "You must give the city credit for the $19,500 stock, or we shall not pay any further sum upon the bonds."

Taylor instituted a second suit, was beaten, and now the cause is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States.

This statement is introduced, not only on account of its historical merit, but chiefly at the request of Mr. Joslin, who desires to vindicate the honor of the city, and preserve its fair fame.

In 1879, one-half the stock was disposed of to John Alley, of Boston, at a discount of 70 per cent. This resulted from the fact that the company had hitherto borrowed $1,100,000, on which sum it was unable to pay interest. The bondholders foreclosed the mortgage, bought in the property and issued new stock among themselves. Now, February, 1881, a report is current that the Michigan Central corporation has purchased the road in its entirety with the intention of engrafting it on its present system.

By what chain of unfortunate circumstances the people of Ypsilanti were induced to be so enthusiastic in regard to the building of such a railroad, is unknown. Dr. Rexford, Charles King, Captain Bogardus and others were the principal opponents of the measure. Mr. Jennis proposed nothing less than a vote of $100,000; S. M. Cutcheon urged a vote of $75,000, and C. Joslin the more modest sum of $50,000. The losses falling on the city directly, may be safely set down at $30,000, and the indirect losses for the first 10 years at $100,000. The profits arising from the trade of Saline centered now in the village of that name, would alone equal that sum.

HOTELS OF YPSILANTI.

One of the first business enterprises projected by an American settler in the neighborhood of Ypsilanti was Woodruff's Hotel, at the Grove, built in 1823. This was a double log house, and the first-class hostelry of the pioneer period. Here on July 4, 1824, the first "ball" or "dance" ever given in Washtenaw county was held. The celebration of that anniversary of Independence Day, referred to in other pages, was concluded within Woodruff's Hotel, almost all of those who participated in the celebration proper taking part in the festivities of the night. John Bryan and Jason Cross kept hotels at the Grove about the same time that Woodruff carried on the business.

The Whitmore House, so called from the fact that Judge Whitmore resided there at one time, was erected by Mayor Woodruff in 1825-'6, and opened as a hotel by Mr. McKinstry in the latter year. Judge Whitmore afterward made it his residence. The building was beautifully situated on the west bank of the river, near Congress street bridge, in rear of the present location of Hemphill's bank, with a southern frontage.

The Perry House was built in the winter of 1827 by Chester Perry, on the southeast corner of Congress and Huron. The structure was large, well finished and furnished. The owner left New York State early in 1827, with the intention of building a hotel at Ypsilanti. He was accompanied by Salmon Champion and a carpenter,—the latter engaged specially to construct the house. In leaving for his new home, he brought with him a large stock of hotel furniture and utensils, window glass and sashes, nails and iron furnishings, with many other articles which might be required in the new country. On arrival at Detroit, the goods of Messrs. Perry and Champion were transhipped to a flat-boat, hired for the purpose of taking the party and effects up the River Huron. Arriving at Rawsonville the party disembarked, the goods were landed, placed on wagons, and all pushed forward, reaching Ypsilanti the day of arrival at Rawsonville. In 1860 A. P. Bucklin purchased the house, and carried on the business of a first-class hotel until 1867. The year following, the structure was destroyed by fire.

The Hawkins House.—The nucleus of this hotel, known as Tolland's Trading House, was built by Tolland, son-in-law of John Stewart, about the year 1827. It was a log building, located on the northwest corner of Congress and Washington streets. Tolland kept a small trading store there for some short time, until it passed into the possession of one Foster, who repaired it, and converted it into a hotel. Foster, further, built a two-story frame house, west of the old log building, in 1830, which was "the hotel" of the village for years. Shortly after these improvements were effected he disposed of his entire interest to Coy, who, in turn, sold to Dr. Millington. This last-named purchaser deeded the property to Abiel Hawkins in 1834. Mr. Hawkins arrived in the village the year previous, and with this new purchase he entered on a progressive career which evidently had much to do in raising up the hamlet to the rank of a village. The year after the new proprietor received the hotel into his possession the western addition to the building was made; subsequently the large return building, fronting Washington street, was erected, so that by the year 1848 he had the ground on which the new Union Block is built literally under a hotel edifice, bearing the same important relation to the village of that period as does the Hawkins House of to-day to the city of the present time. In 1846 Abiel Hawkins deeded this valuable property to his son, Walter H. Hawkins, who continued the hotel business until 1879, when he disposed of the land, and moved the main structure of his hotel further west, upon the property of the old Ypsilanti banking company. This old building now forms the rear or northern extension of the new Hawkins House. In it are the dining-room and kitchens, with eight comfortable bed-rooms above. The Ypsilanti Bank building forms the eastern wing of the hotel, while the main structure, erected by W. H. Hawkins in 1879, forms the western or principal portion of the building. This hotel was opened Sept. 24, 1879. The total cost of the building, etc., may be set down at $25,000. The house is beautifully located, perfect in its arrangements, and one of the best conducted hotels in the State.

The Old Colby House, two miles east of the city, was erected by Zolva Bowen at a very early date—1827 or 1828. For many years he carried on the tavern business, and as it extended, enlarged the house, so that at one time it was the most pretentious building between Ypsilanti and Detroit. The house was afterward conducted by William Colby, who sold to E. D. Lay, who disposed of his interest therein to Mr. Wyard.

The "Stack House" was built about 1827 and completed in 1830 by Mr. Stackhouse. It was a very important building in the early years of the village, and was liberally patronized. John Andrews, Geo. King, Abraham Sage and Andrew Brown carried on the hotel business there successively. It is now the quarters of several Africans. The house is at present standing on the north side of Congress street, a short distance east of the bridge. Its style of architecture, etc., gives a very fair idea of the olden-time village tavern.

The Western Hotel was built in 1838 by Mark Norris, east of the Follett House, and opened for business in May, 1839, by Abiel Hawkins and Abraham Sage. This was one of the great hotel enterprises of the period. The building was brick, with stone facings, well adapted to the uses for which it was designed, and conducted with a remarkable ability. A short time after the inauguration of this hotel Mr. Hawkins bought out the interests of Mr. Sage in the business, and continued in the management of the house until he retired from business, making his home in the Brick Hotel, subsequently known as the Union school. The Western has passed away; it was torn down to make way for the Central railroad extension, the brick of which it was built being utilized in the construction of the buildings in the vicinity, particularly of that block built by Mark Norris.

The Follett House was built in 1859 by a joint-stock company, of which Benj. Follett was a principal shareholder. Mr. Follett purchased the entire interest in the building. The house was opened as a hotel by John Davis, July 4, 1859, who operated it until Dec. 9, 1859, when Abiel Hawkins took possession of it. This gentleman continued business there until June, 1862, when it was rented by John M. Cutler. Since that period the hotel has been under the control of various parties. Aaron H. Goodrich, now of Saline; A. N. Tisdale, at present of the Tisdale House, Detroit; Williams & Cutler, M. Cutler, and Mr. Stone have been proprietors successively. The hotel is closed at the present time.

The Ballou House was built in 1832-'3, and now forms the rear building of Shad's store. Ballou furnished the lot and material, and John Bryan was the builder and first proprietor. For two or three years Bryan carried on the business of a temperance hotel, when he was succeeded by Ballou, who added a whiskey department. Nason Hutchins rented the hotel, married the widow of Mr. Ballou, and became sole proprietor. Charles Shipman was proprietor for a short time. A Frenchman and a German kept the house later; ultimately it was purchased by Mr. Shad.

The Barton House was built about 1860. The hotel is now operated by J. C. De Mosh. W. C. Ayres, Thomas Barton, J. H. Wilcox and others were former owners of the building.

The Bucklin House occupied the site of the Perry House, at the southeast corner of Congress and Huron streets.

THE YPSILANTI OPERA HOUSE,

if not one of the most extensive, is certainly superior to the greater number of such establishments in its architectural beauty, and the perfection of its arrangement. Built of red brick, with black brick facings, all tastefully pointed, it conveys at once the idea that the interior must be proportionately beautiful. The structure is surmounted by a handsome cupola or dome, and this in turn with ornamental iron work. The building was carried out under the superintendency of Albert Stuck, by the contractors, Newton and Oliver, of this city; the plastering by Hanly Bros., Detroit, and the upholstery by C. S. Elmer, of Ypsilanti. The architect who designed this giant structure and its fairy ornamentation is Mortimer L. Smith; the frescoes are the work of Haykin, Detroit; the varied scenery by L. B. Chevalier; the lights by Samuel Gardner, late of Washington, D. C.; the painting and gilding by G. S. Amsden, and the stage appointments by John Hanna. The ceiling of the theater bears the medallion portraits of Longfellow, Shakspeare, Tennyson, Byron, Scott and Prof. F. H. Pease. This home of music and the drama was formally opened in January, 1880. Charles R. Whitman delivered the inaugural address, and closed with the following peroration:—

“This is a temple to which the mighty dead shall come as to a home. Shakspeare shall move us to tears of pity and sorrow, shall make us thrill with terror, and quiver with rage, and shall strengthen our hearts and hands to braver and nobler thinking and doing. The masters of comedy shall make us forget our cares and troubles, while we smile and grow happy in the sunshine of their genial mirth. And here, too, perhaps, shall be heard the voices of great composers: Beethoven, grand and sublime, shall speak to us from those heights where dwells repose; Wagner shall bewilder us with the lawless and irregular melodies of his school; the weird and delicate notes of Chopin shall penetrate our innermost being. Here shall sound the majestic strains of Handel’s “Messiah,” and Mendelssohn’s “Elijah”; and Mozart, and Haydn, and Schubert, and Schuman, and Rossini, and Sullivan—the whole company of music-makers, shall come and speak to us in tones inspiring holy love.”

The citizens owe much to Messrs. Bogardus, Curtis and Quirk, whose enterprise raised this beautiful monument. This feeling was exhibited, in a slight degree, on the night the opera house was formally opened, when Mr. E. Sampson presented Mr. Bogardus with a valuable testimonial in token of the high esteem in which he was held by the citizens at large, and as a souvenir of the successful inauguration at the opera house.

THE YPSILANTI CITY BAND, which enjoys a fame abroad, as well as credit at home, was organized in 1876, with a membership of six, and Charles Skinner as the leader. The membership, however, increased yearly, with only men of known ability, until now it comprises 22. The first public appearance of the band was at Chicago, where they led in an important street pageant as the leading band of the day, while the elegant uniforms were the subject of admiring comment. At the State tournament at Flint, Mich., they received the second prize for playing and the first for drill. The band has a very substantial patronage among societies and proprietors of halls for a good distance around through the country. The membership now comprises the following: J. H. McKinstry, Manager; Charles T. Skinner, Leader; Joseph Eaton, snare drum; Thomas Van Riper, bass drum; Chet. Elmore, B Flat cornet; Hobert Davis, piccolo; George R. Hopkins, 1st B Flat clarinet; Robert Young, baritone; Robert Stephens, E Flat cornet; Clayton Yates, 1st B Flat tenor; John W. Wise, 2d B Flat tenor; Jacob Foerster, 1st B Flat tenor; Arthur Watling, tuba; Daniel Callahan, tuba; Oscar Rogers, B Flat bass; A. Bedell, solo alto; Wm. McDermott, 1st alto; Lewis Clappen, 2d alto; John Stiller, 1st B Flat cornet; Charles Skinner, jr., cymbals; E. H. Borce, drum major; Wm. Bell, 2d B Flat cornet.

The first band organized in this city was known as the "Light Guard Band," and comprised a portion of the present membership of the Ypsilanti City Band.

THE LIGHT GUARD IN THE WAR.

In the pages devoted to the military history of Washtenaw county, the early military affairs of Ypsilanti should be fully treated; therefore a special reference here to the men who went to the front at once, is only necessary. The roster at the period of "muster out" is taken as the only certain means of recording the names of the members of Co. H., First Regiment (3 months) Mich. Inf., who served in the inaugural campaign, and who were discharged Aug. 7, 1861:—P. C. Perry, Frederick C. Joslin, Cicero Newell, W. H. Miller, H. R. Scovell, Smith Babcock, W. D. A few days after the attack on Fort

O. C. Sweetland

Sumter, the members were en route to the front, and present with the 1st Michigan Infantry at Alexandria and Bull Run. On the completion of its term of service, the volunteers invariably re-enlisted in the 1st Mich. Inf., reorganized at Ann Arbor, and fought to the close of the war with signal bravery. Many of the soldiers fell on Southern battle-fields; one only returned here to die.

THE NORMAL COMPANY.

In the summer of 1862, when the Union army was driven back from Richmond, and President Lincoln was summoning fresh troops to reinforce our depleted ranks, the students of the State Normal school resolved to form themselves into a company and go forth to the fight at their country's call. The company was organized at Ypsilanti. It was composed chiefly of young men from the Normal school and University, a number of volunteers being also admitted from the vicinity.

It was, of course, called the "Normal Company," Gabriel Campbell, a graduate, being made Captain, and Thomas Mathews and James T. Morgan being chosen as First and Second Lieutenants respectively. The members of the company received $10 each as local bounty from the citizens of Ypsilanti. In addition to this the leading business and professional men made up a purse sufficient to purchase a handsome sword, belt and sash, which were presented to Captain Campbell at a large public meeting held in "Hewitt Hall," Prof. J. M. B. Sill, of the Normal school, now superintendent of the city schools of Detroit, making the presentation address. Dr. Cocker, at present of the University at Ann Arbor, upon invitation, preached a special sermon to the company at the Methodist church on the Sabbath preceding their departure for Detroit, where it was assigned to the 17th Regiment of Michigan Infantry as "Company E." This regiment, under command of Col. W. H. Withington, of Jackson, immediately (in August) started for the seat of war and was made a part of the 1st Brigade of the 1st division of the 9th Army Corps, which was under command of Gen. Burnside.

The Normal Company was visited while in Pleasant Valley, Maryland, by Prof. A. S. Welch, the Principal of the Normal school, who spent several days with his old students in the field. In general, the work of the Normal Company was indistinguishable from that of the 17th Regiment, of which it was a part. The regiment was at first in the army of the Potomac. In the spring of 1863 it went to Kentucky; thence it was called to participate in the siege of Vicksburg, after whose fall it returned to Tennessee. Near the close of the war it again joined the army of the Potomac, and was finally detached as body guard for the general commanding the division. The Normal Company participated in all the numerous battles through which the regiment passed, sustaining the severest losses and injuries at South Mountain, Sept. 14, 1862; Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862; and near Knoxville the following year, everywhere meeting the arms of the enemy with most commendable bravery, and enduring fatigue and exposure with patience and even cheerfulness. At South Mountain the full company in their first battle took part in one of the most famous struggles of the war. It was the turning of the tide and the beginning of the success of the Union cause. We append an extract from a poetical description of the battle, written by Captain Campbell, who led the Normal Company. The roster of this company is given in the county history.

Of the number who went forth, the following men were killed in battle: At South Mountain—Robert C. Irwin, Alexander Mc Kinnon, and William A. Woodard; at Antietam—Francis E. King, Gilbert B. Peck, and Webster Ruckman; near Knoxville—George P. Hathaway, and Walter B. Maxfield; at Spottsylvania, Herbert N. Lonsbury; at Petersburg—Edwin A. Bush.

The following died of their wounds: G. Myron Hawley (South Mountain), Daniel G. Hopkins (South Mountain), John H. Marvin (Antietam), Frederick S. Webb (Antietam), Geo. W. McMichael (Knoxville).

The following died of disabilities incurred in the service: Lieut. Jas. T. Morgan (at home), Salmon E. Haight (Fredericksburg), Foster Ames (Lebanon, Ky.), William H. Orndt (Washington), Samuel F. Aulls (Washington), Charles J. Cady (Florence prison), Silas W. Chapman (Frederick City), Harrison McFall (Andersonville prison), Thomas W. Gretton (Andersonville prison), Robert E. Vining (Louisville), and Squier Mathews (Covington, Ky.).

The following were discharged on account of wounds: Sergeant John A. McDougall, David S. Howard, Henry D. Burr, Wm. T. Daines, Gregory E. Dibble, Wm. H. Eckler, Seth E. Engle, Edward A. Haight, F. J. Hotchkin, L. M. Jones, Schuyler McFall, Venory Watson, Irwin Shepard, and A. F. Willcox.

For other disabilities the following were discharged: Sergeant Geo. W. Hough, A. T. Billings, H. Brander, A. W. Chapman, H. C. Hayes, M. E. Hillman, C. H. Jones, R. A. Parker, Thomas Parr, R. M. Stiles, H. B. Sturdevant, W. H. Sweezy, L. F. Thompson, and H. H. Webb.

Of Captain Campbell see biographical sketch elsewhere. Lieutenant Mathews was wounded at Antietam and subsequently promoted to the rank of Major. Lieut. Morgan had been made Captain. Sergeant Phillips escaped from a railway train, while a prisoner, and was promoted to a Captaincy and afterward made Lieutenant Colonel of a new regiment; he is now in the organ business in Kalamazoo. Sergeant Safford became Captain and is now a merchant in Grand Haven. Sergeant Hough holds a municipal office in the city of Detroit. Sergeant Waltman was wounded, made his escape from Andersonville prison, had several promotions, graduated at the Normal school and the University, and is now a lawyer in Chicago. Sergeant McDougall is a farmer in Superior. Corporals Wier and Harmon were made Lieutenants. J. M. Brewing (wounded at South Mountain) is farming in Augusta; H. H. Webb in Pittsfield; John Horning and W. H. Sweezy near Manchester, and P. V. Fellows in Sharon. W. H. Brearley is city editor of the Detroit Evening News; Geo. D. Herrick teaches music in Grand Rapids; Herbert Denel and A. T. Billings are in business in Philadelphia; E. A. Haight is President of a university in Indiana; J. M. Wood is principal of a ward school in Chicago; Geo. H. Hopkins is a lawyer, has been Governor's Secretary, and is at present a member of the Michigan Legislature; Irwin Shepard (wounded at battle of the Wilderness) graduated at the Normal and Olivet College, is now Principal of the State Normal school at Winona, Minnesota. Corporal Frederick S. Webb, son of Dr. N. J. Webb, before his death sent an original poem to the Normal Lyceum, which was published in one of the Ypsilanti papers. The following lines are an extract:

"My loved Normal halls! 'neath heaven's blue dome!
 No place I hold dearer; no spot that still brings
 Such tender reflections on memory's wings
 * * * * *
 I was hurt at Antietam; on my forehead I bear
 A wound that a rebel shot gave to me there;
 And now in the hospital, lonesome and weary,
 I spend the long days—Oh, so long and so dreary!
 But that matters little so long as the land
 Is saved from destruction at treason's red hand,—
 That red hand of treason! Oh, God! shall it sweep
 All over our land like a storm o'er the deep?
 Or shall gardens of happiness, nursed in the beams
 Of liberty's sun, and bedewed with the streams
 Of peace and prosperity, yet gladden the sight
 Where war is now waging its desolate fight?"

John H. Marvin, who was killed at Antietam, was married just before the company left Ypsilanti. About a month thereafter his young widowed bride wrote a poem commemorative of his burial, "Down by Potomac's Side," which was published in the Detroit Tribune. It was written Sept. 27, 1862, after her husband breathed his last Sept. 18, the day succeeding the battle of Antietam. We extract two stanzas.

"Ten thousand noble ones laid low
 By bullet, shot and shell.
 Oh, tell me not that my idol one
 In that fearful conflict fell;
 Not that the murderous shell struck down
 My husband brave—my pride;
 Not that his mangled body lies
 Down by Potomac's side.

The battle's o'er,—but he'll ne'er return,
 My darling one—my all.
 'Tis hard that he, so good and pure,
 For his country's sins must fall.
 This earth is dark, and cold, and drear,—
 Oh, would that I had died
 With my brave young hero far away,
 Down by Potomac's side!"

The Normal Lyceum published a series of resolutions honoring in the strongest terms the self-sacrificing patriotism of the fallen heroes of the Normal Company and declaring that the Normal school "in sending forth her young men to preserve our national existence, she graduates them to a higher school, and one to which posterity, not a nerveless race, but millions of freemen, thanking heaven that a noble ancestry was theirs, will look as the conservers of our liberties."

THE SEPULCHERS OF THE WYANDOTTES.

In the early years of the village the settlers looked upon the great burial ground of the Indians. This rude cemetery extended along the west bank of the river, from Catharine street to a line drawn east from Pearl street; it presented a surface of conical hills. The relics of Indian settlement, and the innumerable presents bestowed upon each dead warrior (which, however, did not accompany him to the happy hunting grounds), are so many evidences of Ypsilanti being the favorite home of the tribes in the dim past. Stone hatchets and iron brooches and rings of silver, arrows, arrow-heads, paring knives, skulls, unnumbered skeletons, remain to tell of their occupation, to relate the story of their rise and fall. This ancient burial ground is now concealed by the four important blocks forming the center of the city. The ground on which Mr. Joslin's residence is built was the nucleus of this old cemetery.

As late as May, 1851, and even for three years later, Mr. Joslin's sons disinterred hundreds of relics; other boys joined in the archæological pursuits, and soon the homes of the village were museums of Wyandotte souvenirs.

CEMETERIES OLD AND NEW.

The first cemetery was bounded on the south by the gravel road. This was a rude burial place, unfenced until 1847. There were between 150 and 200 persons buried there. When a motion was made to remove the bodies of the dead to a new cemetery a shout of sacrilege was raised. The first cemetery was deeded by Judge Larzelere to the village in 1830, as a gift.

The second cemetery was at the east end of Ellis street. With additions it comprised nine acres. Its location was so far away from the village of that day, it was judged the city would never extend so far. It is said that over 1,000 persons have been interred there. Five acres were purchased from Mark Norris, in 1842 or '43, for about $200. A subsequent addition of 400 acres was made.

In 1858 Mayor Joslin proposed to buy the grounds for cemetery purposes on the east bank of the Huron, now known as "Highland cemetery." Messrs. Follett, Lambie, Welch, Stuck, Edwards, and Dr. Town were members of the council that year, and co-operated with him; but owing to the dissatisfaction expressed by the people, the subject was allowed to drop.

Highland Cemetery has usurped the burial ground of the village of former days. It has not grown like other places of interment, but sprang into existence at once, and without notice, until now it assumes an extensiveness and funereal beauty which arrests the attention of the traveler and claim the admiration of the citizens. This temporary resting place for the bodies of the dead is on the plateau east of the Huron, and north of the expansion of that river. Its elevated location evidently gained for it the name bestowed upon it by its founders. The monuments are numerous, and some of them are works of high art, marking the sepulchres of the Folletts, Norrises, Grants, Hawkines, Dows, Rexfords, McKinstrys, Moores, Van Cleves. The small monuments placed over the graves of two of Mr. Joslin's children are beautiful in design, and add much to a cemetery already made beautiful by nature. A walk round its winding avenues brings up memories of many of those who were the pioneers of Ypsilanti. At every turn, or drive-way, or walk, some well-known name is perpetuated in enduring marble.

Of all who went forth from this city in defense of the principles and integrity of the Republic, only one or two rest there. The greater number of fallen comrades found graves on the ensanguined fields of Virginia, Tennessee, and Georgia. No tell-tale headstone forms a guiding lamp to mothers, fathers, sisters or brothers who would seek their soldiers' graves, to cover them with garlands, or, perchance, remove the ashes of those they love to this northern soil which nourished them in early years. Highland cemetery is wanting in that one respect, and only in that, to tinge it with a deeper romance.

On laying out this cemetery, Col. Glenn, of Niles, was employed as architect. His design centered in the beautiful confusion of curved and circled paths and drive-ways leading through vistas already formed by the oak groves, and others, at that time prospective. Since Mr. Glenn's labors on the lovely plateau, the cypress, willow, pine and cedar have been added to the groves, the roads and terraces he designed now run through the green parterres, and the capital has been placed upon the plans of the master gardener.

The dedicatory ceremony was performed July 14, 1864; Dr. F. K. Rexford presided. On that occasion Rev. John A. Wilson, Pastor of St. Luke's Church, read the Scriptures; Rev. Geo. P. Tindall offered the prayer; Prof. A. S. Welch delivered the oration; Mayor Edwards, Benjamin Follett and Chauncey Joslin spoke in congratulatory terms of the successful inauguration of the enterprise; the musical programme was carried out under the direction of Prof. Pease. The services were held on block 32.

Elias Norton, who died July 10, 1864, aged 75 years, was buried the day preceding that of dedication. The interment took place on lot 1, block No. 1. This is supposed to be the first grave tenanted by the body of a white man in this cemetery. Mrs. M. A. Dow, who died July 12, 1864, aged 39, was buried on lot 24, block No. 62, July 13. Since that period 546 deeds have been issued. The grounds comprise 40 acres, through which run three miles of driveways and three miles of gravel walks. The gate lodge was erected during the year 1880, at a cost of $2,500. It is a very handsome structure, gotten up in the chalet style of architecture, with all its eaves and cornices, pointed gables, and plain windows. The veranda is peculiarly Swiss, forming a continuation of the roof, and supported by slight pillars springing from a raised platform. On the right of the gateway is a small, tastily constructed building designed for the sexton's office. From the entrance three avenues lead to the cemetery proper. Shade-trees are set along the separating parterres, giving to this portion of the grounds the appearance of a boulevard. The grounds are well ordered, the owners of lots, as well as the sexton, co-operating in their marked attention to the temporary homes of the dead,—the coup d'oeil magnificent, and the whole cemetery a credit to the city, and particularly to its founders.

SCHOOLS OF THE PIONEER PERIOD.

Within two years after the advent of the American pioneers to this section of the State, the school was found in their midst. Previous to 1826, however, children were called together, arranged in classes, and a determined effort made to instill into their young heads an idea of the alphabet; but the success of such a desultory method was so very questionable that a school had to be organized. This was accomplished by Miss Hope Johnson in 1826 at Woodruff's Grove, and by Miss Olive Gorton at Ypsilanti. The ladies are reported to have given all their attention to the pupils, and during the brief term of their career as teachers accomplished as much good as possible. During the summer of 1828, Miss Miriam Brooks undertook the tuition of the little ones of the village. In the winter of 1828-'9, Mrs. Mark Norris devoted her house and time to a number of children whom she instructed. C. Hovey opened a school in 1829, which he conducted for over a year. Miss Ruby Cannon taught a "girl's school" in 1830; Mr. Harwood, desiring to devote a part of his dwelling to school purposes, placed a room therein at the disposal of Miss Cannon and her pupils.

The brick school-house, erected in 1830 by W. W. Harwood, on the east side of the river, was first used for school purposes in 1831. The first teacher who presided there was Miss Laura Vaill. The "Old Red Building," erected at an early day by Mr. Champion, was utilized as a school-house in 1832. This stood south of the west public square. Grove Spencer, who taught an evening class in E. M. Skinner's office, during the preceding 12 months, moved thither in August of that year, and there established his select school. Miss Emily Wead presided over the East-side school in 1833. The "Young Ladies' Select School" was founded in September, 1834, by Miss Ruth Palmer. About this time a night school was projected, which, however, had a very brief existence. The school founded by Miss Palmer was conducted in a room over Mr. Vanderbilt's cabinet shop. Miss Granger succeeded her as Principal, and she, in turn, retired in favor of Miss Clark. Miss A. G. Nichols conducted the East-side school in 1834; Denis Hammond, a very successful teacher, taught school here from 1836 to 1839. In 1837, one of the citizens of the present time—Chaucey Joslin—conducted school in the first district school-house. This building, devoted to school purposes, was that known as the "White school-house," situated on the west side of the village, now occupied by Mr. Cheney. In 1840 Francis Griffin established a class in the session house of the Presbyterian Church, subsequently moved to the "nunnery," a large frame building which stood near Congress street bridge. This educational establishment was a high class school, yet it fell, and its place was supplied at the instance of Messrs. Landreth and Woodruff,—the latter in charge of the higher classes, and the former conducting the elementary departments. In 1854 Landreth moved to Detroit, after which C. Woodruff established the academical school. Rev. L. H. Moore inaugurated the "Ypsilanti Seminary" in 1844. Assisted by Prof. Eaton, N. West, Ed. Fenney, G. P. Tindall, O. Howell, L. Covell, James Duncan, Misses M. Brown, Louisa Brown, Delia Brown, and Harriet Gray, the reverend principal carried out a liberal educational programme until the sale of the building to the School Board in 1848.

A RECORD OF EVENTUALITIES.

That the profession of school-teacher was highly esteemed in those early years becomes evident from the fact that almost every one of them became a practical man or woman, and all succeeded generally in the contest with the obstacle which this world offers to the industrious as something to be conquered. Olive Gorton married Lyman Graves; Miriam Brooks married Rev. Mr. Frazee; Ruby Cannon paid a similar compliment to Mr. Freeman; Laura Vaill united her fortunes with those of Mr. Blackman, of N. Y. Emily Wead found a faithful friend in Salmon Champion; Ruth Parker prized her husband—Rev. Mr. Worthington; Laura Granger discovered that Dr. Smith was her truest lover; Miss Clarke met the Rev. Mr. Murdock to win and retain his affection; Miss A. G. Nichols became the wife of Mr. Buck; in fine, those ladies deserved much happiness, and doubtless received their deserts.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.

Preliminary History.—Hon. John D. Pierce, the first State Superintendent of Public Instruction in Michigan, in his report to the Legislature in 1837, said: "The most perfect organization of the entire school system, in all the varied departments of instruction, must fail of securing the desired results without a sufficient number of competent teachers." To secure this result, he recommended that provision be made by which every teacher of the public schools should have a thorough professional training, and should receive a diploma from some proper board before entering upon the work of teaching. No Normal school had been opened in the United States when this report was written.

The first school of this kind, in this country, was organized at Lexington, Mass., in 1839. Another was commenced at Bridgewater, the same State, in 1840. A third was opened at Westfield in 1844. In December of the same year a Normal school was organized at Albany, N. Y. These four are the only regularly organized Normal schools in the United States whose history extends through more years than the one at Ypsilanti. The recommendations of Supt. Pierce did not produce immediate results.

In 1847 Gov. Felch, in his message to the Legislature, after referring to the "deficiency in the qualification of teachers," goes on to say: "In several of the States, Normal schools, having for their object the qualification of instructors for the great work of education, have been fostered by private munificence and legislative aid, and have been attended with the most beneficial results. Teaching, itself an art, is properly made a subject of instruction. The mission of the teacher demands high qualifications. As the object of his profession is of the greatest importance, so his employment should be considered most honorable, and his efforts be seconded by every friend of the rising generation. It is difficult to say what method, if any of a public character, should be adopted to raise the standard of excellence in this important department, but I cannot refrain from recommending it to your consideration as a subject in which the interests of the public are deeply involved."

Establishment of the Normal School.—The original act for the establishment of the Normal school was approved March 28, 1849, and took immediate effect. This act was amended by another approved March 25, 1850. The first-named act provided that the school should be under the direction of the Board of Education, and the board was empowered to procure a site in or near some village in the State, where it could be done most conveniently, and to erect thereon buildings suitable for such an institution. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of erecting the necessary buildings, and providing books, apparatus, etc., the Legislature appropriated 10 sections of "salt-spring land," and for the support of the school after it should be opened, 15 additional sections of the same land. The amended act provided that the funds received from the sale of the entire 25 sections should constitute an endowment for the support of the school; and that the expenses of erecting buildings should be defrayed from moneys donated by citizens of the place where the school should be located. If the amount received by donations did not prove to be sufficient, the board was authorized to use funds derived from the sale of the salt lands, up to $10,000. About $8,000 were so used.

Considerable competition sprang up to secure the location of the proposed school. Propositions were made to the board by the people of Jackson, Marshall, Niles, Gull Prairie and Ypsilanti. The proposition from Ypsilanti was accepted, and the location was made at that place. The board proceeded immediately to erect a building 55x100 feet and three stories high, at the cost of $15,200, of which the citizens paid $12,000. The building was dedicated with appropriate exercises Oct. 5, 1852. Addresses were made by Hon. J. D. Pierce upon "A perfect school system;" by Hon. Ross Wilkins, upon "The Constitution of the United States and the Duties and Rights of Citizens." Hon. Isaac E. Crary, President of the Board of Education, pronounced a brief formula of dedication. Hon. Chauncey Joslin, in a short address, delivered the commission of his office to the Principal elect, Prof. A. S. Welch, who made an appropriate reply accepting the commission and expressing his views of the character of the duties of the position which he was assuming.

An original "dedication hymn," composed by D. Bethune Duffield for the occasion, was sung. The closing stanza of this hymn is as follows:

"Great God! preserve this sacred fane,
And let thy smiles upon it rest,
For art and science build in vain,
Unless the work the Lord has blessed;
Take it within thine own embrace
And bless it to our land and race."

A teachers' institute followed the dedication. During this institute an incipient organization of the "State Teachers' Association" was made. The attendance at this institute reached the number of 250. Thus, after much effort on the part of the friends of progress, the Michigan State Normal School was finally established.

Some Items of Subsequent History.—In 1853 the Legislature passed an act appropriating to the "endowment fund" of the school certain moneys, not exceeding $30,000, arising from the sale of swamp lands by the general Government, but no advantage to the school came from this act. The permanent endowment fund derived from the sale of "salt-spring lands" amounts to about $69,000, which, held by the State as a trust fund, yields an income of a little more than $4,000 per annum.

October 28, 1859, the original building was destroyed by fire, together with all its contents, except the philosophical and chemical apparatus and a few cases of minerals and insects. Temporary rooms for the use of the school were furnished by the liberality of the citizens of Ypsilanti, so that the sessions of the school were only slightly interrupted by the destruction of the building. The work of rebuilding was entered upon immediately with such vigor that on the 10th day of April, 1860, the school returned to its old quarters. The cost of rebuilding and furnishing was $13,161.54. Of this sum, $8,000 were received from the Hartford Insurance Co., and the balance was paid from the ordinary funds of the school.

In 1864 the Board of Education made an arrangement with the Executive Committee of the State Agricultural Society to erect a building 70x40 and two-stories high above the basement, to be used by the school and to contain the museum of the Agricultural Society. The terms were that the society should contribute $2,000, the citizens of Ypsilanti $1,500, and the Board of Education the balance necessary for the erection of the building. The work was begun and the building enclosed in 1865, but circumstances contributed to discourage the Agricultural Society, and after an expenditure on the part of the society of $3,250, they assigned all their interests in the property to the Board of Education. In 1869 the Legislature appropriated $7,500 to complete the building, and in 1871 reimbursed the Agricultural Society the amount which they had expended. This building was very poorly adapted to school purposes, but has been used to accommodate the practice department of the Normal school since its completion.

During the years 1877 and 1878, a large addition was made to the original main building, which has very greatly increased the facilities of the school for doing its peculiar work. This addition is about 85x85 feet, and three-stories high above the basement. The Legislature, at the session of 1877, appropriated $30,000 to defray the expense of this enlargement. The citizens of Ypsilanti subscribed something over $2,000 for the erection of a tower in connection with the building. The balance of the cost of the addition was paid from the current expense fund of the school.

OFFICERS AND INSTRUCTORS.

The school is under the direct control of the State Board of Education, which, at present, consists of the following persons:— Hon. Witter J. Baxter, President, Jonesville; Hon. Cornelius A. Gower, Secretary, Lansing; Hon. Edgar Rexford, Ypsilanti; Hon. George F. Edwards, Niles. The first Principal was Prof. A. S. Welch, now President of the Iowa Agricultural College. Prof. J. M. B. Sill, now Superintendent of the schools of the city of Detroit, was acting Principal for some time. Prof. D. P. Mayhew was Principal for several years. After his resignation Prof. C. F. R. Bellows was acting Principal for one year, until the election of Prof. Joseph Estabrook to that position. Prof. Estabrook resigned the principalship at the close of the school year 1879-'80, to accept a professorship in Olivet College. The present Principal is Dr. Malcolm MacVicar, for several years at the head of the Normal School in Potsdam, N. Y.

THE UNION SCHOOL.

In making a reference to the "brick hotel," in the foregoing pages, it has been shown how that building was not dedicated to the gods of the hostelry. The purchase of this building by the officers of school district No. 4, viz., Charles Stuck, James Sanders and Philander Hascall, in 1848, was the beginning of a new era in the educational world of Ypsilanti. Rev. Moses S. Hawley was appointed Principal of the institution. E. J. Mills, Prof. O. A. Jackson, Misses Rogers, Rice, Morton, Clayton, Powers, Comstock, Norris, Clapp, and Loomis formed the corps of teachers. The Board of Education exercised a salutary vigilance, and the people were satisfied that the new order of affairs, in this connection, was of a most excellent character. A short time, and a most justifiable ambition seized upon the tax-payers of the district. The school building must be enlarged, the board strengthened, a higher grade established; and no effort was spared which might elevate the school. With this view the Legislature was besought to pass an act enlarging the powers of the Ypsilanti School Board, and the latter then redoubled its efforts. The school districts of the village were attached from time to time; the citizens watched the progress of their schools with joy; the name "Model" school was exchanged for "Union" school; the course of study was improved; a center of learning was established, and the "Union Seminary" of Ypsilanti a fixed institution.

In April, 1853, Rev. Joseph Estabrook was appointed Principal. He with Miss H. N. Cutcheon were appointed the head teachers. The assistant teachers' roll comprised 13 names; the standard of the curriculum was advanced; a new form of school government introduced. Everything pointed to great results.

For a period extending over four years the high expectations of the people in regard to the institution were realized. Even after the conflagration of March 29, 1857, the classes were continued in rooms throughout the city until Aug. 17, 1858, when the new building, dedicated that day, was formally opened to the pupils. The old "Model" school was the first actual "free" school in this State, as it is also said to be the first "graded" school.

The Union school-house, erected in 1857-'8, was a structure at once large and architecturally beautiful. Its entire frontage was a fraction over 120 feet, the height of main building 59 feet; three cupolas surmounted the pile, giving to it a Roman character. The contractors, Messrs. Mitchell and McDuff, carried out the designs of the architects, Messrs. Jordan and Anderson; the people were not slow to admire this admirable school building; they celebrated its inauguration on the same day that gas-light was introduced into this city and the Atlantic cable flashed its first message from Valentia in Ireland to its American terminus. The fire of Dec. 9, 1877, was the annihilator of the joy which that celebration enkindled. During the month of December of that year, the fire-fiend took possession of the school, and in a brief space of time one of the grandest monuments of education known then in Michigan was reduced to a ruin. With an enterprise worthy of the Chicagoans, the citizens rose equal to this misfortune, determined to build a still grander house, and succeeded in raising an educational temple more beautiful than the one destroyed. This new Central school building was inaugurated in 1879 with the following named instructors in charge: Prof. R. W. Putnam, Superintendent; Hubert W. Brown, A. M., Principal; Miss Fanny E. Gray, Assistant; Miss Ida M. Littlefield, in charge of seventh grade; Miss Carrie L. Towner, sixth grade; Mrs. Kittie A. Gilbert and Miss Clara Dole, fifth grade; Miss Fannie Bogardus, fourth grade; Miss Emilie C. Hall, third grade; Miss Ella Joslin, second grade; Miss Emma Barr and Mrs. E. B. Dunham, first grade.

The "grade system" has perfected itself in this school. A twelve-years' course, divided into three parts of four years each, has been established, now known as the Primary, Grammar and High-School courses.

THE WARD SCHOOLS.

There are three schools in the city, together with the Central school, known as the 1st, 4th and 5th ward schools. The first-ward school is attended by children of the colored inhabitants, in charge of whom is one teacher. The fourth-ward school-house was erected a few years ago. There are two teachers here, Mrs. Ellen J. Whitman, in charge of the children belonging to the third and fourth grades, and Miss Susie Gordon, teacher of the first and second classes. The fifth-ward building is the most important of the ward schools. D. W. C. Matthews is the Principal. Miss Jennie Fullerton, Miss Mary E. Carpenter, and Miss Hattie O. Hoffman are the assistant teachers. These schools receive much attention from Superintendent R. W. Putnam and their respective teachers.

The School Board, as now constituted, comprises the following members: Don C. Batchelder, 1882; Charles E. King, Secretary, 1882; Philo Ferrier, 1881; Lambert A. Barnes, Treasurer, 1881; Thomas Ninde, President, 1883; Isaac N. Conklin, 1883.

Standing committees: On Building and Grounds—Messrs. Ferrier, Barnes, and Batchelder; on Heating and Fuel—Messrs. Barnes, Conkling, and Ferrier; on Claims and Accounts—Messrs. Barnes, Conkling, and Ferrier; on Teachers and Text Books—Messrs. Ninde, King, and Batchelder; on Supplies—Messrs. Batchelder, King, and Ferrier.

The financial exhibit bears a high testimony to the ability of the former Board of Education. The estimates for the year to end in September, 1881, are satisfactory.

The value of the buildings devoted to educational purposes within the city is stated to be $150,000, of which $85,000 are credited to the Normal, and $65,000 to the city school buildings.

The estimate for 1880-'81 is set down as follows: Prospective expenditures $13,366.76; resources from primary-school fund, and mill and general tax $13,366.76. This financial report was signed by Thomas Ninde, President, and Charles E. King, Secretary of the board. The statistics show a steady advance in the number of pupils attending the city schools.

Notwithstanding the high character of these schools, there are men and women found who obstruct rather than co-operate. Men who forget these duties, forget also what is due to their children; they do not render all that co-operation which is in their power, and consequently teachers are driven to lose interest in, if not hate, the children of negligent parents, who become incorrigible under home influences. Now, ignorance and a pure federalism cannot dwell in the same house; the Republic decrees that liberty and enlightenment must walk hand in hand; therefore the unfortunate parent who encourages an incorrigible boy, is a foe to the Republic as well as a danger to the community in which he dwells.

THE CHURCHES.

In this city and township the varied forms of Christianity have made great advance indeed. Church buildings have multiplied; they have attained a certain magnificence, until at present this city and township show the spires and cupolas of so many houses of worship that the skeptic is apt to confess the presence of a Christian people. The bells do not now ring out peals of discord, as in time prior to the establishment of liberty, and even after the greatest battle was fought and won. No; the civilizing influence of freedom, the blessings which follow the Republic, have abolished religious bigotry, leaving nature to act the despot in winning the minds of men toward the Christian Church, and the Great Architect to design their hearts for the reception of Christian truths. There is only one powerful influence operating against the Churches. The evil examples of members do more actual injury than all the sophisms of the infidel, the power of the decent Mussulmans, or the armed millions of Celestials could ever accomplish. To correct these abuses, should be the object of the Christians of our day. Each has sufficient work to do, and in performing it, that valuable experience which has resulted in rendering so many men capable of minding their own affairs, will be obtained.

The editor of the Sentinel, speaking on the impropriety of making a church subject to taxation, introduced this tale of olden days: "It is told for a truth that at an early day, in the settlement of this city, the gospel was introduced in the following singular manner. A large number of the pioneers were assembled on some jolly occasion, when a person of unmistakable clerical appearance and garb quietly passed along the near highway. He had passed but a little way when he was discovered, and the shout was raised: 'Halloo, boys, there goes a parson; he is just the man we want; let's catch him.' Like the witches in 'Tam O'Shanter,' the whole crowd 'biled out' after him. The 'parson' took to his heels, no doubt thinking he was to be barbecued, but some of the fleetest youngsters overtook him, and brought him back in triumph. Nor did they allow him to pursue his journey until he had held a service, and given a taste of what, rough as they were, they had prized in their Eastern homes."

The following notices will prove the advances made by the Church as well as the people:

BAPTIST CHURCH.

The first Baptist society organized at Ypsilanti was that in October, 1836, by Elder J. S. Twist, of Ann Arbor. Previous to this year, Messrs. Booth, Powell and Loomis preached to Baptists here. The society of 1836 comprised A. Clawson, Eleanor Clawson, M. Lyon, W. E. Still, Mrs. Still, Talman Brown, Geo. Guthrie, Mrs. Guthrie, Phœbe Guthrie, Melinda Lay, Sily Lay, Hannah Crossett, Phœbe Hiscock, Mary Sabin, John Conant and Charlotte Stewart. The first officers were: Elder John Goff, Pastor; A. Clawson and Matthias Lyon, Deacons, and W. E. Still, Clerk. Elder Samuel Jones succeeded Mr. Goff as pastor, and he became minister in 1838.

In 1839 some doctrinal ideas caused dissention to enter the society; a conciliation was, however, effected. Elder J. Keyes succeeded Rev. Mr. Jones. In 1843 Elder L. H. Moore was called to the pastorate. Under his advice the old Methodist church, a brick house on the east side of the Huron, was purchased, repaired, and converted into a house of worship.

In 1846 the members essayed to raise funds toward building a new church, which resulted in the society contracting with Deacon L. N. Field. In 1847 Elder L. H. Moore, who then was principal of the seminary, placed the chapel of that institution at the disposal of his co-religionists. The new church was completed by Mr. Field, and dedicated June 17, 1847. The services of dedication were performed by Elders Ten Brook and Piper. In October of the same year, the State association held its annual meeting in the new building. Mr. Moore retired from the pastorate and was succeeded by Elder S. A. Taft.

Dec. 23, 1849, the church was destroyed by fire. The society resolved to rebuild, and Sept. 4, 1850, another church was dedicated. This was improved in 1865, and enlarged. In 1874 the society resolved to erect a $30,000 building, which at present stands a monument of the earnestness of the early Baptists here, as well as of their successful contest with serious difficulties.

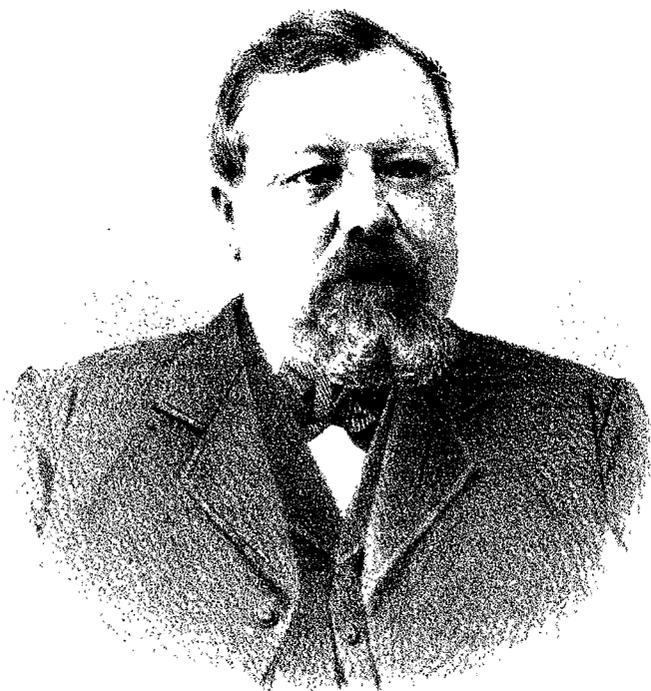

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The history of this Church in Ypsilanti may be carried back into the past over a period of two centuries. In this connection, however, such an inquiry is unnecessary, since in other sections of this work a very full reference is made to the early missionary fathers, whose zeal led them to visit every Indian village within the confines of this peninsula. The impracticability of attaining a true list of the priests who visited Godfroy's settlement from 1809 to 1823, renders an extended account of that period also unnecessary. For many years subsequently the village was visited by Revs. Montard, Cullen and Montcoq. In 1845 a lot was purchased by Rev. Mr. Cullen, on which was built a frame structure, 24x16 feet. The service of the Church was celebrated here once every month for 13 years. In 1856 the next lot was purchased, on which the frame of a large church was erected. This building was completed in 1858 under the direction of Rev. Mr. Lamejje, the first resident pastor. This gentleman had charge of the mission for 14 months, when Rev. Van Jenniss, of Dexter, was appointed to visit this portion of the county once a month. In 1862 Rev. Edward Van Pammell was appointed resident pastor. During his term here another lot was added to the Church property, a parochial house erected and other improvements made. In 1865 he purchased the cemetery grounds; two years later he built a school-house, and in 1870 enlarged the church building. Rev. Father Willigan was pastor in 1871-'2; his successor, Rev. Mr. Murray, was pastor during the three following years, when the Rev. Wm. De Bever took charge of the mission. Since his coming the church has been completed. The interior with its frescoes, candelabra, statues, organ and beautiful altar will compare favorably with any church in the State. This building is a great credit to the small congregation, and even to the citizens. It is said that without the aid of such men as Follett, Joslin, Hawkins and many others, the completion of the building in its present form would have been an impossibility. The soldiers of the 14th Mich. Inf. subscribed over $500 before leaving for the war. In 1880 a residence was purchased for the "Sisters," and preparations made for the building of a large brick school-house, both of which are to be placed at the disposal of the Sisters for educational purposes. The number of families at present belonging to the Church is set down at 125. The congregation numbers about 500.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH of Ypsilanti dates its birth away back in the solemn past, so far back that no one of its first members can be found at this date (1881) to rehearse its primeval story; and while we "gather up the fragments that remain" to us of its inception, we can but feel:

"This place is holy ground:
World, with its cares, away!"

Leopold Slaep

Dr. Pilcher's history makes the record that early in May, 1825, the Rev. Elias Pattee, of the Ohio Conference of the M. E. Church, who was appointed to Detroit circuit, Territory of Michigan, being a man of great zeal and activity, and realizing that immigration was fast pushing Westward, followed, by "blazed trees," through the low lands and swamps, until he came upon the little hamlet bearing the name of Woodruff's Grove. There he found a few families lodged in shanties and rude homes, and in their low estate, he took to them the "bread of life," and comforted them, by leading them to the promises of God in His holy word: "I will never leave thee, never forsake thee."

Returning regularly during that summer, he formed from this little number of immigrants a society, which has ever since been known as the Methodist Episcopal Church of Ypsilanti; it was also the first established in Washtenaw county, and his was the first regular religious service ever held in the county. The Church record carries on the history, naming its preachers, designating its places of worship, recording its struggles,—through all, never once letting go its living, vital existence.

As early as 1831-'2 they commenced building the brick chapel, on the east side of the river. The first structure was very humble, and cost great effort and sacrifices. It had small windows, and plain benches for seats. But in September, 1834, the record says:

At a meeting of the Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Ypsilanti, at the dwelling house of Justus Norris, the following persons were nominated by John Sayer, Preacher in charge, as Trustees of said Church: Levias S. Church, Aaron W. Elmore, G. V. Mooney, Timothy Showerman, Cephas Hawks, jr., Thomas M. Town, and elected by unanimous vote. Justus Norris, Secretary; adjourned to five o'clock.

Board of Trustees met at five o'clock, agreeable to adjournment.

Voted, That we take off the roof of our chapel, and put it on anew.

Voted, That a building committee of three be appointed to superintend the finishing of the chapel.

Voted, That Levias S. Church, Justus Norris and Timothy Showerman, compose the said committee.

Voted, That the building committee cause the furnishing of the house to be done with slips.

Read and approved.

JOSEPH BURT, Chairman.

JUSTUS NORRIS, Secretary.

Trustees of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Ypsilanti met at the grocery store of Justus Norris, agreeable to adjournment, Monday evening, Oct. 27, 1834, and chose standing officers. Dr. T. M. Town, Chairman; Justus Norris, Secretary; and G. V. Moon, Treasurer. Upon proposition of Aaron W. Elmore, that he would put into the east end of the chapel, two 35-light windows, 8x10 glass, for the sum of eight dollars ($8.00), Voted, that he be employed to put them in.

Voted, That this meeting be adjourned to Wednesday evening next.

T. M. TOWN, Chairman.

JUSTUS NORRIS, Secretary.

Thus the recorded history takes us along, step by step, through the struggle of securing means to go onward with the work of finishing the chapel, appointing collectors, soliciting aid and interest in their struggle to erect a house, where the Master of assemblies would meet His people, until the year 1836-'37, before their chapel was completed.

Ypsilanti was designated as the "head of a circuit" until 1837, when it was dignified by conference as a "station," and Wesley J. Mills, of the Central Ohio Conference, was the first stationed minister.

In 1838, Ypsilanti, for the first time, was reported in the minutes of the conference, separate from the country record—and there is given at that time to the Methodist Episcopal Church of the village a membership of 190. The precise number of members when the first class, or society, was organized we cannot determine—probably from five to seven persons composed the whole; 13 years afterward a membership of 190 tells of living, breathing progress!

At this date we quote from the church record:

At a meeting of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held at the meeting-house of said Church, Jan. 31, 1838, for the purpose of electing Trustees, and organizing a Church according to law, Wesley J. Wells, preacher, and Dr. Joel Fairchild, presiding,

Resolved, That we elect three Trustees for said Church.

Resolved, That we elect by ballot.

Upon counting the votes at three separate ballotings it was declared that Hiram Thompson, Asa Rice, and Dr. Joel Fairchild, were duly elected Trustees.

In 1843 the present church edifice was erected corner of Ellis and Washington streets. The brick chapel at this time began to show signs of decay. The foundation not safe, a new place of worship must be found. The Church was not yet out of struggle to live, nor could they assume the expense of erecting a church building suitable for the demands of the growing city. In this extremity Dr. T. M. Town, yet in the prime of his active manhood, stepped forward and assumed the entire responsibility of building the house, and by the sale and rental of pews, received in due time, all the money he had expended. The sacrifices and labor go into the account of the Master of the vineyard, who will call upon each laborer and render unto him his reward!

In 1847 Detroit Annual Conference was held here for the first time, Bishop Morris presiding.

In 1851 was built the lecture room on the west end of the church edifice, but at this date, 1881, is by far too circumscribed in dimensions for the demands of the congregation.

In 1857 Annual Conference was held here again, Bishop Baker presiding.

In 1859 the church edifice was enlarged, and 32 slips added to the audience room.

In 1871 the brick parsonage was built; estimated valuation, $5,000.

In 1873 conference was again held here, Bishop Wiley presiding.

In May, 1875, this Church celebrated its semi-centennial anniversary by holding services in the church for two days, and closing its ceremonies by a public dinner. Beautiful flowers and mottoes of welcome were everywhere as you entered; smiling faces and greetings exchanged by those who had not often met, since earlier days. Among the clergy present who had ministered the word to this people were Elijah H. Pilcher, Alvan Billings, W. H. Brockway, J. H. Pitezal, Seth Reed, F. A. Blades, J. S. Smart, Dr. B. F. Cocker, M. Hickey, J. Stocker, J. M. Fuller. The pulpit was handsomely decorated; above were the words, "What hath God wrought;" on one side, 1825, on the other, 1875. This service did much to bring forth the hidden treasures of the pioneer history of early Methodism in Ypsilanti.

The church building is of wood; the auditorium has 100 slips and will seat 600. Valuation, $12,000. The membership numbers between 300 and 400 persons.

The Sabbath-school numbers, officers and teachers, 28, with a membership of 300 pupils. Present Board of Trustees, Benjamin Thompson, Watson Snyder.

Justus Norris, who, as is shown in the Church record, held the secretaryship of the Board of Trustees from 1831 to 1841, was born in Peachem county, Va., in 1802; married Miss Mary A. Kinne, Oct. 12, 1829, and settled at Ypsilanti one year later. He was accidentally killed, Feb. 11, 1845, leaving a wife and three little ones to mourn over the loss of a husband and a father.

Benjamin Thompson and wife have been active members of this Church since 1838, yet walking together the journey of life. Mr. Thompson has always been a working Church member. Keeping an eye upon the financial interests of the Church, he has deemed it expedient to keep both the church and parsonage well insured. W. B. Clark and family, Wm. Wortly and wife, Watson Snyder, E. Comstock and Mrs. Comstock, Charles Shier and family, Alonzo Bennett and wife, A. Williams and wife, H. A. Weeks, and the family of Drury, with its entire membership, are among the sustaining strength at the present date, having for many years carried on the work that the pioneers made permanent by their sacrifices and labor of love.

We may also mention N. M. Thompson, Wm. Robbins, J. N. Wallace, W. J. Clark, E. B. Drury, Robert L. Geddes, and Edwin C. Warner. Just here it would be a most pleasing task to make mention of all who have labored and sacrificed to build up the Methodist Episcopal Church in Ypsilanti. While that is impossible, we will speak of some among the many whose names, we doubt not, are recorded in the Lamb's book of life:

Elizur Smith, who was the first class-leader. Both himself and wife (who were the parents of Mrs. Asa Rice) were very active and earnest Christian workers. Joseph Burt and wife; Timothy Showerman, who has been known as an active worker for the Church, is now living, at the advanced age of 86 years. He was collector of finances many years, and his wife was a mother in Israel. Dr. Joel Fairchild and family have left a memory fragrant with intelligence and activity for the Church. Mr. and Mrs. Allen Buck, Dr. and Mrs. Town, Mr. and Mrs. Grove Spencer, Judge Compton and wife, James Voorhees and wife, and Mr. and Mrs. Asa Rice and family, have always sustained such a relation to the Church of God as to be considered founders of Methodism in Ypsilanti. Dr. Davis and wife, early supporters of Methodism, William Jarvis and wife also, are yet spared to the Church, having made a faithful journey all along the record. William Jarvis has been one of the class-leaders, and enjoys the confidence and affection of the whole Church.

THE AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH

was organized here about 1855 with a membership of 12. This little congregation built a small house on the site of the present church, in 1856, at a cost of $200. The first members comprised Jesse Stewart and Isa, his wife, Eliza Johnson, and Washington, York. These are at present living in the township. The new church was erected in 1869 at a cost of $1,100, and embraced the first house of worship as erected in 1856. The Rev. P. C. Cooper was pastor, and superintended this building. Reverends Frederick Myers, Jesse Bass, A. T. Hall, John McSmith and Jason Bundy have held the pastorate of the Church from 1856 to the present time. The membership of the Church is 120. There is no debt due, and its affairs are well superintended.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

At an early period in the history of Ypsilanti a few persons who had been brought up in the English Church, met for religious services in a private house, a law office, a hotel, or a school-house, before they became sufficiently strong in numbers and wealth to build a house of worship. In 1830 Rev. Silas Freeman, of Ohio, came here as a missionary. He had several missions under his charge, among which was Ypsilanti. Here he organized a congregation of Episcopalians, and named the Church "St. James." For three years they met in a village hotel; afterward meetings were held in the school-house on the east side of the river, now occupied as a dwelling house by Charles Woodruff. Mr. Freeman resigned the pastorate in 1834, when his successor, Rev. John Bosmond, was appointed. He preached once every month during his pastorate. Rev. Charles Reighly succeeded Mr. Bosmond.

In 1837 the Church was reorganized under the name of "St. Luke's Church," and an association of 16 members was formed. Then began a long and severe struggle to obtain means to build a house of worship. They were finally successful, and July 1, 1838, a church was dedicated. Soon after Mr. Reighly resigned, the pulpit was supplied for a while by Rev. Francis Cummings, of Ann Arbor. In 1840 Rev. Henry Powers arrived at Ypsilanti, and became the rector of St. Luke's Church. He remained in charge of the parish for seven years, and resigned Sept. 1, 1846. For some months afterward the ministers of the neighboring towns visited Ypsilanti, until Rev. John A. Wilson was appointed rector, July 11, 1847. During the summer of that year, the new pastor would walk from Ann Arbor to Ypsilanti to give services here, and returned thither in the same manner.

The vestry in 1847 comprised C. W. Lane, George R. King, Horatio G. Sheldon, John Phillips, and John Vaughn. This body was unorganized, so that Rev. Mr. Wilson came to Ypsilanti at the solicitation of one or more of these gentlemen, and not at the request of a regularly constituted body. In 1848 the members of a new vestry were elected, namely: Francis N. Clark, Geo. W. Gilbert, Lafayette, Platt, Geo. R. King, Signor Worden, Julius Movius, Orrin Carpenter and C. H. Van Cleve. In August, 1848, Erastus Sampson was appointed agent of the vestry to purchase an organ. The instrument cost $650, the same which was removed to give place to the new organ now in use.

In March, 1853, J. W. Van Cleve, C. King and Benjamin Follett were appointed a committee to erect a parsonage. In February, 1854, the work of construction was entered upon, and its completion reported in December following. This house cost $2,100.

In July, 1856, Benjamin Follett, M. Cook and Francis N. Clarke were appointed a committee to superintend the building of an addition to the church, but they determined to erect a structure of large proportions, and with this object, ordered the old church to be razed. In this they had the approval of the congregation. Subsequently plans were furnished by Jordan and Anderson of Detroit, which, being adopted, contracts were entered into with Messrs. Pattee, Griffin, Curtiss, Boyd and Foster. The edifice was completed in June, 1858, and consecrated the 28th of that month. This church is 93 feet from vestibule to chancel, 45 feet in width, with a tower and spire 128 feet in height. The style is plain Gothic. The interior is artistically excellent, and the entire building a monument to those men who took a leading part in its erection. The officers of the Church and society, during the progress of the building, were Rev. John A. Wilson, Rector; Benjamin Follett and George Hill, Wardens; Benjamin Follett, H. G. Sheldon, C. King, F. N. Clarke, J. M. B. Sill, Chauncey Joslin, Geo. Hill, M. A. Parks, M. Cook and J. W. Van Cleve, Vestrymen.

Rev. Mr. Wilson, in his historic sermon preached on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of his pastorate, July 7, 1872, said:

"From the time we entered the new church we have passed along in an even, steady, and more or less successful parish existence. The family, often bereft by death and removal, has gradually enlarged itself down to this time, when the 25th year of the pastorate is rounding to a close. During that quarter of a century he has delivered 2,600 sermons, and perhaps 900 lectures and addresses; 256 persons have been confirmed, and 356 added to the communion. The sum needed to meet the annual expenses is derived from pew rents, Sunday collections, and extra calls, when there is a deficit. This expense for 1871 was not less than $1,800; then the average of $1,000 per year for the last quarter of a century, making $25,000, is not too extravagant. During the same period, the parsonage cost $2,100; cost of erecting church, $15,000; donations, parties and purses in favor of the rector, about $1,000; for missions, alms and other objects of charity and benevolence, $10,245.57, making a total of $53,345.57 for 25 years. The value of the property now owned by the parish is estimated at $20,000, with a trifling debt of $150 or $200."

The following are the officers elected April 2, 1872:—Rev. J. A. Wilson, Pastor; J. W. Van Cleve, Warden; Wm. R. Post, Warden; Samuel Post, Treasurer; W. O. Strong, Secretary; E. F. Uhl, F. P. Bogardus, J. M. Chidister, C. Spencer, D. L. Quirk, and S. H. Demick. Mrs. Uhl, Organist; Robert Wilcey, Sexton.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The history of this Church is intimately connected with that of the city for a period extending over 54 years. In July, 1879, the semi-centennial of its organization was celebrated. D. B. Greene, a member of the Church since 1850, and an elder since 1852, read a sketch of its establishment and progress. From this carefully written review of men and events, connected with the Church of which he is a member, the following is collated:

It appears that during the years 1827-'8 Rev. Wm. Page, of Ann Arbor, and Rev. N. M. Wells, of Detroit, preached occasionally in Ypsilanti, and that Elias M. Skinner sometimes read a sermon.

In July, 1829, a Church was organized, consisting of 12 members, namely:—Clement Loveder, Ruth Loveder, George McDougall, Mary McDougall, Daniel Russell, Cornelia Russell, James Fleming, Martha Fleming, Mary McMath, Roxana McMath, Sarah Whitmore and Joseph Brown.

Before the end of 1829 five more members were added. Of the original members, Mr. and Mrs. McDougall and Roxana (McMath) Derby were living at date of the semi-centennial,—and the first two were present; Mrs. Derby was living at Greenville, Michigan. During the first part of the year the little Church had no pastor, and only occasional preaching services. In the fall of 1829 Rev. Wm. Jones began preaching in Ypsilanti. He was zealous and laborious, but eccentric, walking through the forests. He preached also at Carpenter's Corners, Dixboro and at Stoney Creek. Some revival meetings, held at the house of Dea. E. Carpenter, resulted in several conversions. He closed his labors abruptly in the spring of 1830. The text of his last sermon—"Up! get ye out of this place; for the Lord will destroy it"—showed that he was not hopeful of good from longer staying. In those days the Church was small, and its revenues very limited. Having no house and no means to spare for building one, it made the "old red school-house" its Bethel. Fortunately, immigration brought it many valuable recruits.

Among the number who came in July, 1830, was Rev. Ira M. Wead, its first pastor. He entered at once upon his work, and the little pioneer Church, inspired with his zeal, worked earnestly, and grew rapidly. During the first four years of his ministry 113 were added to the Church and rendered it self-sustaining. Six hundred and fifty dollars from the Home Missionary Society had served to tide the Church over the bar of pioneer weakness and set it fairly afloat. It has many times over returned to the Home Mission treasury the amount it had drawn therefrom. When Rev. Wead took charge of the Church but two or three of its members resided in the village. The remainder were scattered through the adjoining towns, so that the labor of the pastor was largely increased.

In October, 1830, a religious society was organized under Territorial statute called the "First Congregational Society of Ypsilanti." Ezra Carpenter, Elias M. Skinner, Salmon Champion, Timothy Darling, Jacob Bacon and Arden H. Ballard were the first trustees. For two years members were received and dismissed by vote of the Church. In August, 1832, the question, "What form of Church government shall we adopt?" was first formally considered. By a vote of 19 to 4 the Presbyterian form was adopted, and the Church was thence forward known as "The First Presbyterian Church of Ypsilanti." Ezra Carpenter, Mason Hatfield, Jacob Bacon, and James Loomis were the first elders, and from that date a regular sessional record has been kept.

Oct. 5, 1833, members dismissed from this Church were organized into the "Presbyterian Church of Stony Creek." To lose 17 substantial people seemed a serious drain upon a Church only four years old; but the good friendship and subsequent prosperity of the two Churches showed the action wise. The Church in Ypsilanti had seriously felt the need of a more commodious place of worship, and had made some unsuccessful efforts to start the work of building.

In the spring of 1835, P. W. Sage was appointed a committee of ways and means and commissioned to set forward the work of building. Many hindrances were to be overcome; but energy and perseverance won a victory, and a substantial new church was dedicated Nov. 23, 1836. During the years 1838-'43 the Church prospered, and its membership was largely increased. In February, 1844, a second colony of 13 went out from this Church and formed the Presbyterian Church in Canton. In the fall of 1845 the pastor, finding his health impaired by constant and severe labor, decided to suspend work for a time, and with his family spent a year in New England. Rev. H. H. Sanderson supplied the pulpit during the absence of Mr. Wead. In 1847 Mr. Wead was dismissed at his own request, and removing to Chicago, was appointed District Secretary of the A. B. C. F. M. for the Northwest. In September, 1866, finding his strength unequal to further active duty, he returned to Ypsilanti, where he resided until his death, Nov. 30, 1871.

Rev. Edward Marsh occupied the pulpit as stated supply during 1847-'8-'9. At a meeting of the Church held Dec. 13, 1848, a resolution was adopted declaring it expedient to adopt the limited term eldership. To facilitate the change, the existing elders resigned. At a subsequent election Jacob Bacon, Jas. Loomis, John Geddes, John Howland, Thomas S. Hill and Calvin P. Frost were chosen to constitute the new session. The system of term eldership has been continued since that date,—two being elected yearly for a term of three years. In January, 1850, Rev. Ebenezer Cheever, of Tecumseh, was called to the pastorate of the Church, and entered at once upon his work. He continued until February, 1854, when he was dismissed at his own request. Like his predecessor, he returned after his days of active duty were past to spend his last years in Ypsilanti, where he died Dec. 31, 1866. After Mr. Cheever's resignation, Rev. John D. Pierce was engaged as stated supply until a pastor should be called. During¹ the summer of 1854 correspondence was opened with Rev. Gustavus L. Foster, of Clinton, resulting in a call to the pastorate of the Church. He entered upon his duties in October, 1854. During the same fall a subscription was started to secure a site for a new church edifice. The sum of $1,100 was raised and the lots were bought, on which the present church was afterward built.

In January, 1855, a committee was appointed to join with the trustees in procuring plans for a new church, and also to issue a subscription to the building fund. In June, 1856, the committee reported to a meeting of the society, with plans and specifications prepared by Geo. S. Greene, of Detroit, and also making a favorable report in regard to finances. The society deemed the time favorable for building. Mark Norris, W. B. Hewitt and I. N. Conklin were chosen to constitute, with the trustees, a building committee, and were instructed to proceed at once with the building.

June 13, 1856, the corner stakes of the new house were set. On July 29 a contract was signed with John Ferrier for the building of the church. The work progressed satisfactorily, and the house, finished and furnished, was dedicated Sept. 23, 1857. Introductory services by Rev. R. A. Crampton; sermon by Rev. G. L. Foster; prayer by Rev. S. D. Chapin. In the evening of the same day Mr. Foster was duly installed pastor of the Church. Sermon by Rev. G. C. Curtis, of Adrian; installing prayer, Rev. H. Elmer, Chelsea; charge to the pastor, Rev. H. D. Kitchell, Detroit; to the people, by Rev. I. M. Wead, Chicago. The years following were years of prosperity to the Church. Mr. Foster was dismissed at his own request in September, 1862, accepting a call to the Presbyterian Church in Coldwater. Rev. J. Estabrook was engaged as stated supply until a pastor should be called. The times seeming favorable for such a work, E. J. Mills, Wm. Cross and Charles Holmes were appointed a committee to solicit subscriptions for the payment of a debt upon the church. In the meantime Rev. Geo. P. Tindall, of Indianapolis, was invited to visit the Church, with a view to a call. He came in July, 1863, and spent two Sabbaths. A call was extended to him, which he accepted, to enter upon his work here Oct. 1.

During the intervening time 13 persons took letters of dismission with a view to organize a Congregational Church on the east side. These letters were returned, owing to circumstances unfavorable to the success of the enterprise. In October of the same year, the committee on debt reported the same paid, and a surplus of cash and pledges on hand amounting to $1,500, suggesting at the same time that such surplus might be used in the purchase of an organ. This suggestion was accepted, an organ purchased, and a vote of thanks tendered to the committee for the work done. Toward the close of 1863, Prof. Estabrook established the "Young People's Sunday-evening prayer-meeting," which soon passed into the control of the Church, and has been continued since that date.

A reorganization of the Sunday-school, under the advice of Prof. E. L. Ripley, was made in 1858. In October, 1872, Miss Julia M. Bacon, a member of this Church since 1838, having been commissioned by the Presbyterian Board of Missions, for work in India, took leave of the Church in a public meeting, and took her departure for the appointed field of her missionary labors, where she still remains.

Rev. Mr. Tindall asked to be dismissed from this Church in December, 1875, on account of failing health. The Church having concurred in his request, he removed Jan. 1, 1876, accepting a call at Flint. The Church remained without a pastor until October following. In the meantime, during the winter of 1875-'6, a marked religious interest prevailed all the Churches in the city, but none more notably than the Presbyterian. In the absence of a pastor, the Church availed itself in turn of the ministrations of Professors Estabrook and Putnam, Revs. Geo. Duffield, L. M. Hunt, Mr. Graves and J. S. Boyden. Members of the Church also did much earnest work. As a result, over 200 were added to its membership. During these months of labor, the question of securing a pastor was, by common consent, deferred. Subsequently the Church heard in turn three able men.

A call voted to Rev. C. D. Nott, of Davenport, Iowa, was declined because the salary offered was not satisfactory. A call was then voted to Rev. Jno. M. Richmond, of Columbus, Ohio, and accepted by him. He removed to Ypsilanti in October, 1876, and entered at once upon his work. He was duly installed by the Presbytery of Detroit, Nov. 21, 1876, and is still in the successful prosecution of his pastoral work. At the installation, Rev. R. J. Laidlaw preached the sermon. Rev. Dr. Pierson gave the charge to the pastor; Rev. G. P. Tindall, the charge to the people, and Rev. Dr. Duffield offered the installing prayer. Since the Church was organized, the following persons have been Elders, viz.: Ezra Carpenter, Mason Hatfield, Jacob Bacon, James Loomis, Munson Clark, Percival W. Sage, John Geddes, Wm. R. Post, John Howland, Thomas S. Hill, Calvin P. Frost, Elnathan A. Pitkin, Francis K. Rexford, Edwin J. Mills, Charles Holmes, Sullivan M. Cutcheon, Horace Bradley, Harvey S. Bradley, Cornelius N. Ganson, John G. Crane, Daniel B. Green, Ezra D. Lay, Charles Thompson, William Campbell, John Taylor and Edward P. Allen. The last-named six, with the pastor, constitute the present session.

The Church roll bears 627 names, of whom about 500 are resident, 75 non-resident and 52 absent, whose residence is not known.

The pastors have been Rev. Ira M. Wead, Rev. Ebenezer Cheever, Rev. Gustavus L. Foster, Rev. Geo. P. Tindall and Rev. John M. Richmond, pastor at this time. The church is as large and prosperous as any in the city, the Sunday-school well sustained, the affairs of the Church and school well administered, and the church edifice compares favorably with any in the county.

The officers of the society of the Presbyterian Church are F. K. Rexford, Frank Smith, Wm. Campbell, Dr. H. Van Tuyle, D. B. Greene and D. C. Batchelder, Trustees; F. K. Rexford, Treasurer; Wm. Campbell, Clerk; and E. A. Pitkin, Sexton.

The Sabbath-school, Ladies' Missionary Society, Mission Circle, Young People's Society, the Rice Mission Band, the India Workers, and the Little Gleaners are the names of the societies connected with the Church.

Under the administration of Rev. John M. Richmond, the Church and society have made wonderful progress. The officers of the society are men of high position in the community, zealous members of their Church, and earnest in the performance of their duties as officers of the society.

RESUME.

The churches of the city at present comprise nine buildings. The Presbyterian Church is administered by Rev. John Richmond, and the property of the society valued at $25,000; the Episcopal, by Rev. John A. Wilson, at $20,000; the Methodist Episcopal, by Rev. A. F. Bourne, at $20,000; the Catholic, by Rev. Wm. DeBever, at $18,000; the Baptist, by Rev. John H. Scott, at $14,000. The P. Methodist Church property is valued at $3,000; the Lutheran, at $2,000; the African M. E. Church, of which Rev. John Bass is pastor, at $2,000, and the Baptist Mission Church, at $1,000. The value of the property pertaining to the religious societies of the city is $105,000, showing an average of $21.04 to each individual of the 4,990 persons credited to the city by the census officers of 1880.

TEMPERANCE WORKERS IN THE CITY.

The laborers in the field of temperance have not acted the laggard's part; throughout the city and townships, the result of their efforts makes itself manifest. The name of that village which a half century ago was a synonym for a drinking man, has been uplifted, gradually but surely, from the obloquy which surrounds such a notoriety, until now it has reached an enviable position in the ranks of temperate cities. It has been related by one who was present at a temperance revival meeting held in February, 1881, that the working of the temperance organization of Ypsilanti was perfect in detail, wanting only in a minute particular. That one want can be supplied only by the more zealous members becoming a little more discerning. At the meeting referred to, Mr. Bain, of Kentucky, dealt forcibly and logically with the evils of intemperance, and the benign influences of temperance. The lecture was appreciated, no less than 80 men and women signing the pledge roll. During this affecting scene a good man, a philanthropic man, addressed a resolute total abstainer, who had never hitherto attended a temperance meeting, and requested him to sign, actually tried to force him into signing that pledge. Now that aggrieved party would not ignore his great resolution by any qualifying signature for all the world. To reason with him in the presence of many was unwise and impolite.

PHENIX LODGE F. & A. M.

March 4, 1846, pursuant to previous notice, the following members of the Ancient Order of Freemasons in the vicinity of Ypsilanti met at the office of J. Goodell for the purpose of "organizing and obtaining a dispensation for a lodge in the village of Ypsilanti:" Anthony Case, James Collins, Wilkinson Dean, J. Goodell, S. W. Osgood, J. Hornbeck, M. Curtiss, John Van Fossen, Phillip Sines, Eurotas Morton, Luther Bennett, W. B. Hewitt, E. J. Hewitt, W. A. Haynes, W. R. Waldron, Madison Cook.

The first officers elected were: W. M., John Van Fossen; S. W., Edmund Hewitt; J. W., Madison Cook; Secretary, W. B. Hewitt; Treasurer, A. Parkhurst; S. D., E. Grant; J. D., M. A. Haynes; Tyler, W. Dean. A hall was procured in which to hold the meeting, and some years after improved their rooms, and fitted them up for the express use of the lodge. In 1875 or 1876 the first Masonic Institute was held in Ypsilanti, in which several visiting lodges participated. Phoenix Lodge has done a vast amount of work in relieving the wants of the poor and needy, and in advancing the social and moral features of Ypsilanti and vicinity. The following are the present officers: W. M., J. P. Vromen; S. W., P. Carpenter; J. W., H. Stevenson; Treasurer, J. W. Flowers; Secretary, Edmund Hewitt; S. D., J. W. Spoor; J. D., A. H. S. Curtis; Tyler, George Kishlar.

I. O. O. F.

In August, 1845, a petition to the Grand Lodge of Michigan, bearing the signatures of Chauncey Joslin, Benjamin Follett, John W. Van Cleve, Julius Movius, James E. Platt, and Lawrence W. Cole, praying authorization to establish a lodge of the order at Ypsilanti, was acceded to. Subsequently, Wyandotte Lodge, No. 10, was organized and inaugurated Sept. 17, 1845, with Benjamin Follett, N. G.; Alfred A. Hunter, V. G.; Chauncey Joslin, Secretary, and Thomas O. Hill, Treasurer. During the 12 succeeding years this lodge attained a very high position among the lodges of the State. The treasury was prosperous to a high degree; benefits to the ailing members, and widows of deceased members, were conferred in that genial form which almost banished grief from the afflicted household where such fraternal aid extended.

In 1850 the roll of membership numbered 84. The lodge grew in influence and wealth, continued in the paths of progress for some years, until the demon of jealousy and discord presented himself in its halls. From that moment Wyandotte Lodge entered on that career which led to dissolution. In 1857 the roll of membership held only 32 names, although the fund of $1,500 to the credit of the organization at that time pointed out the executive to be strong in business ability and high character, and deserving of a much greater support. Within a period of three years, or in 1860, the variety of ideas existing in its membership caused its disruption,—an organization, which for many years gave promise of much good, was dissolved, the records placed in possession of the Grand Lodge of Michigan, and another little community of friends scattered—a few never to meet again as brothers of the Wyandotte Lodge; others, more fortunate, to witness the revival of Odd Fellowship here, after a social sleep of 18 years.

THE GOOD TEMPLARS.

A lodge of Good Templars was organized in 1865, under the title, "Ypsilanti Lodge, No. 282." Since its organization much good has been effected. The following are the present officers of the society: Wm. McAndrew, W. C. T.; Sadie Spears, W. V. T.; Alfred Humphrey, W. R. S.; Lizzie Smith, W. T.; Harry Opie, W. F. S.; Chris. Dilson, W. M.; Libbie Bonnett, W. I. G.; E. Knapp, W. O. G.; Wm. McAndrew, Fred Humphrey, C. F. Enders, Trustees; Messrs. Walkington and W. F. Pattison, and Misses Mary Leggate, Louise Rowley and Lizzie Smith, delegates to the District Lodge to be held in Detroit.

A. O. U. W.

The Ancient Order of United Workmen is the name of a purely benevolent organization, within the reach of all classes. Its most distinguishing feature is mutual life insurance; and it gives a positive guaranty of $2,000 to the heirs or assigns of a deceased member. The order was introduced into the city of Ypsilanti by the organization of Ypsilanti Lodge, No. 15, Oct. 19, 1877. The charter officers were: D. W. Thompson, P. M. W.; Hiram Batchelder, M. W.; George W. Parsons, G. F.; Murray P. Holmes, O.; Samuel W. Parsons, Rec.; Frank Joslin, R.; James E. Lawrence, F.; Peter W. Carpenter, G.; William H. Guild, I. W., Aaron L. Corey, O. W.; Justin E. Post, M. E.; Henry P. Glover, Chas. W. Mansfield, James N. Wallace, Trustees.

The charter members were: Hiram Batchelder, George W. Parsons, Daniel W. Thompson, Aaron L. Corey, Peter W. Carpenter, Murray P. Holmes, James E. Lawrence, Chas. Smith, William Pattison, Samuel W. Parsons, Henry P. Glover, James N. Wallace, Frank Joslin, William H. Guild, Justin E. Post, Abel C. Stells, Chas. W. Mansfield, Jerome J. Stephenson.

The officers are elected every six months, and from date of organization to the present time the following members have been M. W.: Hiram Batchelder, Peter W. Carpenter, Henry R. Scovill, Martin Cremer.

The present officers for the term ending June 30, 1881, are: E. W. Washburn, jr., M. W.; Jerry H. Whitney, G. F.; Jerome J. Stephenson, O.; Chas. C. Carr, G.; Frank Joslin, R.; Aaron L. Corey, F.; Edmund Hewitt, Rec.; E. W. Moorman, J. W.; Isaac B. Harris, O. W.; Justin E. Post, M. E.; Josiah F. Sanders Hiram Batchelder, John S. Harris, Trustees.

The amount of benefits, or insurance, paid since the organization is $6,000; which was paid to the heirs of the following Brothers: James Henry Brown, Elisha J. Gorton, Jacob C. Ryder; $2,000 each.

OTHER SOCIETIES.

The Mechanics' Mutual Protection Society of Ypsilanti was organized Jan. 18, 1850. For a short time it carried out its programme in a most precise manner, and conferred upon its members a few advantages. Toward the close of 1852, however, the Executive Committee, finding it impossible to carry out the objects of the society, determined to close its career, and consequently, in the spring of 1853, at a general meeting then convened, a resolution, in accordance with this determination, was carried, and the Mechanics' Mutual Protection Association ceased to exist.

The Sons of Temperance organized a society here toward the close of the year 1854. No doubt whatever can exist regarding the good intentions of the originators; but owing to some flaw in the practical workings of the society it lost whatever influence it may have at any time wielded, leaving only the principles, which it essayed to inculcate, as a rich legacy to thinking men.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT, organized some years ago as a voluntary corps, with 40 members, is very efficient, and has been self-sustaining from the first. The company use a Clapp & Jones steamer and two hand engines, the latter rarely being brought out. The building occupied by the department is situated on Huron street, near Congress, is two stories in height and cost $2,000. F. P. Bogardus was the first Foreman, and H. R. Scoville, the present Chief, was appointed by the common council in 1880.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

This most important branch of township history must commend itself to every one. That it necessarily contains much valuable information, and the relation of a series of events, more or less historical, is conceded. Therefore it is considered just and proper that anything which may have a place in the pages devoted to it should be passed lightly over in the foregoing chapters, in order that repetition might be avoided, and the more precise and complete facts intermingled with the always interesting reminiscences generally given in personal sketches.

Dr. H. C. Andrus, physician and surgeon, Ypsilanti, was born in Jefferson county, N. Y., February, 1832. He received his preliminary education in the district schools of New York, and was for a time in attendance at an Eastern academy. For 28 years he has been a successful clairvoyant medium, and has received many flattering testimonials from the recipients of his wonderful healing art. He was married in Ohio, to Olive Beswick, of Vermont. They have 2 children. In 1862 Dr. Andrus enlisted in the army of the Cumberland, and the greater part of the war was stationed at Nashville, Tenn.

George Armstrong (deceased) was born near Geneva, N. Y., and in his youth followed agricultural pursuits. He came to this county, and settled in Lodi tp., where he bought a farm of 200 acres, residing on this property until his death, which occurred in 1868. He is buried on Lodi Plains. Mrs. Armstrong, who still survives, is a resident of Ypsilanti tp., and the mother of 4 children—Frank, who was born in 1856, and in 1877 purchased the "McBain farm" of 87 acres; Clara, born in 1859; Emma, born in 1862, and Georgia, who was born in 1868.

James Arnold (deceased) was a native of Ontario Co., N. Y., where he was born in 1808. He was raised a farmer's boy, and while a resident of New York married Appleby Snyder. He emigrated to Michigan in 1855, and stopped two years at Detroit, where he was engaged in the dry-goods business. He had previously purchased the farm owned by John W. Van Cleve, of Ypsilanti, and in 1857 removed upon it, where he lived until his death. Mr. Arnold once officiated as Deputy Sheriff of Washtenaw county. He died in the year 1879; his wife still survives. There are 6 of their children living—Chester, a resident of Kansas, who married Elizabeth Freer, of New York; Seth, born in New York in 1840, and married Ellen Ward, daughter of Lyman Ward, a pioneer of Michigan; Francis, a resident of Ontario Co., N. Y., who married Idele Steele, of this county; Adeline, wife of William Hankinson, of Ontario Co., N. Y.; Catherine, wife of Charles Ward, of this county; Mary, now Mrs. Henry Nelson, of New York.

C. F. Ashley, M. D., Ypsilanti, was born in the town of Phelps, Ontario Co., N. Y., May 30, 1816. His father, Thomas Ashley, was an early settler in that locality. His antecedents settled in Connecticut at an early day, having received large land grants from the King of England. His mother, Rachel (Woodard) Ashley, was the daughter of Ontario county pioneers. She died when the subject of this sketch was but three years of age, and from that time his home was with a sister who married about the time of his mother's death. His literary education was chiefly received at Lima Seminary, at Lima, N. Y. There he also pursued the study of medicine two years with Dr. William Butler. He then went to a medical college at Fairfield, N. Y., where he passed the school year of 1839-'40, the last session of that institution. The following three years were spent in teaching, and pursuing studies pertaining to medicine. In the fall of 1844 he went to New York city and entered the medical department of the University of the City of New York, from which he graduated in 1845. The next year was spent at his home, in recruiting his health. In 1846 he came to Michigan, and after visiting various places, settled near Wayne, where he remained two years. He then returned to New York and spent some months in reviewing and studying medicine. In 1849 he came to Michigan again, intending to go further West, but was persuaded to locate in Ypsilanti. Since then this city has been his home.

Dr. Ashley served as an Alderman from the first ward for one term, but his profession kept him out of political life thereafter. He is a member of the County Medical Society, and was for some years connected with the State and National Societies. He was a member of the original organization of Odd Fellows in this city, but since its reorganization has not been connected with it. He is a member of Phoenix Lodge and Excelsior Chapter of F. & A. M., of this city, and was for some years a member of Detroit Commandery, No. 1. Reared in the Methodist Episcopal faith, he at the age of 16 united with that Church and has always remained with it. Dr. Ashley is quite a naturalist and has a fine collection of the birds of Michigan, collected and mounted by himself. He is also interested in bee culture and has an apiary of about 70 colonies. A life of kind acts and good deeds has won a warm place for the Doctor in the hearts of a large circle of friends.

Don Carlos Batchelder, of the banking firm of Hemphill, Batchelder & Co. Ypsilanti, was born at Stratford, Orange Co., Vt., July 13, 1834, and was a son of Joseph Batchelder, a farmer of that locality. He became quite proficient as a letterer and carver, and in 1855 went to Janesville, Wis., where he entered in business for himself. In 1859 he returned to Washtenaw county, locating at Ann Arbor. At the commencement of the civil war, he raised a company of men, which was consolidated with another, and he received a commission as Lieutenant of Co. F, 6th Mich. Cav., holding said commission until 1863, when he was obliged to resign on account of ill health. He returned to Ypsilanti, where he has since resided. When the present banking firm was organized, in 1879, Mr. Batchelder became a member, and has since remained in the firm. He married Maria, youngest daughter of Eurotas Morton. Hiram Batchelder, a stockholder and general manager of the Ypsilanti carriage works, was born in Orange county, Vt., Nov. 2, 1827, and resided in his native State until his 23d year. In 1879 he became one of the organizers of the Ypsilanti Carriage Co., and assumed the management of the entire business. Mr. Batchelder married Lucy Ann Smith, daughter of Daniel Smith, a farmer of West Rutland, Vt. Three children have been sent to bless this union—Julia, John H. and Nellie. Charles Fitz Roy Bellows, M. A., C. E., Professor of Mathematics, Michigan State Normal School, Ypsilanti, was born in Charlestown, N. H., Oct. 27, 1832. His ancestors settled about the time of the Revolutionary war near Walpole and the neighboring towns of Charlestown and Bellows Falls, the latter place taking its name from the family.

In 1837 his parents moved to Michigan, and settled upon a farm in the township of Climax, Kalamazoo county, where his father still lives. His mother died in 1864. The subject of this sketch claims the honor of having been brought up upon a farm, serving his full time there to the age of 21. His parents were pioneers, whereby was secured to him the advantage of the discipline which comes of diligence, hard work and plain living—scrubbing to get along in a new country. The first school he attended in the State was a private one, for the accommodation of two or three families, taught by his aunt in her own house. When the school of the district opened he attended there until about 10 years of age, after which he could be spared from the work of the farm only during the winter term of school. At the age of 18 his father sent him to Olivet to attend what was then called the Olivet Institute, now Olivet College. Except the first summer following, he was at this school two years. It was here, under the instruction of Prof. O. Hosford, teacher of mathematics, that he began to exhibit a fondness for mathematical study, and conceived the idea of becoming a teacher of that branch. It was under the hand of this instructor and under influences of Olivet that his mind seemed to take its setting in the direction of his future work.

In the fall of 1852 the State Normal school opened with a teachers' institute of six weeks, which he attended, being present at the dedication of the building and the inauguration of the first Principal of the school, Prof. A. S. Welch.

Following the institute, he engaged to teach for four months the school at Verona, Calhoun Co., at $17 per month and "board around." The following spring he returned to the Normal school and attended during its first regular term, and during a part of the next term, until the time of leaving for Port Huron, where he had been engaged to teach during the winter at $45 per month.

At the close of his engagement at Port Huron he returned to the Normal school, where he remained one year. At the close of this year he married Miss Julia E. Walter, of Clarkston, Mich., with whom he had become acquainted at the Normal school.

At the time of his marriage, under the influence of what seemed a strange desire of his father, he entertained the idea for a time of pursuing the occupation of farming, and accordingly engaged in a partial charge of his father's farm at Climax.

Finding his preference for the work of teaching so strong, he remained upon the farm but a single season, and the following fall he engaged as Principal of the school at Constantine, which was then just opening as a graded school in a new building. After one year at Constantine he was induced to enter upon charge of a combined common school and academy at Mishawaka, Ind., where he remained during five years. Returning then to Constantine he was in charge of the school there the following two years. Having now taught eight years and in the meantime been at work upon one of the courses of study of the University, laying out a portion for completion each year, he determined to go to Ann Arbor and pursue the studies still before him.

Agreeably with his mathematical inclinations he entered the engineering department and was graduated at the end of the year. He had completed a full preparatory course in Latin and Greek at the Normal school, to which he had made considerable addition by private study and teaching, and accordingly five years after his graduation as a civil engineer, the degree of M. A. was conferred upon him by the University.

Following the year spent in study he took charge of the graded school at Decatur, Mich., where he remained three years.

The county superintendency of schools having been inaugurated he was elected as the incumbent of that office for Van Buren county, and in connection with the duties of that position, engaged in the publication of a weekly newspaper at Decatur called the Van Buren County Republican.

The following fall he was appointed Professor of Mathematics in the State Normal School, a position which he still occupies.

Y., arriving there shortly after it was burned by the British, and when there was but one house left standing. In 1818 he, with his brother Robert, came to Michigan. Seven children were born of this union, of whom but 2, Frederick W., and Walter H., now of Ypsilanti, are living. In 1834 he again visited Michigan, and purchased a farm near Ypsilanti. He soon became satisfied that farming was not his forte, and exchanged his farm for the hotel property at Ypsilanti, which for so many years bore his name. Cholera breaking out in 1834, it was not until 1835 that he removed his family to Ypsilanti. In this connection, together with the proprietorship of some of the principal stage routes in the State, he became widely known among the early settlers. Politically, Mr. Hawkins was a Democrat. In 1863 Mr. Hawkins engaged in the hardware trade, and followed it until 1872. The next two years he was in the livery business, and did a large trade in buying and selling horses. In 1874 he became again interested in the old Hawkins House. In the spring of 1879, this building was removed, and he engaged in the building the new Hawkins House, which was opened in September, 1879, and is one of the finest hotels in the State. In public affairs and matters, he has always been interested. He has three times served as an Alderman of the city, and as such, was the most active member in perfecting and improving the city's system of streets. Among his public acts it is but just to say that he organized and raised the money for the Ypsilanti Fair Ground. When the Normal school was built, lack of means had decided the board to have no tower on the building. He opposed it, and by his efforts the money to build it was raised by subscription, and the building embellished by its present sightly tower. He conceived the idea of an opera house, and was a prime mover in securing it, raising with the help of H. M. Curtis $3,000 to start a fund. He retired from that in 1878, and in 1879 established the present banking firm of Hemphill, Batchelder & Co. In 1831 he came to Ypsilanti, where he was engaged in business until a few years since, when he retired to private life. John Howland (deceased) was born in Greenfield, Mass., Jan. 18, 1797, the son of George Howland. He was a direct descendant of the John Howland who came over in the Mayflower, a fact of which he was justly proud. In his youth he was apprenticed to the trade of tanner and currier, which he followed all his life long. During the latter years of his life he traveled extensively in the interest of his trade, over the greater part of Michigan, forming many acquaintances among whom he was known as the "oldest boy on the road." On arriving in Manchester, this county, he made a trip, on foot, to Chicago, on business. He was an active partner in the tannery which he built at Ypsilanti in 1844, under the firm name of J. Howland & Co., the partner being his son, John N., next mentioned.

Sept. 3, 1822, Mr. H. married Isabella Janes, of Northfield, Mass., and moved to Delaware Co., N. Y., residing successively at Walton, Deposit and Canonsville; he lived in Manchester six years, and in the spring of 1843 he moved to Ypsilanti, where he resided over 36 years. Of his 7 children 4 are living and all married, namely: Mrs. Judd, Mrs. Keif, Mrs. Mills and John N. Howland.

An old heirloom in the family is an English gourd, ornamented with a silver plate, on which is inscribed its history. It was used as a powder-horn on the voyage to this country in 1620.

Politically Mr. H. was an ardent Whig and then Republican, and was a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church, in which denomination he was Deacon over 50 years. He died Nov. 23, 1879, aged 82 years and 10 months, leaving his life-long partner and 4 children to mourn his loss. Mr. H. was indeed an estimable man. In business he was energetic and high-minded, and in religion zealous and consistent. Probably no man in Ypsilanti has been so much missed by the community at his death as has been the subject of this sketch.

John N. Howland, son of the foregoing, and now carrying on the tanning and leather business, established at Ypsilanti by his father, was born at Cannonsville, N. Y., Sept. 13, 1830. He was reared to the above business, at which he has been engaged nearly the whole time up to the present. Although Mr. H.'s tannery is in active operation, he buys more leather to supply his customers than is manufactured in his establishment. This leather business was established at an earlier date than any of its kind in Washtenaw county, and it has averaged in years past from $5,000 to $20,000, per year. It is one of the important industries of Ypsilanti.

Mr. Howland was married May 13, 1856, to Miss Sarah Stebbins, of Delaware county, N. Y., and they have had a family of 5 children, only 2 of whom are living,—Carrie and John Augustine, age 14 and 11 years respectively. Politically Mr. Howland is a Republican. He joined the Masonic order when a young man, and continued his connection with this order to the present time, holding various offices in the lodge for many years; he is also a member of the order of the Knights of Honor, Order of United Workmen, etc., etc. Mr. and Mrs. H. have been members of the Presbyterian Church for the past 15 years.

James Hutchinson, retired farmer, was born at Lockport, N. Y., in 1822. The same year, his father started to Michigan, but being tempted by the liberal wages paid on the Erie canal, he remained there until 1835, and then came to Michigan, arriving in June. He then removed to Ypsilanti. The father and son engaged in teaming, often making $10 per day. James remained at home until his 30th year. He then bought 40 acres of land in Canton tp., Wayne Co., where he remained three years. After remaining eight years in Canton tp., he came to Ypsilanti, and teamed for a paper company for five years. After a life of bustling activity, he retired from business, and has since resided at Ypsilanti. He married Mary Carpenter, a native of New York. Of the 3 children born to them, 2 are living—Ida A. and May, both married, the former a resident of Detroit, and the latter of East Tawas, Mich. Frank H. is deceased. His widow, with one son, resides with her brother-in-law.

In 1870 he built the large establishment where he now transacts business, and also a commodious private residence. Mr. Jackson has been connected with the Good Templar Lodge of Ypsilanti for nearly a quarter of a century, and is well known for his integrity and benevolence. He was married in 1848 to Helen J. Henderson, a native of this county. They have 2 children living.

Freeman Jackson, carriage maker and general blacksmith, was born in Herkimer county, N. Y., in 1819. Nine years later his parents removed to Oneida county, remaining until 1836, when they settled in Jefferson county. In this latter place Freeman acquired a first-class knowledge of his trade, which made him one of the most skillful of mechanics. In 1844 he settled in Ypsilanti, where he worked as a journeyman for four years. In 1848 he established his present business, and at present is recognized as a mechanic of no mean ability. He is a good business man, and generosity forms one of his leading traits of character. He was married to Susan Spafford. They have 2 children—1 son and a daughter.

Hon. Chauncey Joslin, Ypsilanti, was born June 28, 1813, at Throopsville, Cayuga Co., N. Y. His parents were Lindsey and Mary (Waite) Joslin. When he was 10 years of age his parents moved to Nunda. He was educated at Temple Hill, Livingston county, his studies consisting of the ordinary English branches, with one year in Latin. When 16 years old he wrote and delivered the first lecture on free schools in the United States, endeavoring to establish the proposition of universal education by universal taxation. This subject was so universally condemned at that time, that the youthful philosopher attempted its advocacy no more. At the age of 17 he enlisted in an independent company of dragoons under promise of election to the office of Fourth Corporal; but failing to secure the office, he resigned and returned home, thus closing his military career. After leaving school, Mr. Joslin engaged in teaching for five years, at the end of which time (1836) he began the study of law with David Bagley, of Nunda. In 1837 he came to Ypsilanti, Mich., and entered the law office of Walter A. Buckbee, with whom he remained one year, studying in the office of Marcus Lane during the succeeding year. He was admitted to the Bar and began to practice in May, 1839. Thenceforward he has devoted his time and energy to his chosen profession, and acquired a large and lucrative practice. In 1843 Mr. Joslin was elected Supervisor from Ypsilanti city; in the fall of the same year to the State Legislature, where he served with marked ability and prevented the legislation designed to reduce the price of the lands devoted to the State University and to the benefit of the primary schools in the State at large. In 1846 he was elected a Justice of the Peace, and re-elected in 1850; in 1851 was appointed a member of the State Board of Education, and the following year elected to serve the short term, which he satisfactorily filled until 1855. During this time the board erected a Normal school building, putting the school into successful operation. In 1852 he was elected Judge of Probate of Washtenaw county, a position which he filled with honor to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. In 1853 he was appointed one of the Commissioners to construct the Sault St. Marie canal, in the upper peninsula of Michigan, and after the completion of the canal, in two years, the commissioners received the credit of having performed the work with less dishonesty than any other of the kind in the United States. In 1858 Mr. Joslin was elected first Mayor of Ypsilanti. He was a member of the School Board for 20 years, resigning in 1870.

Mr. Joslin has ever evinced a deep interest in educational matters, and during his travels throughout the State, it affords him the most intense delight to meet a young man whose educational advantages were traced back to his influence and efforts. Mr. Joslin became identified with the order of Odd Fellows in 1845, continuing in good standing with the society until the order surrendered its charter; he held all the offices in a subordinate lodge, and was a representative to the State Grand Lodge for many years. He was reared in the faith of the Baptist denomination, and still adheres to the religious views of that body, although he is not a member of the Church. He is a member of the Democratic party, and a strict advocate of its principles. He was married Sept. 4, 1841, to Mrs. Eveline A. Lane, widow of Marcus Lane, Esq., his former legal preceptor. She bore him 3 children, 2 of whom are living—Fred C., an assayer, now in California, and Frank, City Clerk of Ypsilanti, and a successful insurance agent. Mrs. Joslin died in 1846, and March 15, 1849, Mr. J., married Sarah M. Silsby. Three children have been the fruit of this latter union—Elvira C., wife of Charles K. Whitman, Esq., of Ypsilanti; Ella, a teacher in the Ypsilanti Union school, and B. Follett. Mr. Joslin is a man of genial and social qualities, being a great lover of fun. He tells a story well, and often in argument makes his best illustrations by an apt quotation or anecdote.

Raphael Kapp, carpenter and joiner, Ypsilanti, was born in Germany in 1829. He was educated in his native land, and in 1852 crossed the Atlantic, first locating at Detroit, Mich., where he learned his trade, and remained four years. He then removed to Ypsilanti, where he has since lived. He was married in Freedom tp., in 1857, to Dorothea Touhel, daughter of Jacob Touhel. They have 2 children—Alfred R., a clerk in the M. C. freight office at Detroit, and Frank A., a prominent pupil of the Ypsilanti high school. Mr. Kapp was Alderman of Ypsilanti from 1876 to 1878.

Simeon T. Keith (deceased), who is well remembered by the citizens of Ypsilanti as a man of sterling worth and integrity, was born in Thompson, Conn., although most of his youthful days were spent in Canandaigua, N.Y. His mature years were passed in the cities of New York and Boston; in the former he was associated for many years in business with the Vermilliers, famous bankers in the early days of New York. The well-known firm were a family of brothers, and their names were a tower of strength in financial and religious circles. Two of them were distinguished clergymen. With such men the best years of Mr. Keith's business life was spent, and he contributed not a little to the success of the great banking-house. Sept. 17, 1843, he was united in marriage to Miss Harriet A. Allen, a daughter of Oliver and Hannah (Peck) Allen, of Providence. Mr. K. was literally a self-made man, liberally educated and a systematic accountant. Owing to ill health he came West to Ypsilanti many years ago, where he invested of his abundant means in the erection and purchase of city property. He died April 4, 1875, and was laid at rest in the city cemetery, a handsome and appropriate monument marking the spot.

Christian Kelly.—On another page of this book will be found the portrait of Mr. Kelly as one of the worthy pioneer settlers in Washtenaw county. His father, John P. Kelly, was born at Berne, Switzerland, in 1780, near the birthplace of the famous William Tell. After passing through his school term, which every child in that country was obliged to attend up to a certain age, he learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed until drafted into the army. Being a good musician, he soon arose to the rank of a Drum-Major, which position he filled until honorably discharged from the service. He then returned to his native town and worked at his trade. In 1807 he married Miss Anna Grosenbecker, of his native town. During the year 1815 he was again called into the military service, and was given a class of 32 boys to learn to drum, among which was his son Christian, the subject of this sketch, who was but six years old.

In 1818, not liking so much forced military life, and being of a "republican spirit," and hearing so many glowing accounts of the freedom and advantages a poor man had in America, he emigrated and settled in Pennsylvania, where he lived some time and worked at blacksmithing. He afterward resided in New Jersey and at Lockport, N. Y., during which time the Erie canal was put through and the famous locks were built. He then returned to Pennsylvania, and in the spring of 1825 moved to Detroit, Mich. In the month of June, 1825, being accompanied by his son Christian, and Lyman Graves, he started on a trip for the purpose of locating land; they took the Indian trail on foot as far as Godfroy's trading post, where Ypsilanti now stands; after prospecting around they finally located on sec 28, Ypsilanti tp., where they erected a log cabin, and then returned to Detroit for their families, household goods, etc., and also for a stock of iron, blacksmith's tools, etc.; there being no wagon road he was obliged to move the goods by flat boats down the Detroit river, around the edge of the lake and up the Huron river, to what was known as Snow's landing, thence across the country as well as they could to their shanty. This trip consumed over a week, rowing, poling and drawing the boat during the day, and tying up at night to a tree, and building a large fire near as a protection against mosquitoes, while in the forest near by was the howling of wild beasts to lull them to sleep!

After becoming settled in their log house, they immediately burnt a coal pit, and erected a blacksmith shop, which was about the first one built and run in Washtenaw county. The next three years was spent working in the shop and clearing and fencing the farm. In 1828 the Government, under an act passed in 1824, built what was called the Detroit & Chicago turnpike, now the gravel road. His business not being very pressing, Mr. K. took a contract on this road. For this purpose he with others rented what was known as the Browning farm, six miles west of Detroit, near which their jobs for which they had contracted were located. Here they moved their families. They bought oxen and equipments, hired a gang of hands and went to work felling the timber and making the road.

John P. Kelly being a man of good education and business habits, the company picked on him as overseer under the superintendent, whose duty it was to see that the jobs were done according to contract, and accept them, etc., between Ypsilanti and Detroit, and report the facts to headquarters. Owing to exposure and hard work while filling this position, he contracted disease, from which he died in October, 1829. His son Christian, whose name heads this biography, had remained at home overseeing the hands up to this, when he succeeded his father. John P. had accumulated considerable property, but through the dishonesty of those who owed the estate money, and the administrators who settled the estate, his family was left nearly penniless. John P. and Anna Kelly had a family of 3 children, as follows: Christian; Anna, who married William Steers, of Wayne county, Mich., and died in 1832, leaving 2 sons, Frank and William; and Mary Maria, who died while crossing the ocean.

Christian Kelly was born in the canton of Berne, Switzerland, Feb. 19, 1809, and came with his parents to this county in 1825; after paying off the indebtedness of his father's estate, he found himself nearly penniless, at the age of 19 years, with a mother and sister looking to him for support. In 1832 he married

Miss Sarah Ann Steere, of Detroit, where she was born in 1812. The spring following, the family returned to their farm on sec. 28, this tp., where he remained until his death, in November, 1869. He and his wife passed through the usual hardships incident to a pioneer life, cleared up a heavily timbered farm, in the meantime hauling all their produce to Detroit for a market, each trip taking a week, with a yoke of oxen.

Christian was drafted into the State militia and served as a musician during the Black Hawk war. He was never too busy or too tired to play when called on, and was generally known through the country as "Kelly, the drummer." He was very fond of the chase, and many were the deer and turkey he brought down with his trusty rifle, to grace his table and replenish his larder. He was very sociable and free-hearted; the "latch-string was always out," and many a belated traveler partook of his hospitality free. He was temperate in all his habits, never using alcoholic spirits or tobacco. He was very peaceable; never had a law-suit in his life. He left quite a valuable property to his family. His children were—Wm. W., who married Miss Laura Murray, of Salem, and now resides in Minnesota; Anna S., wife of Silas Crittenden, of Pittsfield, now of Eaton county, Mich.; Jacob C., deceased; Christian J., who married Miss Ella E. Young, and lives on and owns the old homestead on sec. 28; Nancy J., who married F. W. Horner, of Augusta; Benjamin D., who married Miss Emily Moore, and resides in Ypsilanti tp.; Eliza A., wife of Thos. A. Moore; John P., who married Miss Edna Haverland, of Ypsilanti; Clara L., wife of James C. Moore, and lives on sec. 27; and Emily Alice, wife of Robert G. Young. Christian's widow still survives him and lives with her son at the old homestead.

Christian J. Kelly was born Dec. 6, 1839, on sec. 28, Ypsilanti tp.; he was reared on his father's farm; in 1861 he made a tour of the Western States, finally locating in Minnesota, where he remained two years. He returned home and finally bought a timbered farm on sec. 27, near the old homestead. On his father's death in 1869 he was appointed administrator of the estate and guardian for his two younger sisters, who were minors. In 1870 he bought the old homestead of the heirs and furnished a home for his mother and younger sisters, until his sisters were married and had homes of their own. In 1878 he married Ella Young, of the same town. Her parents were pioneers.

Christian J. and wife have 1 child, a son, Herbert J. Kelly. Mr. K. has filled several offices of trust in his tp., among which is Treasurer, two terms, in all these positions discharging his duties faithfully.

John Kennedy (deceased) was born in Ireland, in 1841. When he was 19 years of age he learned the blacksmith's trade, and immediately afterward started for America. Living there until he was 23 years of age, he came to Ypsilanti, and shortly after went into business on Congress street. He is the oldest butcher in the city; has a slaughter-house at the suburbs, and kills annually a great number of cattle, hogs, etc. His experience has made him a good judge of beef. Mr. Lucking was married in 1853 to Miss Ellen Ford, and has 3 children—George W., Alfred E., a lawyer in Detroit, and Thomas M. He owns the building where he is located, also other city property, being very comfortably situated in life.

Y., and there Mr. Martin followed his trade, that of a bricklayer. Later he went to farming in that county, and in 1838 came to Michigan, and settled in Ypsilanti tp., taking up one 80-acre lot, on which he commenced and continued improvements until 1846, when he enlisted in Capt. Williams' company and engaged in the Mexican war of 1848, in Zachary Taylor's time. This, moreover, was not the first service that John Martin did for his country. In the year 1812 he served in the American army as a butcher, afterward as a commissary. He died in the year 1848, from disease contracted while in the Mexican war. Mrs. Helen McAndrew was born near Glasgow, Scotland. Her father was Thomas Walker, a business man of that country. In her native land Mrs. McAndrew received her elementary education, and in 1849 was united in marriage to Mr. William McAndrew, now in the furniture business in this city. They at once came to America and the first year was passed in New York city and Baltimore, Md., chiefly. In 1849 they came to Ypsilanti, where has since been their home. Mrs. McAndrew had had much to do with sick persons. She saw the need of lady physicians and felt a desire to study and become qualified to practice medicine. She read many works on medicine here, but could not secure an education in the profession in this State. Consequently she had to go to New York, leaving her husband and son, three years old, while she pursued the studies that the schools of her own State would not admit ladies to. She entered New York Hydropathic and Hygienic Institute, a regularly chartered medical college under the direction of the well-known and noted Doctor R. T. Trall, from which she graduated in October, 1855. She at once returned to Ypsilanti, where she has since been in general practice. When the feeling began to grow stronger that women should be admitted to the State University, a little circle was formed here to do what they could to help the good work. Of this number were Mrs. Dr. Gerry and Mrs. McAndrew, who worked long and earnestly, hardly daring to hope to see it completed in their life. The result is well known, and much is due to these noble women for what they did. Mrs. McAndrew is a friend of temperance in every form. Herself and sister, Mrs. King, are at the head of the Band of Hope in this city, numbering about 190 members. She is also a member of the Sons of Temperance and the Women's Christian Temperance Union. A strong worker in this good cause, she hopes to see the day when there will be a strongly enforced prohibitory law in the State of Michigan. For many years she has been an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this city. She is mother of 2 sons, of whom the elder, Thomas, is a rising young business man in this city, and the younger is pursuing studies in the State Normal school.

After the battle of Gettysburg he secured a pass through the Confederate lines and came North. At Washington he was arrested as a spy or dangerous person, and only after considerable difficulty was he released on a sworn parole not to go South of the Philadelphia line during the war. lage. When the county was first organized he was one of the first Supervisors of Ypsilanti, which then included Pittsfield. Mrs. Morton was well known for her social qualities and general intelligence, as well as her many other noble qualities and good cheer with which her many friends and acquaintances have been welcomed. The old settlers, the fathers and mothers of this county, whose industries and economy transformed it from a wilderness to its present honored name and position, are rapidly passing over the river. We give a lengthy reminiscence of Mr. Morton in the history of Ypsilanti. As truly worthy pioneers we give the portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Morton in this history.

After his father's death, James took possession of the homestead, where he remained until 1863, when he rented the farm and removed to Ypsilanti. He was married in 1835, to Amanda Dolph, by whom he has 3 children—Vernelia, Valmore C., who runs the farm, and Valnette. They also have an adopted child, Clara Dolph.

Mark Norris (deceased). "The death of any established citizen held in estimation in the community, makes a pause in the rushing tide of events, and calls the public mind to serious reflection. But now and then one falls, full of years and high in the regard of men, whose disappearance from the scene of action seems to mark the close of an era in local history." Such was the departure of Mark Norris. He was born at Peacham, Vt., in 1796, being one of a family of 14 children, 8 of whom yet survive. At the age of 20 he commenced his eminently useful career by removing to the "Genesee country," then the very extreme border of the American settlements, where he was married in 1820, and remained in the business of merchandising until 1827. Mr. Norris was a Mason, and during the time of the anti-Masonic excitement he removed to Ypsilanti, in the Territory of Michigan. He found the situation of the village congenial, bought property, and in 1828 brought his family on, and made what proved his final settlement. With an accurate foresight of the needs of a new country, he brought in machinery for carding wool and manufacturing cloth, and, in conjunction with William W. Harwood, built the lower dam, and commenced improving the water-power of the pleasant Huron. To this he soon added a stock of goods, and the earliest buildings in Ypsilanti were the scenes of his business and industry. Mr. Norris was Postmaster during most of the time of Jackson's two terms of office. Other public honors were urged upon him; but though of decided political opinions, and ever ready to help the party and to promote the measures which he conscientiously believed to be for the best interests of his country, he resolutely declined all office. His taste preferred busy, unobtrusive usefulness, to prominence in the public eye and ostentatious display. Mr. Norris was an enterprising and energetic man, and up to the time of his death, had probably bought and sold, built and improved, more than any other man in Washtenaw county. He led in all schemes for the religious and intellectual benefit of Ypsilanti. His hospitable home was the headquarters of ministers of all denominations, teachers and other good workers on their way to labor for the good of the people in the wilderness of the West. His doors were always open to receive them and to minister to their wants. His love for children was so intense, that an intimate friend remarked:

"If I could wield the pencil of an artist I would make a picture. I would show an aged pilgrim with furrowed face, in his armed chair, an un murmuring sufferer, patiently awaiting his appointed time. With a tearful eye, just leaning over his shoulder gently, you should see young-woman-hood, with her hand of love carefully arranging the gray locks upon that venerated brow, while just at his feet there would play a noble boy of three summers—a boy whose face should tell him to have been rightly named—a boy of ceaseless activity; but O, of what a love for grandpa! I would make such a picture that you could see nothing else, while it was present; and then I would tell you when I saw its actuality, and the little one that said 'When I get to heaven I will go right off and find grandpa.'" In no part of Mr. Norris' life did those traits of his character which had ever made him loved and respected, appear to better advantage, than when he left out-door usefulness, entered his dwelling for the last time, with a full knowledge of his condition, and sat down to die. During some of the weeks of his painful suffering a recumbent position was impossible. Supported by bolsters, in his easy chair, he awaited in calmness, in cheerfulness even, the arrival of the final message; enduring pain without petulance, and rather administering consolation to others than needing it himself. He departed this life in March, 1862, and his spirit winged its flight to that great beyond, where the "wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

Miss E. A. Oakley, dress-maker and milliner, Ypsilanti, established her dress-making business in 1879, and during the fall of 1880 added a fine stock of millinery. Miss Oakley has gained a large share of the public patronage since embarking in business, all of which she fully deserves.

He worked as a sailor on the vessels of the Northern lakes, and subsequently engaged extensively in the lumber business. In 1873 he purchased the Conklin (now Deubel's) Mills, of Ypsilanti, which he controlled for three years. Soon after the panic of 1873 Mr. Owen invested a large portion of his means in iron and rolling-mill stock, and its later increase in prices added largely to his wealth. In 1879 he bought his present residence at Ypsilanti. He married Anna S. Foot, a lady of fine musical talent. They have 3 children—2 boys and 1 girl.

In 1859 he was married to Miss Mary E. Jacobs, of Guilford, a daughter of a business man there. To them were born 3 sons and 2 daughters, all of whom are living but 1 son. Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Parsons has carried on the photograph business. The work in the operating-room is done by an assistant, but the finishing and printing she does herself. Her business has increased and been generally successful.

He at once entered into partnership with his father, remaining as such for one year. After 15 months' practice at Racine, Wis., he returned to Ypsilanti, where he has built up a fine business. In 1864 he went to Virginia, under the auspices of the Christian Commission. He became a member of the Masonic fraternity in 1865, and is connected with the Knights of Honor and the A. O. U. W. While a resident of the latter place (in 1842) he sustained severe injuries, from which he died the same year. He was married in the East to Lucretia Warren, a native of Connecticut. One son, A. A., jr., was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., and was a soldier in the Mexican war. He died in the service. An older son, B. T., was born in 1824, and grew to manhood in the county, where he has since resided, engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1868 he married Sarah Bentley, of Superior tp. They have 2 children—May and Alta.

Benjamin Thompson, was born in New York State, May 17, 1805, and became one of the first settlers in Ypsilanti. June 20, 1830, he married Mercy S. Emerson, and they have had 5 children, only 1 of whom is living, the next mentioned. For 25 years Mr. Thompson followed millwrighting, and owned a large carriage manufactory.

O. E. Thompson, son of the preceding, house, sign and carriage painter, and dealer in agricultural implements in Ypsilanti. He commenced in 1856 as an humble manufacturer of wagons, and in a few years had quite a corps of workmen in his employ. In 1870 he began to make carriages, and purchased the corner building where he is now located. He made his start as a dealer in 1871, when he began to sell the Jackson wagons, made by Tomlinson & Webster; in 1873 he became a regular dealer in agricultural implements, and he now controls the trade in his line of business. He has prospered and accumulated considerable property. In August, 1880, Mr. Thompson patented a grass-seed sower, which in a short time proved to be superior to any of the older sowers in vogue. This year he will manufacture over 500 of these useful machines. Besides the above business, he annually disposes of more than $1,000 worth of variegated pattern wall-paper.

James Thorn, farmer, Ypsilanti tp., was born in Bucks Co., Pa., in 1794, and in his youth removed to Seneca Co., N. Y., where he learned the potter's trade. In 1835 he located in Monroe Co., Mich., where he bought 160 acres of Government land, the greater part of it being heavily timbered, and through industry and economy became comfortably situated in life. He was married in New York to Anna Chamberlin, who bore him 6 children, 1 of whom, L. E. C., is the only one residing in this township. He was born in New York in 1820, and in 1840 located in Washtenaw county. He is a millwright by trade, and built the Sinclair Mills, at Ann Arbor, and others throughout the State. In 1850 he bought 105 acres of land in Ypsilanti tp., and has increased his farm to 145 acres. He was married Feb. 7, 1842, to Mary Chamberlain. They have 6 children—Martin C., James W., William, Mary C., Edgar W. and Walter D.

Mrs. Thorn's parents, Wells Chamberlin and wife—who started from Livingston county, N. Y., in the spring of 1831, in company with his father-in-law, John Marvin, one daughter, two sons, and three others, 12 in all—came to Buffalo on a two-horse wagon, then by steamer to Detroit. They embarked at night, a storm arose, and morning found the vessel heading back for Buffalo instead of Detroit; they put in at Dunkirk. In crossing the Maumee swamps a dreadful rain-storm prevailed and the young men had to take off their overcoats wherewith to protect the children. They came to a house occupied by a woman and two small children, with no provisions, the man of the house being off a-fishing; the place was also flooded with water, and the emigrant party had to build a bridge in front of the house so that the women and children could get to it. Mrs. Thorn's mother divided her own lunch with these poor children. On arriving at Maumee, Mr. Chamberlin looked up the improvident fishing husband and sent him home. The whole party forded the Maumee river. Here they found a tavern, where they partly dried their clothing and bedding, and slept on their beds on the floor.

Of this party Mrs. Thorn is the only one living, unless it be some of the hired help they had along with them. After remaining at Toledo about two weeks they went on to Detroit, and after a short time to this county, settling about three miles west of Ypsilanti, Pittsfield tp.

Mr. Thorn's son, Martin C., served in the last war, participating in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam within two weeks after enlistment. He enlisted Aug. 9, 1862, in Co. E, 17th Mich. Inf., and was honorably discharged in June, 1865, at Detroit, having served in many battles.

Albert Todd, retired farmer, Ypsilanti, was born in Monroe county, N. Y., and was a son of Wright and Betsy (Denike) Todd. When 23 years of age Mr. Todd began farming on his own account in his native State, and three years after removed to Washtenaw county, Mich., locating in Superior tp., where he bought 240 acres of land, and has erected thereon a substantial residence. He was married in 1823 to Esther A. Jacokes, a native of Rochester, N. Y. She bore him 2 children—Orrin, who resides on the farm, and Etta, who lives at Ypsilanti. Mrs. Todd died in 1873, and in 1875 Mr. Todd married Adele Jacokes, of Ypsilanti. In 1869, Mr. Todd bought property in Ypsilanti, where he has since lived.

C. L. Tuttle (deceased) was born in Pennsylvania in June, 1801. He settled in Ypsilanti tp. in 1828, where Nelson V., his son, was born in 1833. The latter, Aug. 17, 1862, enlisted in Co. B, 4th Reg. Mich. Vol. Inf., and under command of Capt. Gray, of Detroit, proceeded to the front. After a three years' service, he was honorably discharged, and returned to this county. He is a farmer, and resides on the old homestead. He married Mary J. Openo, who died in 1877, leaving 2 children—Henrietta R. and Guy. In July, 1879, Mr. T. married Clara Boutell, a daughter of Hiram and Mary Boutell. They have 1 child, Mary.

Hiram Tuttle was born in Tioga county, Pa., April 3, 1797. Early in life he found employment as a teamster; he moved from Pennsylvania to Ohio, and settled in the near vicinity of Sandusky, where he assisted in the erection of the first wharf in Sandusky city. He was married while residing near Sandusky, to Miss Anna Crane, a daughter of Benjamin Crane, who afterward moved to Washtenaw and lived near Saline. It is authoritatively stated that Mr. Tuttle and Benjamin Woodruff were among the first settlers of this county. During the autumn of 1824 he bought land, now in possession of heirs to the estate. It was purchased from the Government, the deed bearing the signature of President Monroe. Erecting a log house, he began the founding of a Western home. The Indian tribes then were numerous in Southern Michigan, were quite friendly and mingled freely with the whites. On one occasion a squaw traded an old flint musket for a peck of corn, of which Mr. T. was sole proprietor. He died after a long and useful life, in 1862, and seven years later occurred the death of his heroic companion, who had shared with him the hardships of pioneer times. Five children survive them—Burton, who married Caroline Stokes; Chris., who is a resident of this county; also Hiram, a merchant, and John from whom this sketch is obtained, who married Maria Cannon, a daughter of Josiah Cannon, of New York State. Three children were born to the subject of this sketch—Emma, Carrie and Hiram. Mr. Tuttle is a farmer of means, owning 80 acres of land where he now resides, and is one of the heirs to his father's estate, consisting of 248 acres. Anna Tuttle, sister of above, was united in marriage to William Ort.

Loyal Tuttle (deceased) was a native of Pennsylvania, where he was born in 1801, and grew to mature years. In 1825 he moved from Bradford, Pa., to this county, and settled in Ypsilanti tp., where for a time he worked energetically in the clearing of land. In 1828 he married Rachel Huff, a daughter of David and Rachel Huff, who settled in Washtenaw county as early as 1826, and were well and favorably known to the pioneers in this section. In 1829 Mr. Tuttle bought his first farm land, consisting of 80 acres, situated in Sheldon, Wayne Co., which was shortly afterward exchanged for valuable farm land in this tp. The family moved into a log cabin of the usual description, where they lived for a number of years. They now have a more comfortable residence and a valuable farm of 300 acres. There are 8 children—Lucius, who resides upon the homestead; Nelson, Julia M., Joseph K., Emma S., Lucy A., John C. and Mary E.; Mary L. died Aug. 20, 1851, and Ira B., Aug. 11, 1861. Ira enlisted in the 1st Mich. Inf., and died from the effects of cannon-ball concussion at Bull Run. John was also a soldier in the late war. The ancestry of the Tuttle family, who have many interesting relics in their possession, is traced back to the year 1635. Mrs. Tuttle is comfortably situated in life.

John W. Van Cleve, Ypsilanti, was born at Princeton, N. J., A. D. 1812. His father, John Van Cleve, was a physician there. At Princeton, Mr. Van Cleve was educated and passed the first 15 years of his life. In 1826 his father died, and in 1828 he went to Dayton, Ohio, where he was in the store of an uncle about three years. He then went to Philadelphia, where, until 1833, he clerked in a store. From there he went to New York city, where he was likewise employed until 1837. He then came to this city and at once embarked in general mercantile business, at the same time having charge of a milling business here. In 1850 he sold his business and engaged in farming, which he followed for some time. In 1857 he with Mr. Cornwell built a paper-mill, and carried it on under the firm name of Cornwell & Van Cleve until 1864, when he sold his interest to Mr. Cornwell. That mill was the first paper-mill in this city and the beginning of the present great paper business of Ypsilanti. When the Peninsular Paper Company was organized in 1867, he was one of the stockholders, and was made Secretary of the company. Except a short time, he has held that position to the present time. He represented this town as Supervisor five years, during which time the city was set off from the town. Mr. Van Cleve is an Episcopalian and has been a member of St. Luke's Church of this city since 1859. He was also one of the charter members of the first Odd Fellows' Lodge in Ypsilanti, and has been a member of the Masonic fraternity here. In 1834 he was married to Miss Julia Hunter, of New York city, who died in this city Feb. 16, 1879. To them were born 5 sons and 2 daughters, all of whom are living but one son, William, who for a time was Secretary of the Peninsular Paper Company. Of the living children, John W., jr., and Mrs. McKinstry live in this city; Frank H. is a business man at Escanaba, and is land agent at that place for the N. W. R. R.; Charles is located at Port Huron, Mich.; Augustus is in the general ticket office of the M. C. R. R. at Chicago; the other daughter, Mrs. Mary Parrott, is a resident of Dayton, Ohio.

Silas Van Dusen is a native of Dutchess county, N. Y., where he was born in 1807, and where he grew to manhood. He married Hannah Soule, and subsequently worked at shoe-making and farming in Monroe Co., N. Y. He afterward removed to Rochester, and in 1866 to Plymouth, Michigan; thence to Ypsilanti, where for many years he was engaged in the sewing-machine business. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Van Dusen, one of whom is living, Mary L., who received a good musical education at Rochester, and for several years was organist in the Universalist Church of that city. For nine years she has occupied the same position in the Presbyterian Church at Ypsilanti. The elder child, Charles T., was a soldier in the 8th New York Cav., and Orderly Sergeant at beginning of war. He served with marked success through that long and bloody conflict, and was an eye witness of the surrender of Lee, at Appomattox Court-House. He received the discharge of a Captain, and returned to Ypsilanti, where he died in 1874.

Harry H. Walkinton, machine tender at Cornwell Paper-Mills, is a native of Lincolnshire, England. He emigrated to America in 1873, and for six years was a resident of Pennsylvania. He then settled at Ypsilanti, Mich., where he has since resided. He is regarded by his employers as a valuable assistant in the manufacture of paper.

Charles H. Wallace, who died in August, 1877, may be ranked among the pioneers of Washtenaw. He was born at Thelford, Orange Co., Vt., Feb. 11, 1812. In his childhood and near the close of the Revolutionary war, his father left New England, and with multitudes of emigrants settled in the State of New York. In 1832 he came to Washtenaw and settled in the township of Saline, and farms were purchased three miles west of this place. Young Wallace preceded the family and came to Saline in May, 1831. In 1833 he married Miss Eleanor Custing. Mr. W. was Deputy Sheriff, in which office he proved a capable man. In 1853 he was elected Justice of the Peace for four years, and again in 1857 and 1861, and finally, in 1866, as a Magistrate. Two things were noticeable in his administration—avoidance of county expenses, inducing often a settlement without legal notice; and very rarely were his decisions set aside by a higher court; and many widows and orphans have found in him a wise and faithful counsellor. In 1857 his only son, Bradley, died at the age of 21, and September, 1861, Mrs. Wallace died; again death invaded the household, when, in January, 1865, his daughter Sarah passed to her reward. Of his 4 children 2 remain—Mrs. Adeline Williams, of Oxford, Mich., and Mrs. Lucy Ripley, of Chicago. In September, 1862, Mr. Wallace was united in marriage with Mrs. Jennie B. Rice, relict of Hiram Rice. His business during his latter years was extensive and varied, in real estate and the loaning of money. He was more than ordinarily successful.

Edwin Warren, machine tender at Ypsilanti Paper-Mills, was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., in 1844, and is a son of George and Eleanor Warren. Mr. Warren settled at Ann Arbor, Mich., in 1858. On Aug. 10, 1863, in Allegan Co., Mich., he enlisted in Co. A, 3d Mich. Cav., for three years' service. He was connected with the Western divisions of the army, and was mustered out of service at San Antonio, Texas, Feb. 12, 1866. In 1869, he entered the employ of the Ypsilanti Paper Co., where he has since labored. In 1866, in Michigan, he married Elvan White, a daughter of Enoch White. He then proceeded to the lumber regions of the "Wolverine State," where he resided for three years. They have 3 children—Leonard, born Feb. 28, 1870; Marcella, born Feb. 6, 1876, and Myrtle, born Dec. 22, 1878. Mr. Warren's brother, George, an employe of the paper-mill, was born in Washtenaw county, in 1860.

Rev. Ira Mason Weed, Ypsilanti (deceased), was born Jan. 14, 1804, at Hinesburg, Vermont. His parents were John and Dolly (Phelps) Weed. He passed his early life among the hills of Vermont. He prepared for college with his brother-in-law, the Rev. Mr. Johnson, of Hopkinton, N. Y., and entered the sophomore class of the University of Vermont, from which he graduated in 1825. Intending to follow the legal profession, he studied law with Judge Fine, of Ogdensburg, N. Y., one year. During this time he was converted and turned his thoughts toward the ministry. He gave up his legal studies and entered Andover Theological Seminary. In 1829 he was licensed to preach, and in the same year was ordained at Park Street Church, Boston. In May, 1830, he was married to Miss Caroline N. Dulton, of Hillsboro, N. H., and came to this city. In 1834 he was installed Pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Ypsilanti, in which he had ministered four years. In 1847 he went to Chicago, having accepted the position of District Secretary for the Northwest, of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions. This position he retained for 10 years, laying broad foundations for benevolence in Churches and aiding pastors in their work. In 1855 he removed to Waukegan, Ill., and after two years accepted the agency of the educational institution projected at Lake Forest, a suburb of Chicago. In 1862 he went to Granville, Ill., where he served as Pastor four years. He then returned to this city, where he passed his remaining days, ministering occasionally to vacant Churches in this vicinity. Nov. 30, 1871, he passed from this life. Mr. Weed was the first settled pastor in Ypsilanti and helped largely in forming the religious tendencies of the early village. He was a man of warm sympathies and remarkable power in winning the affection of those whose lives were not in accord with his teachings. His religion was that of calm devotion, settled conviction and firm principles. He was a close student of the Bible and a man of prayer. When he died many a man not of his Church felt that he had lost a true friend, and that in truth "a good man is gone." He left a wife, three daughters and a son to mourn his loss. Of these one daughter has since died.

William Wheeler, employed at the Peninsular Paper-Mills, was born in Buckinghamshire, England, in 1831. He was employed in the paper-mills of his native land, and in 1857 settled in Canada. In 1863 he removed to Wayne Co., Mich., and the following year to Ypsilanti, where he has since been employed at his trade. He was married to Lucy A. Wight, and 5 children were born to them, 4 of whom are living. Mrs. Wheeler is a native of Wayne Co., Michigan.

Charles R. Whitman, Prosecuting Attorney of Washtenaw county, was born at South Bend, Ind., Oct. 4, 1847. He is a son of W. G. and Laura G. (French) Whitman. His father was a machinist, and a near neighbor and intimate friend of ex-Vice President Schuyler Colfax. When Charles was 15 years of age his father removed to Chicago, and he was educated in the Chicago schools. In 1864 he went to Ann Arbor, Mich., and in 1866 entered the literary department of the University of Michigan, graduating in 1870 with the degree of M. A. In the fall of 1870 he was employed as Principal of the Ypsilanti Seminary, remaining there one year. In 1872 he was married to Elvira C. Joslin, a daughter of Hon. Chauncey Joslin, of Ypsilanti. The same year he entered the law department of Michigan University, graduating in 1873 with the degree of B. L. He soon after formed a co-partnership with Hon. Chauncey Joslin, in the law business, continuing in that relation until January, 1881, when the firm was dissolved and Mr. Whitman opened an office for himself. In 1874-'7 Mr. Whitman was a member of the Ypsilanti School Board, being Secretary for two years. In 1876 he was elected Circuit Court Commissioner, holding that office for two years. In 1878 he was a candidate for State's Attorney, but being a Democrat and two other candidates in the field, he was defeated. In 1880 he was a member of the Democratic State Committee, and an executive officer of that body. Mr. Whitman was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Washtenaw county in 1880, by a large majority. He is a strong advocate of temperance, and an orator of distinguished ability. He is an Episcopalian, and a Vestryman of St. Luke's Church at Ypsilanti.

J. H. Whitney, in the employ of the Peninsular Paper Co., was born in Massachusetts. In 1872 he was joined in the bonds of holy wedlock to Fanny Barnum. Mr. Whitney is a skillful workman, and a valuable employe of the above named firm.

James H. Wilcox, of the firm of Batchelder & Co., and a son of Willard D. Wilcox (deceased), was born May 27, 1831, in the town of Homer, Cortland Co., N. Y., where he gained his early education, and in 1837 his parents moved to DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y., and there remained until 1850, and finished an academic education and learned the wool-carding and cloth-dressing business. In 1851 he, James, left DeRuyter and went to Rhode Island, and engaged as traveling agent in the book and stationery business, and later returned to New York, and entered hotel business for five years, until 1862, and in 1863 came to Ypsilanti, went into the hotel business, and ran the Wetherbee, now Barton, House. In 1870 he engaged with Batchelder Bros. as traveling salesman, representing their monument business, which position he occupied until 1877, when he formed a partnership with H. Batchelder and Geo. W. Loughridge, which forms the present firm of H. Batchelder & Co. Mr. Wilcox was married Feb. 17, 1867, to Miss Sarah J. Haner, daughter of Chas. P. Haner, a farmer of Augusta tp. They have 1 daughter—Ella M.

Capt. William Wilkinson (deceased), a well known and early resident of this prosperous county, was born at Edinburgh, Scotland, and at an early day crossed the Atlantic ocean, locating in New York State, where he was engaged in merchant tailoring for some time. He came to Ypsilanti some years since and erected a building on Congress street, where he followed his trade for many years. He also built a fine residence. He was married in Scotland to Agnes Henry, a granddaughter of the Earl of Crawford, whose ancestry is traced back to William the Conqueror. Mr. Wilkinson died in 1870, leaving a wife and the following children—William W., a tailor, residing in Ohio; George, first steward on a mail steamer of the Morgan Line, plying between New Orleans and Havana; John L., named in honor of the Earl of Crawford; James, a resident of Ypsilanti; Robert, a merchant of Cincinnati; Mrs. J. B. Campbell, who lives in Ypsilanti.

Judson A. Willson, farmer, Ypsilanti tp., was born in Ontario Co., N. Y., in 1827. His parents were Selleck and Anna (Lee) Willson. Judson was liberally educated, and while a resident of New York married Minerva North, a daughter of Stephen and Esther North. In 1857 Mr. Willson settled in York tp., Washtenaw county, where he bought 127 acres of land. In 1864 he removed to Pittsfield tp., and in 1877 located on his present farm, comprising 102 acres. Mr. Willson and wife have 2 children—Ella, wife of James Forsyth, of Ypsilanti, and Eugene, a native of this county.

Rev. John A. Wilson, D. D., Rector of St. Luke's (Protestant Episcopal) Church, Ypsilanti, was born at Washington, D. C. His parents died when he was a mere child, and having no relatives he has no way of definitely knowing his age. When about eight years of age he went to Baltimore, Md., where he afterward learned a trade, which he found valuable to him in his early life. He attended a self-supporting school on the banks of the Delaware, about 10 miles from Philadelphia, about 15 months, when it broke up. From there he went to Kenyon College at Gambier, Ohio, where he graduated in 1837, and in 1839 graduated at the Theological Seminary. In that year he was ordained to the diaconate of Mount Vernon, Ohio, by Bishop McIlvaine. In 1840 he came to Michigan and was ordained to the priesthood at Detroit, by Bishop McCoskry. His first pastorate was at Pontiac, where he remained until 1846. When he went there, there was no Church at Pontiac, but during his pastorate he gathered a congregation and built a Church. In 1847 he came to this city, where he found a church edifice, but the parish was much disorganized. By careful, persistent labor he gathered together a portion of the former members of the congregation and soon had a thriving, growing Church. From that time to the present he has been the beloved Rector of St. Luke's.

In 1842 he was married to Miss Olivia Chase Edson, of Center Randolph, Vermont. To them have been born 2 sons and 1 daughter; 1 son has died. The living son is now a rising merchant of this city. The daughter is the wife of Captain Clinton Spencer, now Postmaster of Ypsilanti. At the annual commencement in 1878, Dr. Wilson's alma mater conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity.

William Wilson and wife were among the earliest pioneer settlers and most worthy. He was born in the town of Tendering, county of Essex, England, about 60 miles from the city of London, Oct. 2, 1795, and was reared on a farm. At the age of 15 years he was bound out to a butcher, an army contractor; at the age of about 16 years he was taken to London by his employer, Mr. Stebbing, and when about 18, desiring to see more of the world; ran away and shipped as a butcher on the East India Company's cruiser, the Marquis of Ely. While in the service of the East India Company, he visited many parts of the world, including Bengal, China, all along the coast of Africa, Cape of Good Hope, Madagascar, Borneo, etc., etc. After voyaging on the seas for several years he returned to England to visit home, and while walking down the streets in the city of Woolwich he heard some one call his name, when he turned, and it was the man to whom he was apprenticed, and from whom he had run away. After having a sociable talk Mr. Stebbing wanted him to remain with him, but not succeeding in his persuasions, before leaving him, however, he gave Mr. Wilson his indenture papers.

His ship being about ready for another voyage, he again went to sea, and returned the year Bonaparte died. Mr. W. visited the Island of St. Helena during Emperor Napoleon Bonaparte's life, but was not nearer his house than one-fourth of a mile, sentries being placed at that distance around his quarters. The vessel Mr. W. sailed in had all the discipline of a man-of-war, carrying 32 guns, part 32-pounders, long eighteens, cannonades, etc. He participated in various hand-to-hand fights on the sea, receiving several wounds in these affrays while boarding the enemy's vessels. Several scars remain as slight reminders of these affrays, one on the wrist by a cutlass, and one on the upper lip, done with a boarding pike.

After his return from the last voyage he was married to Miss Sophy Cross, a native of Allthorn, county of Essex, Eng. The ceremony was performed October, 1823. April 1, following, Mr. W., with his wife, took passage on the sailing packet, "Wm. Thompson," bound for New York, where they safely arrived in six weeks, or about May 10. They remained some two months, waiting for an uncle, when they came up the Hudson river to Albany, and then by stage to Schenectady, where they took the Erie canal to Lockport, from there to Tonawanda by stage, and thence to Black Rock by boat. Mr. W. had left his wife at Utica. He returned for her and came to Buffalo and thence to Detroit. Here he left his wife and he and his uncle started on a prospecting tour, for the purpose of locating a home. This was during the year 1824. In the fall they visited the north part of Ohio and parts of Canada. He picked out land in Ypsilanti tp., this county, and in the fall of 1825 came with his wife and uncle's family, and settled here on sec. 22, where he bought the northwest quarter for his uncle, from John Shaw, an Irishman, who had erected a log house on the land. He was from Detroit, and it is said he brought nine barrels of whisky, and when he had used that up he was ready to sell his claim, which Mr. W. bought, with improvements, 10 acres being planted to corn and potatoes, for $350.

Mr. W. went to Detroit to have the deeds made out and signed. Mrs. Shaw had promised before this to sign it. When he called for her signature (her husband had already done so), Mr. W. hunted her up and asked her to sign. She said she would not, "at all, at all," and wanted a pound of tea for doing so, which he provided and everything was all right.

Soon afterward he entered 160 acres on sec. 21. In the fall of 1827 he built a log house on this place and moved into it. Mr. W. and uncle owned at one time about one section of land in this neighborhood.

Mr. Wilson lived here with his wife from October, 1827, to November, 1866,—a period of about 40 years,—and moved to Ypsilanti, where he has resided ever since. During the above named time Mr. W. cleared up about 250 acres of land, nearly all heavily timbered. During his early life in the county, many Indians lived here, and often they called and received food and lodging at Mr. W.'s house, spreading their blankets before the fire-place on which they would sleep.

In 1840 or '41 Mr. Wilson erected a frame house and buildings on sec. 21. This building still stands. He was quite fond of the chase, and killed all kinds of game, panthers that were large enough to carry off a yearling deer. One day he killed three bears. As a slight sample of endurance, in an early day, having no other conveyance, he shouldered three bushels of wheat and carried the same to Ypsilanti to mill, and returned the same way; and although now 86 years of age, is hale and hearty, with no tremor to his hand.

Mr. W. joined the Masonic fraternity 60 years ago, and has kept up his connection with the order to the present time. He now belongs to Phoenix Lodge. No. 13, and has held many offices in the same.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson lived together for nearly 57 years, when she was called to leave her life-time friend and husband, to go to the other shore. She departed this life on Saturday, the last day of October, 1880, aged about 77 years.

Mr. W. has always been a Democrat in politics, and for many years served the township as Commissioner of Highways.

The portraits of Wm. Wilson and his wife, Sophy, appear on another page. His is from a photograph taken at the age of 84, and hers about 77.

Wilson & Rathfon Bros. are the leading clothiers of Ypsilanti. They established their present business in 1879, and have had a steadily increasing trade since that period. They have also, in connection, a cutting department, presided over by W. J. Crouch, a skilled workman.

Abraham Wolsey ranks among the more valued workmen employed by the Peninsular Paper Mills. He was born at Norfolk, England, in 1830. In 1837 he accompanied his parents to Ypsilanti, Mich., where he has since resided. From early years he has been an attache of the mill, and in 1871 was married to Carrie Fuller.

Charles S. Woodard, Ypsilanti, was born in the town of Rose, Wayne Co., N. Y., in October 1821. His father brought his family here in 1830, and for many years the home was in Pittsfield. There Mr. Woodard was reared. He attended school there for a time, but his education was chiefly acquired in Ypsilanti and was the result of his own work and exertions. When about 17, he began to study with the intention of becoming a surveyor. When about 19, he began to practice surveying in this county. He has done a vast amount of surveying in this county and city. Since 1842 he has regarded Ypsilanti as his home. In 1848 he entered the Government service as surveyor, and until 1851 was engaged in the upper and lower peninsula of this State. Since 1851, has devoted his time to civil engineering. He has worked largely on railroads. Among his first work was surveying on the Chicago & Northwestern. He was next employed on the western end of the Michigan Central, running into Chicago. For a number of years he was chief engineer of the New Albany & Salem, running from Michigan City south in Indiana. When the Jackson, Lansing & Saginaw R. R. was built, he was chief engineer of the division extending from Jackson to Bay City. Later held the same position in the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw R. R., which was really the southern extension of the former road. This position he held until 1870. Since then he has been connected with various railroads in various positions. Mr. Woodard has been County Surveyor a number of terms, but his business and inclinations have kept him out of politics. Was a member of the early lodges both of Masons and Odd Fellows, but for some years has not been connected with either. Is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church of this city. He was married in 1854 to Miss Elizabeth Emrick, of Dayton, Ohio. To them have been born 2 daughters, both of whom are living.

Benjamin Woodruff was born March 8, 1815, at Middlesex, Yates Co., and came to Michigan in 1834, settling in Monroe county. His wife, Ruth Woodruff (nee Fuller) was born at the same place in 1819.

Alva Worden, of the firm of Worden Bros., manufacturers of whip sockets, Ypsilanti, was born in Pembroke tp., Genesee Co., N. Y., March 24, 1820. His father, John S. Worden, sr. (dec.), came to Michigan in 1827, locating 160 acres of land in Superior tp., where he lived until 1860; then removed to Ypsilanti, and died Oct. 10, 1875. Alva received his schooling in Superior tp., and when young, learned the tinner's trade. In 1843 he entered into business at Ypsilanti, which he continued for 20 years. After two years' retirement, he again engaged in the same business, but retired again in 1869. He was married Dec. 29, 1868, to Adella R. Havens, daughter of G. R. Havens, of Ypsilanti. They have 2 children—Joseph and Frank.

John S. Worden (deceased) was born in Connecticut, and at an early period moved to Steuben county, New York, where he followed agricultural pursuits until his location West. He had married, while a resident of the East, Miss Sophia Rohrbeck, of Massachusetts, who was born in 1790. Accompanied by his estimable wife and 8 children, during the autumn of 1826, after some weeks of vexatious delay in travel, he located in Superior tp., upon a farm of 200 acres, which was purchased from the Government at 10 shillings per acre. The pioneers preceding him to this favored locality were the Emericks, McCormicks, Harwoods and others. Mr. Worden became a wealthy man for the period of time in which he lived. He was unassuming in disposition, and had a large circle of acquaintances and friends, and merited the respect of all with whom he was brought in contact. Oct. 4, 1866, occurred the death of Mrs. Worden, and in 1873 the remains of John S. Worden found a last resting place in the city cemetery of Ypsilanti. He left a family of 5 children, namely: Mary Ann, a resident of Vermont, who married Fred Andrews; Samantha married Eleazer Price, a physician; Alva married Adella Havens, of Galesburg; he was born at Batavia N. Y., in 1826, and grew up amid pioneer associations in this county. For 18 years he was an honored and systematic merchant of Livingston county, and became more than ordinarily successful in life. Disposing of his business enterprise in Livingston county, he came to this city, where he entered actively into business, in connection with his brother, in the manufacture of whip sockets. This also proved a financial success. In the midst of great prosperity Mr. W. was called to a brighter and better life, in 1876. To the care of his benevolent wife he left a family of 2 children—Alva, jr., and Eddie C. Mr. Worden was for many years Postmaster of Hartland, Livingston county, and also officiated as Notary Public.

John S. Worden, jr., of the firm of A. Worden & Bro., manufacturers of whip sockets, Ypsilanti, was born in Superior tp., Washtenaw county, May 12, 1829. He received his education in the district schools, and in 1856 went to Hartland Center, Wayne county, Mich., where, in connection with his brother Chauncey, he established a general merchandise store. They continued in this relation until 1859, when John S. sold his interest to his brother, and retired from business until 1868, when the firm of A. Worden & Bros. was formed, consisting of Alva, John S. and Chauncey Worden. Mr. Worden was married May 28, 1872, to Mary A. Buck, daughter of Oliver Buck, a farmer of Ontario, Canada. They have 1 son, William G.

Lyman Wyard, one of the oldest and most respected pioneers of Ypsilanti tp., was born Oct. 4, 1804, at Burlington, Conn., and was son of John Wyard, a saddle-tack maker of that place, where his father died. His mother married a second husband and moved to Onondaga county, N. Y., where Lyman received an early education. They moved again to East Tavern, 18 miles south of Rochester, N. Y., where he finished his schooling and lived until 1826. He then moved to Michigan and purchased 80 acres of land on sec. 11, Ypsilanti tp., where he now lives, and to which property he has added from time to time, until he now owns 300 acres. In 1830 he married Hannah Field, daughter of Darius Field, a farmer of Boomfield, Oneida county, N. Y., May 24, 1805, and have 3 children—Charles G., Wyard; Helen C., now wife of Seth Arnold, of Ypsilanti city. Charles Griswold was born on the old homestead June 25, 1835, and received his education at Ypsilanti Seminary. Afterward, from time to time, clerked in mercantile houses of Ypsilanti, and later, in Detroit. Sept. 1, 1858, he married Mrs. Catharine Arnold Ackley, daughter of James Arnold, and widow of Wm. G. Ackley, and purchased of E. D. Lay the farm known as the Colby Stand, which was taken from the Government by Zolva Bowen in 1827, and upon which he erected and for several years conducted a "Traveler's Home," a place where the weary travelers between Detroit and Chicago were wont to stop for rest and refreshments. This place was later kept by —Colby, and afterward sold to E. D. Lay. The hotel has been supplanted by a commodious frame house, and the premises otherwise improved under Mr. Wyard's supervision. Mr. Wyard has for 20 years past, at frequent intervals, been employed by the Michigan Central R. Co., he being an efficient locomotive engineer. They have 2 sons—Lyman E. and Seth Arnold.

George D. Wyard, the second son of Lyman Wyard, was born Nov. 17, 1837, and received his schooling at Ypsilanti Seminary, and settled on 40 acres adjoining the Wyard homestead, to which property he has added until now he owns 352 acres of Washtenaw's most productive soil. The improvements on this farm are most complete, consisting of good fences, granary, carriage-house, stock-sheds, and a modern brick residence of liberal dimensions and attractive appearance. Mr. Wyard has also established on, and in a measure connected with, his farming business, an enterprise that has developed into an extensive cider and cider vinegar business, which now receives a liberal patronage throughout the Northern, Eastern and Western States, a full account of which appears elsewhere in this volume, in connection with the manufacturing interests of Ypsilanti. Mr. Wyard married Miss Ann E. Wilkinson, daughter of James Wilkinson, a farmer of Oneida county, N. Y., Sept. 18, 1860, and they have 6 children—George W., Frank H., Everett J., Walter J., Robert G. and Gracie.

Stephen C. Yates, one of the more respected citizens of this region, was born in Orleans Co., N. Y., in 1827, and is a son of Joseph C. and Mary Yates. Stephen learned the painter's and glazier's trade, and while living in New York married Harriet A., daughter of Joseph and Jane Clow, natives of Monroe Co., N. Y. In 1855 Mr. Yates settled at Ypsilanti, and soon after took charge of toll-gate No. 6, remaining there nine years, and since that time has been in charge of toll-gate No. 7. He was once Treasurer of Ypsilanti tp. Mr. Yates and wife have 4 children—Alice L., Cora, Clarence S. and Clayton A.

W. Irving Yeackley is a native of Ontario county, N. Y., where he was born in 1833, son of Adam and Gertrude (Snyder) Yeackley. At the age of 17 he came to Michigan and first located at Battle Creek, where he found employment as a journeyman harnessmaker three years, when he came to Ypsilanti, and here he worked as a journeyman. About this time his parents moved to Ypsilanti tp., and purchased a portion of the farm where he now lives, and he changed his vocation to that of farming, taking charge of the homestead. In 1873 he was married to Mrs. Nancy E. Gilbert, daughter of John White, a native of Scotland. In 1869, Mr. Y. was elected Supervisor, holding the position creditably and successively 10 years. In 1857 he was elected Justice of the Peace, which he still retains. Adam Yeackley died in 1874, in the 74th year of his age, and was laid at rest in the Ypsilanti cemetery, an appropriate monument marking the spot.

Lee Yost, farmer and ex-commission merchant, was born at Fayette, N. Y., Jan. 23, 1815, and is a son of Caspar and Rachel Yost, the former of whom was a millwright, and built the first mills at Waterloo and Seneca, N. Y. He was Captain of a militia company, and died at Fayette, N. Y. Five children were born to this union—William, Chester, Enoch, Lucinda and Lee. The latter grew to manhood in New York, and there married Susan R. Marshall. They have 5 children—Mrs. Florence Dunham, of Hudson, Mich.; William H., a grain-buyer of Kansas; Mrs. J. S. Conklin, of Ypsilanti; Matilda F., who resides at home, and Charles L., a resident of Detroit. Mr. Yost has very acceptably filled the position of Supervisor of Ypsilanti for 12 years.

PITTSFIELD TOWNSHIP.

The town of Pittsfield was organized according to the act of the Territorial Council, in 1834, its first town meeting being held in April of that year. Previous to that organization, the township now composing the town was attached to the following towns: Two and one-half miles on the north was connected with Ann Arbor; the west half of the remainder to Saline, and the east half to Ypsilanti.

Previous to the organization of the town, a meeting was held at the McCracken school-house, for the purpose of selecting a name. At this meeting there were 13 persons present, each of whom chose the name of the town from which he had come. Some of the names proposed were too long to suit the majority; so, on motion of Ezra Carpenter, the name of Pitt was selected. This name was retained until between 1835 and 1840, when it was changed to Pittsfield.

another located on the southeast corner of section 2, N. P. Parsons, Postmaster. This office was also short-lived. As soon as the railroad came west of Ypsilanti, the stage on the south Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti road stopped running, and the postoffice was then moved to section 23, John Hoy, postmaster. Mr. Hoy finally resigned and the town was without a postoffice about 18 years. On the completion of the Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad in 1878, an office was established at the junction, known as the Pittsfield Junction.

PIONEERS.

The following brief personal mention of many of the pioneers and pioneer families of Pittsfield were collected and prepared by the Historical Committee: Messrs. Horace Carpenter, David Depue and Randall Boss. Almost all these spoken of below have gone to that country that is always new, although the trials and hardships of pioneer life are never experienced. The committee deserves great credit for the diligence exercised in collecting the material for these sketches.

John Hitchcock located on section 4, June 4, 1824. His family consisted of himself and wife, his father and mother, four small children, and a very aged lady, the grandmother of Mrs. Hitchcock. Mr. Hitchcock built a log house in the fall of the year of his emigration to this county. It was a noble structure of the kind, standing near the stone school-house, on a beautiful eminence, and pleasant landscape surroundings. The corners are yet erect; The "chinkings" plastered over between the venerable oak logs with snow-white mortar, which gave it a neat and tidy appearance. Dwellings of this kind have long since disappeared in its vicinity and the old pioneers who pass this house are reminded of the pleasures they enjoyed while living in an old log house at home.

Burroughs Holmes, son of Thomas and Catherine Rosekrans Holmes, was born at Newburg, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1792. Feb. 2, 1817. He was married to Polly Denison, in the town of Bern, Albany Co., N. Y. After residing successively at Royalton, Niagara Co., Berne, Albany Co., and Saratoga Springs, Saratoga Co., N. Here he lived, with the exception of a few years spent in the city of Ann Arbor toward the close of his life, until his death, which occurred in Pittsfield March 8, 1860. Mr. Holmes was a man of very active mind, more than average intelligence, good judgment, sterling worth, and highly esteemed by all who knew him. His widow, who was the daughter of Ebenezer and Elizabeth Denison, and was born in the town of Berne, Albany Co., N. Y., on the 12th day of April, 1797, survived him until Oct. 20, 1868, when she died at Greenbush, N. Y., where she was visiting at the time. She was married in New York in 1835, to Stephen Norgate, who was born in England in 1806. They emigrated to Michigan in 1836, and settled in Pittsfield tp., where Mr. Norgate passed his life, and died April 8, 1879. Mrs. Norgate still resides in the old homestead.

They have two sons and one daughter, residents of Detroit, Mich. Mr. Wood was very successful in accumulating property, and gave much thought to horticulture, as his fine orchards abundantly proved. His farm was called the "Peacock Valley," from the large number of those fowls always kept on the premises. During a religious revival in 1843, Mr. Wood united with the Presbyterian Church at Saline. In 1846 he was appointed ruling elder in that body, which position he acceptably filled till death. In 1844 he was elected to represent Michigan in the Legislative Halls of Congress. His duties were performed in his usual quiet, practical manner, desiring ever that justice and truth should triumph. He died Sept. 21, 1865, in the 61st year of his age.

SCHOOLS.

To Pittsfield belongs the honor of having erected the first school-house in Washtenaw county. It was located on the northwest quarter of section 11. It was erected in the summer of 1825 and was built of logs. In 1876 several of the old logs were lying upon the lot where the house once stood. They were taken, sawed up, and converted into canes, many of which are now owned by men and women, who, as boys and girls, received their regular floggings in connection with and as part of their education in that old school-house. On the completion of the new building, a Sunday-school and a week-day school, instituted by Miss Harriet Parsons, was transferred from the shades of a venerable oak that had withstood the storms of a hundred years, to the new school-house.

The settlement of boundaries of school districts was one of the most difficult things to adjust. A movement in one part of the town would interfere with the prospects in other parts, thus setting in motion the diversified interests of all. The question finally became settled, resulting in the formation of three whole and six fractional districts.

Fractional district No. 1 is composed of the whole of sections 1, 2 and 11, and parts of sections 10, 12, 13 and 14, with a portion of Ypsilanti. The school-house is located on the line between sections 11 and 12, and is valued at $850. This district was organized Nov. 25, 1837. J. L. Wallace is the present director.

Fractional district No. 7 is composed of all of section No. 3, and parts of sections 4, 9, 10 and 16, with a part of Ann Arbor. The school-house is situated on the southwest quarter of section 3, and is valued at $550. Frederick Hutzel is the present director.

All of sections 5, 6, 7 and 8, with parts of sections 4, 9, 16, 17 and 18, compose fractional district No. 3, together with a small portion of Ann Arbor and Lodi. The district is quite large, the school-house being on the southeast quarter of section 8, and is valued at $1,000. Henry Paul is the present director.

The first school in this district was taught by Miss Susan Olds, during the summer of 1832, in the old "Mrs. Mills' house," on the opposite side of the road where stands the present school-house. School was taught in four different localities before a school-house was built. The first school-house was built of logs, in 1835, and stood on the north end of west half of northeast quarter section 17. John Green was the builder, and Philander Howe the first teacher. The second school-house was a frame, and built by Peter VanWinkle, in 1840, on the east half of southwest quarter section 6, and Samantha Joslin was the first teacher. The third school-house, and the present one, was built of brick, by Stephen Mills, in 1856, and the first teacher was E. C. Warner.

District No. 5 comprises all of section 20, and parts of sections 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 28, 29 and 30. The school-house is on section 20, and is valued at $800. Tobias Sutherland is the present director.

All of sections 15 and 22, with parts of sections 14, 16, 21, 23, 26 and 27, comprise district No. 3. The school-house is on the northeast quarter of section 22, and was erected in 1852. It is valued at $900. T. J. Smurthwaite is the present director.

District No. 6 is composed of all of section 24, and parts of sections 13, 14, 23, 25 and 26. The school-house is on section 24, and is valued at $500. Grove Sanders is the present director.

Fractional district No. 2 comprises all of sections 35 and 36, and parts of sections 25, 26 and 34, and part of York. Its school-house is located on the southwest quarter of section 36. It is valued at $500. Henry Coe is the present director.

Fractional district No. 4 comprises parts of sections 32, 33, and 34, with part of the town of York, the school-house being situated in York, and valued at $400.

Fractional district No. 7 is composed of parts of sections 27, 28, 29, 30, 31 and 32, with the school-house on the southeast quarter of section 29, valued at $400. Frederick Hutzel is the present director.

RELIGIOUS.

Elder Twist, a Baptist minister, resided in the town about 1827 to 1829. He had appointments to preach where there were school-houses, and also at private houses in different parts of the town. Revs. Baughman, Colclazer, Garley and Pilcher were among the pioneer Methodist Episcopal ministers, but none of them resided in the town. Revs. Page, Beach, Cleveland, Kanouse, Clark, Jones and Weed, Presbyterians, also held services occasionally in the town. Being convenient to Ann Arbor, Ypsilanti and Saline, the citizens of this town have not so much felt the necessity for the erection of a house of worship, but assemble for that purpose in one of the towns mentioned, as is most convenient, although the Wesleyan Methodists, in 1846, erected a church on section 27, sustaining services therein until 1860, when the organization was abandoned, the greater part of its members uniting at Saline.

GEOLOGY AND TOPOGRAPHY.

In a paper read before the Pioneer Society, Horace Carpenter says: "The geology of this town is different in many respects from any other town in the county. There is no body of water that deserves the name of lake. Several brooks and creeks have their rise from springs on section 16, known as the big marsh, which covers about 2,500 acres of land with a deep, rich muck, and an inexhaustible deposit of bog lime, with a large quantity of various kinds of timber, imbedded for ages in a sound state of preservation. Bones of large animals have also been exhumed, six feet in length, indicating a larger species of animals than the elk. A theory prevails that this whole country was once submerged, that the water was level with Lake Superior on the northern shore of Lake Huron. There is an immense quantity of conglomerate rock, fragments of which have been brought by icebergs and scattered over the eastern part of our lower peninsula, as far as the ridge that appears in the southern part of our county, the shore of a great inter-sea. Beautiful specimens of this rock have been found in this town, containing as many as eight different bright colors. When the waters assuaged, this great marsh was no doubt a shallow lake, which was gradually filled, first, on the surface with decayed vegetation and the deposit of lime from calcareous water. On Spring Creek, Horace Kellogg and son burned and sold over 150,000 bushels of lime in from 12 to 15 years, averaging 280 bushels per week, until the high price of fuel and the low price of lime caused them to abandon the enterprise. Millions of bushels are yet on deposit for future generations, which may be brought to the surface, dried, burned, or ground by windmill power, and sown on uplands as a fertilizer. Mr. Kellogg states that on one occasion, in taking out lime they went down nine feet and struck a hard blue clay, and, shoving the spade down into the clay, water burst up in great force, filling the opening so suddenly that the workmen just escaped being caught, and that the water is still running over, a fine stream which was started over 35 years ago. The deposit of bones was no doubt caused by animals breaking through the turf and perishing in the waters below, before the cavities were filled with muck and lime. It is said that on section 27 there was a sink some rods in length and 70 feet deep, on the Toledo, Ann Arbor & Northern railroad. That part of the great marsh that has been cleared and ditched is very productive, and when the whole is reclaimed it will be the most valuable part of the town."

DEBATING CLUB.

In the same article from which the foregoing extract is made, Mr. Carpenter says: "A debating club or lyceum was formed in 1827, at the first school-house in the town. All the great questions of the day were discussed at its weekly meetings. At the time the capital punishment bill was before the Legislature, the bill was considered and argued several weeks, with Henry Compton as chairman. It was decided in the affirmative on the question "Ought capital punishment to be abolished by law?" This was prior to the debate in the Legislature, and equally as interesting and instructive. The members of the club were energetic and persevering citizens, not one of them having advantage of academic or college lore. But when Young America came from the graded school and college, having seen Webster's Unabridged, and that some of the old-fogy members called their parents farther instead of father, with a great number of inconsistencies, the club was soon after dissolved. The records should have been preserved."

PHYSICIANS.

No physicians settled in this town prior to 1835, when Dr. Nathan Webb arrived. He still resides in the town and engages in his profession. Dr. Nichols, of Ann Arbor, was one of the first physicians to attend the afflicted in town. Drs. Lord, Denton, Cole and Brigham, who once did business in this town, have gone to the spirit land. Drs. Pomeroy, Millington, Town and Fairchild, from Ypsilanti, were also early doctors who visited the town in a professional manner.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

Following are the biographical sketches of many of the most prominent citizens of Pittsfield township:

James D. Allison was born Oct. 25, 1825, in York Co., Pa., and is a son of John and Elizabeth Allen, who removed to Ontario Co., N. Y., when James D. was but an infant. They resided there about six years and then emigrated to Washtenaw county, locating in June, 1831. Soon after arrival Mr. Allison felled a tree and placed his anvil on the stump. He built a rough shed and covered it with bark. In this rude shop he began to work and subsequently erected a better one. It was the first blacksmith-shop in Pittsfield tp. Mrs. Allison died April 13, 1856, and Mr. Allison passed away from earth July 28, 1874. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and died in the firm belief of a reward in the great hereafter. James D. assisted his father in the shop, and before reaching his majority, was considered a fine workman. In 1864 he began working in the Government machine shops at Detroit, where he remained 20 years. At the expiration of this time he was appointed by Government Assistant Collector and Inspector, and occupied that position for eight years. He then returned to the old homestead, and has since followed the occupation of a farmer. Mr. Allison was twice elected Justice of the Peace, and in 1879 was appointed Postmaster of Pittsfield, the office being opened by him Oct. 9, of that year. Nov. 20, 1857, he married Mary Lake, born in Steuben Co., N. Y., March 17, 1829, and daughter of William and Sarah Lake. Six children have been born to them—William H., Amelia M., Emma M., John D., Charles H. and Allie C. Mr. Allison owns 159 acres of land under a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. He resides on sec. 28.

For five years he had no wagon and had to do all his teaming with a roughly fashioned sled. Year by year he toiled, and little by little was that sum laid by for future use, and now, after a half-century of untiring effort and strict economy, he can rest with comfort and ease, success having crowned him with her highest honors. Three children were born to bless this alliance, 2 of whom survive.—William H. and Mary J. John S. enlisted in Co. F, 6th Mich. His emaciated form was sent to Ann Arbor, and kind friends and sorrowing relatives laid the remains tenderly away in the silent tomb, where he shall sleep until the morn of the great Resurrection day.

Roswell Preston.—The following sketch of Roswell Preston (deceased), a prominent pioneer of "fair Washtenaw," was written by Jacob Preston, and read before the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw County, at its meeting in Saline, Dec. 5, 18—, by his son, Henry M. Preston:

Roswell Preston, a member of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw County, died March 25, 1877, in the township of Pittsfield, aged 72½ years. Deceased was born in the tp. of Hampton, Windham county, State of Connecticut, Oct. 2, 1804, of parents from Puritan ancestors, who were among the pioneer settlers of the State of Connecticut, and who had shared in the Indian conflicts with the New England colonies; also in the war for the independence of the United States. His ancestors on both sides were farmers; and he first saw the light on a homestead that had been in the family possession four generations. He worked with his father on the farm until he was 18 years of age, and then engaged as apprentice in the woolen manufacturing business in that State, and continued in that business until 1830; then went to the State of Ohio, where he was turned over in a stage, breaking his collar bone and otherwise injuring him. After his recovery he continued to work at the factory business in Ohio until 1832, when he came by horse team with his father through Sandusky to Monroe, and by Ypsilanti to Ann Arbor, where his elder brother lived at that time. He and his father (Roswell Preston, sr.) bought lands near each other in the town of Freedom, the father beginning to make improvements the same season. In the fall of 1832 Roswell Preston, jr., returned to the State of Ohio, and worked at the manufacturing business until the summer of '34, when he came to Michigan with a horse and a small drove of young cattle to commence on his new farm in Freedom.

The beautiful scenery of the wilds of the State of Michigan seemed to inspire in him energy and perseverance. Although money and provisions were scarce, yet in the midst of unremitting toil this hardy pioneer strove with anxious look beaming with hope, and trusting in Providence for a brighter future, and builded for himself a log house upon his lands, and commenced improvements immediately. He toiled upon his farm to make comfortable and happy a pioneer home until 1837, when he was married, in the town of Lima, in this county, to Miss Frances Hurlbut, who had recently come into Michigan from his native State, Connecticut. He lived on his farm in the tp. of Freedom until 1845, when he sold it to a German and bought the same year and removed upon the farm now in possession of his family, where he spent the remainder of his days, and where he improved the farm and built one of those beautiful rural homes so often met with in that part of the county. A wise and very commendable part of his life was devoted to training and educating his children to science, labor and culture; qualifying them for either a higher or retired walk in life. Surrounded by the beautiful home and estimable family, the infirmities of age and disease overtook him, but suffering little from pain, calmly and peacefully life seemed ebbing, and they said to him, "You are taking leave of us; what do you wish to say to us?" "God has been good to me and spared my life to a good old age; I would like to stay a little longer with you," and quietly, like going to sleep, his spirit took its flight, closing a life that was full of years and well spent. He deemed a life conscious of righteousness, truth and kindness to the needy and suffering, of greater value than sentiment and zeal that may glitter with the multitude and fail in a trying time. He sought not a showy or brilliant life, but a useful one, and endeared himself to many by kindness without reference to rank or grade of society, and he is said to have been familiar with passengers on that mysterious Underground railroad. Peace be to his ashes, and useful lives and a bright future to his family.

Y. Nathan was thrown upon the world an orphan at the tender age of 13 years. Until he arrived at the age of 16, he spent his time in working at everything and all things, in the meantime obtaining a sufficient education to enable him to teach school. His first certificate which he has still in his possession, was dated in Ontario Co., N. Y., in 1824. He taught school during the winter season (all his spare time being spent in the study of surveying), until the year 1832, at which time he shipped as seaman on board an ocean vessel. After a year's service, he was willing to retire from that kind of a life, and began the study of medicine under Dr. Appleton, of Boston, Mass. Hadley H. and Frederick S. were members of the "Normal Company," 17th Mich. Vol. Inf., the latter being wounded at Alexandria, Va., Sept. 17, 1862, and died from the effects of his wound in January, 1863. His remains were interred in the National cemetery, at Arlington. James H. enlisted in the 24th Mich. Vol. Inf., and served during the war. Dr. Webb was elected to the Michigan Senate in 1860, which office he filled with credit to himself and honor to the citizens of Washtenaw county. To fully describe Dr. Webb's political sentiments would be impossible, but will use his own words: "I have been a Republican from the first to the last, and all the time between." Dr. Webb has served the people in different official capacities, and is a well-respected and honored citizen of this county. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and the doctor and wife are Church members.

Harvey Wheeler was born in Ontario Co., N. Y., May 3, 1832, a son of John H. and Betsey Wheeler, natives of Connecticut. His father is dead, but the mother still survives and is a resident of Ontario Co., N. Y. Harvey was reared as a teamster, beginning that business at the youthful age of nine years. He came to Michigan in 1854 and settled in Pittsfield, Washtenaw county, where he has since resided, with the exception of six years in York tp., and one in Ypsilanti. He was married Sept. 7, 1851, to Sophronia Bentley, born in Ontario Co., N. Y., in 1833. They have 4 children—Tompkins H., Alice, Hattie and Lurada. When Mr. Wheeler came to this county, he first worked land on shares, but by industry and economy succeeded in making enough money to purchase a farm of his own. He is now the happy possessor of 150 acres of valuable land.

James L. Wheelock, a prominent farmer and stock-raiser on sec. 33, was born at Batavia, Genesee Co., N. Y., Feb. 28, 1825. His parents were Benjamin and Rosanna Wheelock, the former a native of Connecticut, and the latter of New Hampshire. They came to this county in 1829, locating one mile west of Saline village, and two years after to Bridgewater tp., where the former died in July, 1832. He had served as a soldier in the war of 1812. Mrs. W. removed to Pittsfield tp. in 1835. She subsequently married Samuel Waldron. Mrs. Waldron died April 23, 1874, at the advanced age of 91 years. James L. was reared on a farm, and received a common-school education. He was married May 20, 1846, to Irene Haynes, born at Prattsburg, Steuben Co., N. Y., Nov. 20, 1827, and daughter of Anson and Jane Haynes, who came to this county in 1842, locating near where David Cody now resides. Mr. H. died in Ann Arbor, June 30, 1867, and Mrs. Haynes in Newaygo county, Mich., July 15, 1880. Mr. and Mrs. Wheelock have 3 children—Judson W., Margaret C. and Rosanna J.

David Wilsey was born at Leroy, Genesee Co., N. Y., Nov. 22, 1819. His parents were Henry and Mary Wilsey, and they emigrated to this county in 1831, locating on sec. 8, Pittsfield tp., where David grew to manhood. He received a common-school education, and Jan. 6, 1853, married Lydia Boylan. Four children were born to them, 2 of whom survive—George C. and Mary A. Mr. Wilsey has been elected to several offices of honor and trust in Pittsfield tp., and from 1869 to 1873 represented that section of the county in the Board of Supervisors. He owns 133 acres of land in Washtenaw county, and 76 acres in Clinton county, Michigan.

Joseph Wilsey, farmer, sec. 8, was born in Monroe Co., N. Y., March 9, 1824. His parents were Henry and Sarah Wilsey, the former a native of New York, and the latter of New Jersey. They moved to this county in 1831, locating on sec. 8, Pittsfield tp., where the father died Jan. 9, 1874, in the 91st year of his age. His widow still survives him at the ripe old age of 92 years. Joseph was married to Orpha Holmes, born in New York, April 12, 1828, and daughter of Burroughs and Polly Holmes. One child was born to them, but is now deceased. Mr. Wilsey is a prominent farmer of his section of country, and although never aspiring for political honors, was elected Highway Commissioner, in which capacity he served three terms.

LODI TOWNSHIP.

This township was organized under authority of the Legislative Council, given in an act approved March 7, 1834. The following is a copy of the act granting the prayer of the residents of Lodi, for permission to organize their municipality:

Be it enacted by the Legislative Council of the Territory of Michigan, That all that part comprised in surveyed township 3 south, in range 5 east, be a township by the name of Lodi; and the first township meeting to be held at the now dwelling-house of Orrin Howe, in said township.

An organized community existed there as early as 1831, as in April of that year an election was held, resulting in the choice of Orrin Howe and Smith Lapham for the office of Justice of the Peace, and Jonathan Hatch, Town Clerk. Orrin Howe was first Postmaster. Perhaps two or three of the men whose names are given in the foregoing list never resided in the township, yet so many became permanent residents, that the difficulty of searching out the names of absentee proprietors may form an excuse for associating them with the strong hearts who remained to transform the wild woods into gardens and dot the land with happy homes.

MISFORTUNE NEVER COMES ALONE.

A. M. Gilbert, one of the early settlers, who came in 1826, died two years later, leaving a wife and 10 children to mourn his loss. To add misfortune to misfortune, the eldest son, Orrin, went out hunting, became lost in the thickets of the forest, and when his body was found, it was discovered that his death had resulted from cold and hunger. The poor boy had eaten the fingers of both hands in his battle for existence. Another son died in defense of the Union, and though such a death was glorious, yet to the widowed mother, it was a calamity for which earth had no solace. David Mount, another of the early settlers, deemed it proper to hang himself, and carried out his intention in 1838.

THE FIRST IN THE TOWNSHIP.

Gilbert Allen is said to be the first practical temperance apostle in the town. He built the first barn, and presented his friends with the pure aqua vite instead of the ordinary "calamity water" introduced on such occasions. Yet it is positively stated that T. Tate, Loammi Robison and Festus Fellows raised their buildings without whiskey some time previously.

In April, 1827, the little lady known as Harriet Lapham was born. She was the daughter of Smith Lapham, a pioneer of 1825.

The first marriage was that contracted between Polly Gilbert and Robert Craig. The knot was tied by 'Squire Lapham in May, 1829. This marriage, however, belongs to Saline township. The same year Harriet Wickham and Thomas Wood joined in matrimony in the ordinary fashion. It is stated that Miss Alvira Williams and Mr. McClelland were married first, but there is no positive record of the event.

The first deaths recorded are those of Miss Betsy Howe, daughter of Orrin, who died in 1827. About the same time, Mr. Howe's hired man was consigned to mother earth. Their graves formed the nucleus of Lodi Plains cemetery. Bazzila Goodrich was buried there in 1831.

The first dwelling-house was erected by 'Squire Williams, and he combines this honor with that of being the first settler.

The first school-teacher was Miss Polly Stratton, who presided over an assembly of children of the township, in a room of one of the dwelling-houses in the district, from 1827 to 1829. The first log school-house was erected in 1829, where the frame school-house now stands, on the plains.

In the following summary of history, from the pen of Harrison W. Bassett in 1876, many of the events characteristic of early times are given, and the men of the period treated to a brief review:

"The first purchase of land in Lodi was made Sept. 29, 1824, by Hugh Chrestie, it being the southwest quarter of section 36. This gentleman never became a resident. Allen Williams, who entered three lots on sections 13 and 14, May 9, 1825, has the honor of erecting the first log house, and of being the first settler in the township. During the spring and summer of the same year purchases were made on section 3 by Rufus Knight; on 23 and 24 by Orrin Howe and Adolphus Spoor, and 35 and 36 by Aaron Austin and Russell Briggs. In the fall, locations were made by Arnold on section 2; Daniel Allmendinger on 19; Jesse Meacham, Smith Lapham and Samuel Camp on 23, 24 and 25.

"Most of these parties prepared their houses this season and returned and moved their families in the following spring. A line of marked trees was at this time followed by the pioneer from Ann Arbor to the settlement. In the spring of 1826 a wagon track was cut through the woods from Ann Arbor, near where the road now is.

"During this summer, the settlement increased rapidly. Many purchases were made and homes were being prepared in every direction. Among the accessions of this season were John Lowry, John Cobb, Porter Lathrop, Horace and Virgil Booth. This summer, when there was so much to do in preparing and making homes comfortable before winter, there was much sickness, which disheartened a few, who sold their land and returned East. At this time a young lady, Betsey Howe, daughter of Orrin Howe, died, which was the first death, and her grave was the commencement of the cemetery on Lodi Plains. It was on this occasion that the first sermon was preached in the settlement by a Presbyterian living near Ann Arbor. In the following fall the Rev. Mr. Balkman, a young Methodist minister passing through from Monroe, made Lodi a point in his circuit, and occasionally preached there. After this year it became more healthy and the settlers prospered and were content.

"Each year now gave them some new accessions. Timothy Hunt, who located on section 26 in the spring of 1828, where he spent nearly the whole of the remainder of his life, was the last to purchase Government land in the eastern part of the township. In the first three years it had nearly all been occupied. The western part was occupied between the years 1830 and 1835. The spring of 1827 found the settlement firmly established and prosperous. They now began to look beyond the necessities of mere physical existence, and formed institutions which would give them some of the privileges and conveniences which they had left behind them. A postoffice was established and named Lodi, with Orrin Howe, Postmaster. This name adhered to the soil. It has ever since been known as Lodi Plains. The first school was taught this season by Miss Polly Stratton, in a house built by Allen Williams.

"The first birth occurred during this summer. A daughter was born in the family of Smith Lapham. I may, however, be disputed here, for there generally are half a dozen who claim priority of birth. Among the first ministers who visited them and gave them religious instruction, were: Eld. Twist, a Baptist; Weed, a Presbyterian, and Pilcher, a Methodist. Religious services were first held in private houses. In 1829 a log school-house was built on the Plains, near where the frame one now stands. It served the double purpose of school-house and church.

"Nearly the whole of the four townships cornering here were at first in the same civil jurisdiction, named Saline. Lodi was organized in 1836, taking the name of its postoffice. In February of the same year the Presbyterian Church of Lodi was organized by the Rev. I. M. Weed and John Beach. Timothy Hunt, a Baptist, donated five acres of land on the northeast corner of section 26, to the society, for the church and parsonage grounds, upon which a frame church was erected in the winter of 1837. The Rev. J. G. Kanouse, whom many of you well remember, was its first pastor.

"About this time the Germans established a settlement in Freedom, adjoining us on the west, which has spread in every direction, and now it covers several townships. Three-quarters of the soil of Lodi is to-day in German hands. They have not retarded, but accelerated, the improvement of the soil. Industry and frugality are their cardinal virtues. Their strong hands have subdued and made productive the most forbidding and barren places.

"In 1847 Prof. Nutting selected Lodi Plains as the site for an enterprise which proved to be of incalculable benefit to the youth of the vicinity, viz.: the establishment of an academy. The building was erected the same season, and school opened in the fall. It was carried on with great success for about 10 years, until old age bade him rest from his labor. It contributed largely to the social and intellectual advancement, not only of the youth, but of all the inhabitants. Lodi, always noted for its beauty and fertility of soil, now became famous for its school. It has furnished three Representatives to the State Legislature, viz.: O. Howe, John Lowry and Newton Sheldon. Two appointments have been made to West Point: Edwin Howe and Edwin Phillips. Some of her sons are found in each of the learned professions. She had sons who fell on the battle-fields of the South while fighting to preserve the life of the nation.

"The oldest living settler now in the town is Merrit Perry, who came here in 1827, and has lived on the same section nearly 50 years. There are very few of the first inhabitants who have remained to witness the growth and development of the township. Though these pioneers have in many instances failed as individuals to attain the positions and accomplish the objects which they have looked forward to, yet as a people they have more than realized the predictions of the most visionary."

THE SURVIVING PIONEERS of the township include Mrs. Hunt, widow of T. W. Hunt, aged 81 years; Mrs. Ira Wood, aged 84; Eli Benton, aged 81; Festus Fellows, aged 78; Blodgett Smith, aged 86; Ira Bassett, 81; Darius Wood 72; Mrs. Isabella Robinson, 74; Mrs. Isbell, aged 84; Elder North, now living in Ann Arbor, 80; Mrs. Gilbert Allen, 70; Newton Sheldon, 70; Marcena (Hunt) Bassett, 74; Betsy (Tate) Boorheis, 73; Mrs. Benton, 70; Mrs. Blodgett Smith, 76; Grant Perry, 73; Merrit Perry, 70; and A. H. Hotchkin.

MANUFACTORIES, MILLS, ETC.

The first saw-mill erected in the township was that by Russell Briggs, in 1829. The Johnson Mill was built in 1838. The former establishment was on the Saline river, one mile above the village; the latter on the same stream about one mile above that of Mr. Briggs. Those old mills have passed away. There has never been a grist-mill in the town, and with the exception of a steam saw-mill and a planing-mill, the district is entirely wanting in everything pertaining to manufactures. The township being minus factories, postoffice and saloons, there is scarcely any pressing necessity for a church, and perhaps it is on this account that a church has not been bestowed upon the people.

CHURCH AND SCHOOLS.

The Presbyterian congregation organized in 1834, and erected a church in 1836, during the ministry of Rev. Geo. Kanouse. Subsequently a number of members took letters, and organized in 1854 as the Independent Church of Lodi. This new society purchased the church building from the original society. In 1874, this society united with the Presbyterians of Saline, and sold the church building to the Baptists of North Adams, who had it transported to that place. The pastors of the Church from the period of organization were: Revs. J. B. Kanouse, A. B. Corning, H. B. McMath, L. M. Glover, C. G. Clark, Justin Marsh. The elders were: Mather Marvin, T. Tate, David G. Mount, Othniel Hall, Enoch Eddy, Darius S. Wood, Horace Booth, John D. Bennett, A. H. Hotchkin, John F. Lansing, Isaac Elliot. The names of the deacons comprise: Francis Lansing, Josiah Jacobus, Virgil Booth and A. H. Hotchkin.

There are six school buildings in the town devoted to school purposes, valued at $4,000. The ordinary curriculum of the common school is offered to the children.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

The improved acreage of Lodi township is set down at 14,723, unimproved at 4,541, and total at 19,228, divided into 160 farms, averaging 120.40 acres per farm.

The number of acres under wheat in 1879 was 3,783, yielding an average of 23.76 bushels to the acre, or 89,869 bushels in toto. The acreage devoted to wheat in May, 1880, was 4,283, being 500 acres in excess of the former year's sowing.

The corn-fields covered an area of 1,421 acres, producing 100,397 bushels. The oats threshed from 996 acres; in 1879, equaled 47,427 bushels; the barley from 172 acres showed a product of 4,782 bushels; the clover seed from 672, exceeded 1,170 bushels; the potatoe-fields, extending over 125, produced 9,767 bushels, and the meadows, covering 2,413 acres, yielded 2,919 tons of hay. The township forms one of the richest agricultural districts in the county. Streamlets are numerous, while the Saline river flows through its extreme southern sections.

OFFICIALS.

The officers of the township for 1880-'1 comprised Geo. Stabler, Supervisor; James Sage and Comstock F. Hill, Justices; Leopold Blaess, Town Clerk; and Gaudaioupe Bagley, Commissioner of Highways.

PERSONAL SKETCHES.

The biographical sketches which follow deal with the personal history of many of the pioneers, together with that of men whose interests are now closely identified with the township.

Charles Almendinger, farmer, Lodi tp., was born in Lehigh county, Pa., Jan. 4, 1819. His parents, Daniel F. and Christiana Almendinger, were born in Germany, the former Sept. 25, 1793, and the latter Aug. 22, 1782. They started for America in 1817, and suffering many serious drawbacks, arrived at Philadelphia after an eight months' voyage. They had but one penny, a French coin, left, and found work with a dairyman, living about 30 miles from the "Quaker city." Soon after Mr. A. went to Allentown, Pa. and worked at his trade (a weaver) for some time. In 1825 he came to this county and bought 160 acres of land from Government at $1.25 per acre. In March, 1830, he started on "foot-back" for Washtenaw county, and arrived after a long and wearisome journey. He planted a crop of corn on his new land and returned to New York, the following autumn coming out with his family and locating on his farm, in Lodi tp., near Ann Arbor village. He died May 31, 1865, and his wife, June 25, 1846. Charles was reared on a farm and educated in the log school-house of those pioneer days. On April 18, 1843, he married Rebecca Croman, born in August, 1829, and daughter of John and Elizabeth Croman, natives of Pennsylvania, who came to this county in 1829. They have 3 children—Lucy A., born March 1, 1844, wife of Charles McComber, Ann Arbor; Clinton, born Oct. 24, 1845, and married Mary Mead; Sarah J., born March 16, 1849, and wife of Alexander Thompson, of Clackamas county, Oregon. Mr. Almendinger possesses a good farm, located about three miles from Ann Arbor. He was Vice-President of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw County for Lodi tp., for three years, and takes a great interest in preserving the pioneer history. He is a Republican. Mr. Almendinger owns a good farm, and is comfortably situated in life. His portrait will be found in this volume, on page 931.

Harrison W. Bassett, son of Ira and Marcena (Hunt) Bassett, early pioneers of Washtenaw county, was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., July 8, 1832. In 1839 he came with his parents to this county, where he grew to manhood. He received his educational training at Michigan University, graduating from the literary department in 1854. He was then employed as Professor of Languages, in Tecumseh, Mich., for five years. At the expiration of this time he went to Illinois and Iowa, where he was engaged as a civil engineer for a number of years. He taught school in DeWitt, Iowa, for two years, and then returned to this county, where he has since been engaged in farming, and breeding the celebrated Spanish Merino sheep. On Nov. 12, 1862, he married Mrs. Elsie M. Fowler, daughter of Norman G. and Altena Fowler, old residents of this county. They have 1 child—Clifford E. Mr. Bassett owns 157 acres of fine farming land, located near Saline. In politics he is Republican.

Ira Bassett, retired farmer, was born in Litchfield county, Conn., Nov. 28, 1799. His parents were Nathan and Hattie Bassett. Ira passed his youth on a farm, and obtained his educational training at the district schools of his native State. In 1823 he went to Onondaga county, N. Y., where he lived until 1839, when he emigrated to Washtenaw county. He entered nine lots of land in Kent county, Mich., near the mouth of Flat river, but settled in Saline tp., where he lived till 1848, and then moved to Lodi tp., where he resides at present. He was married in September, 1831, to Marcena Hunt, and 4 children were born to them—Harrison W., Sereno B., Laura, wife of Russell Godfrey; Sophia, wife of Nelson Booth, of Ann Arbor. Mrs. B. is a daughter of John and Parly Hunt, and was born in Onondaga county, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1807. Mr. Bassett started in this life with but a small share of this world's goods. He had obtained sufficient knowledge to enable him to teach, and this business he followed successfully for nine years. After coming to this county he accumulated wealth very rapidly, and a few years ago owned an extensive tract of valuable land lying to the north of Saline village. He has lately made a division of his property among his children and only kept 40 acres for his own use. In politics he is a Republican, and is also a consistent member of the Baptist Church of Saline.

Sereno Bassett, farmer, sec. 24, Lodi tp., was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., Nov. 17, 1833, and is a son of Ira and Marcena (Hunt) Bassett, natives of New York. In 1838 Mr. B. came with his parents to this county, where he was reared and educated. Dec. 3, 1857, he married Lucy Fish, born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., Aug. 19, 1836, and daughter of Charles and Lorinda (Bliss) Fish. Of their 7 children, 6 are living—Emmett, Frederick, Frank, Charles, Merritt and Elmer. Ira is deceased. Mr. Bassett is engaged in farming a piece of 185 acres of richly cultivated land. He is of English ancestry, and votes with the Republican party.

Albert Blaess, one of the leading German citizens of Lodi tp., was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, June 21, 1846. He was reared on a farm, and educated in the University of Switzerland, the subject of chemistry being the principal feature of his study. In 1864 he came to America, and for a number of years served in the U S. Navy. After leaving the sea he came West and settled in this county where he has resided since, engaged in farming. In December, 1868, he married Catherine, a daughter of Ginder and Anna Baumgartner, natives of Germany, who emigrated to this county about 1845. This marriage was blessed with 4 children—Charles, Gristaff, Emma and Meda. Mr. B. owns quite an extensive tract of valuable land.

Leopold Blaess was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, June 27, 1831, son of Chas. B. and Julia (Orth) Blaess. He was reared on a farm, and educated in the University of Switzerland. For four years he was employed as clerk in a store, and in 1850 emigrated to America. He was engaged in mining in Pennsylvania for some time, but in 1856 came westward, and was charmed with the advantages offered in the soil and climate of this county. He located on a piece of land which forms a portion of his present homestead. Aug. 6, 1856, he married Mery Visel, born in Remmingsheim, Germany, in 1835, daughter of Christian Visel, who emigrated to America in 1852. They have 11 children—Julius, Charles, Robert, Willie, Oscar, Otto, Herman, Mary, Emma, Bertie and Julia. Mr. Blaess owns a farm of 243 acres, situated on sections 12 and 13, and valued at $80 per acre. He is Clerk of Lodi tp.

Ers L. Brainard, Vice-President of the Pioneer Society of Washtenaw County for Lodi tp., was born at Rush, Monroe Co., N. Y., Aug. 27, 1821. His parents, Dudley and Joicy (Diver) Brainard, were natives of Vermont, where the former died in 1829, leaving his wife in very limited circumstances. Eri was only a boy at the time of his father's death, and for some years bravely filled his father's place as well as he was able. He received but a limited education, and in 1833 went to Rockdale, Pa., and in 1837 to Vernon, Ohio, where he remained until 1840. He then returned to New York, where he received a sum of money willed to him. He emigrated from New York to Michigan, locating near "Saline Reserve." He lived in this latter place until March, 1878, when he sold his farm and purchased property in Saline village, where he resides at present. He was married May 6, 1852 to Ruth Guilett, born in England, Nov. 19, 1829, and emigrated with her parents to America at eight years of age. One child—Flora Ruth, born June 1, 1853—was the result of this union. Mrs. Brainard died June 6, 1853, and on Sept. 15, 1858, Mr. B. married Nancy A. Smith, daughter of Ozias A. and Hannah (Lamb) Smith. Three children were born to this marriage, 2 of whom are living—William F. and Grant E. Callie I. (deceased) was born Aug. 14, 1859, and died Aug. 12, 1877.

Calvin T. Burnett (deceased), whose portrait we give on p. 311, was born at De Kalb, St. Lawrence county, N. Y., Nov. 14, 1824. When seven years old he moved with his parents to Livingston county, Mich., where he remained until 1841, when he removed to this county. His early life was passed in agricultural pursuits, and he received his education in the common schools. December 30, 1847, he was joined in the bonds of holy wedlock to Ann Eliza Booth, born in Washtenaw county, Dec. 4, 1829, and a daughter of Virgil and Rhoda Booth. This marriage was blessed with 8 children, 6 of whom are living—George F., married to Emily Kettle; Martha J., wife of Mark Webster; Calvin V., married to Laura Stevens; Anna R., Louisa D., Walter B. Mr. Burnett departed this life Nov. 26, 1876. Mrs. B.'s father, Virgil Booth, was born at Campbell Hall, N. Y., March 7, 1803. His ancestry is traced back to "Revolutionary times," when three brothers named Booth emigrated from England to America, one of whom settled on Long Island, from whence, it is supposed, sprang this present family. Mr. B. located in this county in 1826. He was married in November, 1829, to Rhoda Burgess, by whom he had 7 children, all daughters—Ann Eliza, Mary E., wife of J. H. Hicks; Martha O., wife of Frank Herbert; Lois D., wife of Albert Wheeler; Rachel M., wife of Frank Hurlbert; Rhoda E., wife of Oscar Phelps. Phœbe J. is deceased. After a long siege of pioneer life and labors, Mr. Booth was laid away till Gabriel's trumpet will bid him rise and taste of the joys of the great everlasting.

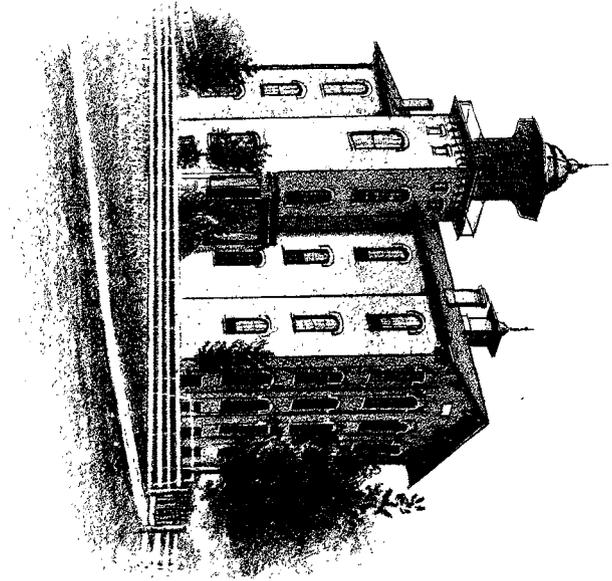

James Caplin, farmer, was born in Canada, May 29, 1835. His parents, John and Jane Caplin, were natives of England, and emigrated to America in 1832, settling in Canada, where James was born and reared to manhood. He received his education in the schools of the Dominion. Nov. 2, 1852, he was married to Martha Meyer, daughter of John and Anna Meyer, who were natives of Switzerland, emigrating to Canada, where Martha was born, Jan. 19, 1835. To this union 6 children have been born—Anna, wife of John Redaway; John, Rosena, Maria, James and Carrie. Mr. C. came to this county in 1864, and settled in Lodi tp., where he at present resides, and owns 130 acres of choice land. Has been a farmer all his life.

James H. Clough, farmer, was born in Lancashire, England, Sept. 30, 1827. His parents were Josiah and Mary Clough, natives of England, who emigrated to America in 1842 and stopped in New York city, where James H. worked with his father at wagon-making till the latter died. James continued at this business till 1854, when he removed to this county, and has since followed farming. His farm is located on secs. 27 and 28, and consists of 145 acres. On Dec. 2, 1849, he married Margaret E. Blum, born Aug. 6, 1830, and daughter of Philip and Mary M. Blum. To this alliance 11 children were born, 10 of whom are living—William H., Mary E., wife of John Groff; Jacob J., James, George, Charles, Elmer C., Frederick, Edwin and Nelson L.

Randolph Davis (deceased) was born near Princeton, N. J., Aug. 29, 1798. At an early age he went to Seneca Co., N. Y., where he passed his youth, and was educated. Oct. 10, 1821 he married Mary Geddes. There were 9 children born to them, 7 of whom are living—John G., George A., Martin L., Mary J., Charles M., Randolph and Hannah A. Henry and David are deceased. In 183—, Mr. Davis came to Washtenaw county, and purchased 160 acres of land at Government rates, a yoke of oxen, and a cow. Thus he started in life in this county, but by honesty, integrity and go-aheaditiveness he became the possessor of considerable property. He died Jan. 10, 1872, at the advanced age of 74 years. He was mourned by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Another pioneer has left this shore, to dwell in that bright forevermore. Mrs. Davis still survives at the age of 82. She resides on the old homestead consisting of 240 acres. Very clear and vivid are the recollections of her mind of those pioneer days when a log cabin was their earthly home, and their nearest neighbors bands of roving Indians.

Milan Glover (deceased) was born at Phelps, N. Y., Aug. 11, 1811. He was reared on a farm, and educated at Geneva College, Geneva, N. Y. In 1830 he came with his parents to this county, and Nov. 12, 1835, he married Lydia M. Lansing, and 2 children were born to them, both deceased. Mrs. Glover died Dec. 30, 1857, and Dec. 23, 1859, Mr. G. married Celinda K., a daughter of Erastus and Elizabeth Kellogg. To this union 4 children were born—Edward, Frank E., Archie A. M. and Elizabeth E. In 1837 he removed to Shiawassee Co., Mich., where he resided for some time, but finally came back to Washtenaw. On March 8, 1871, he passed to that far beyond, where he awaits the great Judgment Day. At the time of his death, and for many years previous, he was a member of the Presbyterian Church. His brother, the late Dr. Livingston Glover, of Jacksonville, Ill., was a clergyman of eminence in Illinois, and pastor of the 1st. Presbyterian Church of that city for very many years. Mrs. Glover's grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

Egbert P. Harper, farmer, son of Robert and Berthania Harper, was born in Wayne Co., N. Y., Oct. 24, 1832. In 1835 he was brought by his parents to this county, where he has grown to manhood and received a limited education. On July 22, 1856, he married Mary J. Fellows, born in Washtenaw county, July 2, 1832, and daughter of Festus and Harriet Fellows, natives of Onondaga Co., N. Y. Mr. Harper was Supervisor of Lodi tp. nine years, and officiated as Justice of the Peace for two terms. He owns a farm of 240 acres, valued at $75 per acre, and devotes a large share of his time to raising Spanish Merino sheep.

Jacob H. Hicks is one of the more prominent citizens of Lodi tp. He was born at Fayette, Seneca Co., N. Y., July 3, 1824. He is a son of James S. and Sarah (Dubois) Hicks, the former born Jan. 28, 1788, in Dutchess Co., N. Y., and the latter born Dec. 26, 1795, at Marbleton, Ulster Co., N. Y. Mr. Hicks was reared on a farm and obtained his educational training in the common schools of his native State. May 15, 1851, he married Mary E. Booth, born in Washtenaw county Feb. 16, 1830, and a daughter of Virgil and Rhoda Booth, the former settling in this county in 1826. To this union 7 children were born, 6 of whom are living—Charles V., Mary E., wife of David M. De Tarr, a physician of Boone, Iowa, James F., Rhoda M., Lillie J. and Carrie B. William Alfred is deceased. Mr. H. owns a farm of 360 acres, located on secs. 12 and 13, and covered with numerous buildings and a fine brick residence. In politics he is a Republican, and also a member of the Masonic order in the chapter. Mr. Hicks' father was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died Nov. 1, 1870, at Hillsdale, Mich., aged 82. His wife followed him Nov. 23, 1873, at the age of 75. Mr. Hicks' grandfather served in the Revolutionary war, holding an official position under Gen. Washington.

Comstock F. Hill, farmer, sec. 24, Lodi tp., was born in Massachusetts June 27, 1835. His parents, Fitch and Eliza Hill, came to this county in 1837 and located at Ann Arbor, but in 1855 removed to Lodi tp., where they passed their last days upon this earth. Comstock F. was raised a "farmer's boy," and Oct. 10, 1865, he married Lydia Benton, born in this county in 1842. She died May 10, 1875, leaving 3 children—Ernest, Ada and Theodore. Mrs. Hill was a member of the Congregational Church for 20 years. Mr. H. officiates as Justice of the Peace, and attends to settling up of real-estate matters. He resides on a good farm, and politically is a Democrat. His grandfather served as a private soldier in the Revolutionary war. As a representative citizen of Washtenaw county, we give Mr. Hill's portrait in this work, on page 913.

Abraham Hirth, farmer, sec. 7; P. O., Ann Arbor; was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, June 7, 1822. His parents, John G. and Barbara Hirth, emigrated with their family to America in 1835. They located in Washtenaw county, where Abraham grew to manhood, and his educational advantages were limited to the common schools, and he was frequently deprived of even attending these. In November, 1847, he married Dortha Wellman, and 10 children were born to them, 8 of whom are living—Frederick, Simon, Henry, Emanuel, Ernest, Louisa, Anna and Julius. Mrs. Hirth died May 2, 1877, being a member of the Lutheran Church for many years, as is also Mr. Hirth. Mr. Hirth is the happy possessor of a farm of 280 acres on secs. 7 and 8, valued at $75 per acre, and all the fruits of his individual toil and labor. He believes the principles adopted by the Republican party. His uncle, John Hirth, served in the French army under Napoleon Bonaparte.

Simon F. Hirth, farmer, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, Oct. 27, 1827. He came with his parents to America in 1835. He never attended school where the English language was taught, but learned it by his own personal efforts, and with scarcely any assistance from others. He takes considerable interest in English literature. On July 17, 1852, he married Dortha Niethammer, and 8 children have been born to them, 6 of whom are living—Anna C., Henry M., John G., Simon F., Ernest E. and Albert J. Mrs. Hirth was born in Germany July 10, 1827. Mr. and Mrs. Hirth are members of the German Lutheran Church. He owns 354 acres of land, valued at $75 per acre, and in politics adopts the principles of the Republican party.

Mrs. Phoebe L. (Fellons) Hunt, one of the few remaining pioneer mothers of this county, was born in Susquehanna county, Pa., Jan. 5, 1801. When about three years of age, her parents removed to Onondaga county, where she grew to womanhood, and then married Timothy W. Hunt, who was born in Connecticut, in 1799. The date of this union was in February, 1825. In 1828, Mr. Hunt went westward and located land on secs. 26 and 35, Lodi tp., Washtenaw Co., Mich., and then went back after his family. With his wife and little daughter, Mr. Hunt came to his new home in the month of July, and began the struggle for existence in this Western country. In a short time Mr. Hunt and 1 child were taken with the fever, but soon recovered. In 1827 Mr. Hunt went to Syracuse, N. Y., on business, and returned after a few months' visit. Their 2 daughters were members of the Baptist Church, and when called up higher, left this world with a firm trust in Him who rules the Heaven and the earth. Mrs. Hunt was stricken with paralysis, and while paying his individual attentions to his noble wife, Mr. Hunt was afflicted with a wasting and painful sickness, and was soon laid to rest amid the scenes of his life and triumphs in these Western wilds. Mrs. Hunt still remains, and although over 80 years of age, retains her memory to a remarkable degree. Her living descendants are but few in number, comprising 2 sons, 4 grandchildren and 8 great-grandchildren.

Rev. L. Klingman, pastor of Salem Lutheran Church, Lodi tp., was born in Germany, Sept. 3, 1833, son of Stephen and Margaret Klingman. Mr. K. was reared in the "old country," and attended the Basle University, of Switzerland, graduating from that institution in 1860. He subsequently came to America, and entered upon the duties of his high calling—a calling the noblest of any on God's footstool. He first located at Adrian, Michigan, where he labored five years. He then went to Monroe, where he officiated as pastor for two years, at the expiration of which time he came to this county, and has been attending to the spiritual want of the members of the above named Church since that time. July 20, 1861, he married Caroline Diehr, and 8 children were sent to bless this happy couple—Jane, Alice, Julius, Theophel, Frederick, Matthew and Caroline. Emanuel is deceased.

George Johnson stands in the front rank of the prominent men of Lodi tp. He was born July 19, 1830, son of John and Elizabeth Johnson, the former a native of Bergen Co., N. Y., and the latter a native of Pompton Co., N. J. In 1836 Mr. J. came with his parents to this county, and here grew to manhood. On Oct. 3, 1865, he married Eliza C. Lymberner, born in Jerseyville, Canada, Oct. 3, 1844, daughter of William Lymberner. One child was given to this union—Florence M., born May 14, 1867. John Johnson, the father of George, aided in building the first churches and school-house erected in Lodi tp. He died Dec. 21, 1860, aged 72, and his wife June 18, 1877, at the advanced age of 87 years. Mr. George Johnson has been elected to fill several local offices, and in politics is Democratic. He owns a farm of 240 acres, valued at $90 per acre.

Captain John Lowry was born Feb. 14, 1793, at Livingston's Manor, Schoharie Co., N. Y., the eldest son of Peter and Hannah (Wiltsey) Lowry, who later moved to Onondaga Co., N. Y., where John Lowry married Sylvia, daughter of David and Elizabeth Wickham, in February, 1821; she was born March 20, 1799. Having few worldly possessions, both were willing to use hand and brain in any honest way, to secure what is needed in such a co-partnership to supply present and future wants, with a mutual understanding that gain or loss was to be shared equally. Their early advantages would to-day be considered very inadequate for what they planned to accomplish. They chose farming as most genial to them, and those two strong wills, by patience, economy and wisdom, moved steadily forward, each supplying the lack of the other. Dec. 13, 1822, they rejoiced over their first born—James, who was all that parents could desire as to the elements of manhood. He married Clarissa Welch, and was a loving, devoted husband and father; he had 3 daughters and 1 son; but he and 2 daughters, Mary E. Parsons and Martha E. Wood, are deceased. June 2, 1825, Mary Elizabeth was born as the second child to the subject of this sketch; she married Mr. Foster, and is now a resident of Ann Arbor.

In June, 1825, they moved to Ann Arbor, where all was a wilderness save a few log cabins. Jonathan Stratton, a surveyor, assisted in making the selection in the timbered land; a clear running brook went rippling and and gurgling through in its winding pathway, where he saw something beside a "run," at whose bank the cattle slake their thirst. This timbered farm was in keeping with his early teaching, as being in every way more productive, therefore more desirable. The beauty of the plain so attracted him that he thought to try 80 acres of the land on Lodi plains. He returned to family and friends to prepare for Western life. The next June this family of four left for their wild, romantic home, so much enjoyed by them in active, honest toil; work seemed play—when ague did not shake the songs away. The wild game, the fish in our numerous lakes, the wild fruits and honey so abundant, were all appropriated with thankfulness, until the wheat-field, orchard and waving corn stood where so short a time before were oaks, ash, elm, maple, beech, basswood, buttonwood, ironwood and some trees that yielded fruit. In early spring time the sweet from maple-trees was so delicious as it dripped from spile to wooden trough or bucket, or after the boiling process, when the amber wax was spread on snow.

July 31, 1828, there came the second daughter, Elpha, who, when grown, married T. S. Sanford, and now resides in Massachusetts.

Day by day appeared homes, barns and school-houses, because the brain and muscle were on the ground that respected self-help and earnest purpose. One of these was Mr. Lowry's second log house, on the plain, surrounded by gorgeous wild-flowers of rarest hues, and every thing sowed or planted grew luxuriantly. This was also the home of the aged parents who came to be cared for by their faithful son. Capt. Lowry bought the farms of Major Meachum and his friend Spoor, which joined the 80, making in all 700 acres, or thereabouts. He built the first frame barn of large dimensions in that locality, which is still standing and in use. In the year 1839 the Captain was chosen to the Legislature at Detroit. A large well-planned frame house was in process of erection, and the timber, lumber and shingles were paid for with wild-cat money. This false system of banking came to its death in 1839, but this last home built by him in Washtenaw county went on to completion early in the year 1840; the floors were laid with home-made rag carpets, with well-chosen colors and stripes. All these years the working clothes for winter and summer were mostly manufactured by the family and many a genteel Sunday suit graced the old and young. After all was settled in this delightful home, the second son, John, was born. He was married in 1864 to Helen Church. They have one son, Durward C., born in December of the same year.

An old neighbor recently said that Mr. Lowry once had a large quantity of wheat turned into flour, packed it in barrels and stored it away in his barn, to sell to the many immigrants who were seeking homes with just about money enough to pay for their land, with little or nothing left to pay for food. He proceeded to say that his father, hearing of this supply for sale (flour was exceedingly scarce at this time), made application for a certain amount, whereupon the Captain asked him if he had the money to pay for it. With much assurance the answer came, "I have;" and with as much decision the reply came, "I have no flour to sell to those that have money; they can get it elsewhere. I have prepared this for those who have no money to buy with, the price being the same as it could be bought for cash." His prophetic view of events and times caused him to do many things that were not understood by the inexperienced and selfish. Many families were kept from suffering by the forethought and hard work of this sturdy pioneer, his faithful companion being his equal mentally and physically.

Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Hunt were near neighbors and in sympathy, causing a friendship that made them co-laborers in every good work. Many diseases, even the cholera, found its way to these new settlements; the year of locusts, preceding the Indian war; the many schemes that came before the people, political or religious; even the great anti-slavery struggle, never found him unable to solve the problems, or move him from his high purpose in mental attainments. Many were the evenings that he read aloud to his family, sifting consistencies from inconsistencies that come to us through the press, in books and papers, often saying the time would soon come when we could speak to our neighbors across the Atlantic as readily as to sister States, and thought would travel with the rapidity of lightning by the will of God, for the good of the world. He often prophesied the overthrow of slavery and its results (and he lived to see it), the exodus of the colored race because of the spirit of oppression, believing that the sincere desire of a true heart prevails with God, against all opposition or oppression.

In 1850, at the Michigan State Agricultural Society's second annual meeting, Captain J. Lowry was awarded an elegant silver medal for the best Merino buck on exhibition; this society was organized March 24, 1849, adopting for its emblem a woman as the central figure; at her right and under her hand is the light of day just appearing over a city, while at her left is seen the sheaf of ripened grain, a plow and other agricultural implements. In this outspoken thought woman is recognized as an important factor in the world's planning, doing and overcoming. The oppressed bloodhound-hunted children of our common father often found rest and comfort in Capt. L.'s well-stored home, where much money and clothing were given to supply the wants of the escaped slaves, feeling it to be far better to please God than man.

Sylvia Wickham Lowry died Dec. 24, 1859. None could say of a truth that she had not been faithful to the trust committed to her. She had what she called a vision two weeks before her death, while in usual health, after which she announced that she had talked with Jesus and her eldest child, James, who died instantly March 1, 1859, and they wanted her to come home in two weeks. She went in just two weeks, suffering intensely to the last, but the spiritual triumphed over the physical, giving her calmness and joy as she expressed her desire to be released from the temporal to enter the eternal.

Capt. J. Lowry was married the second time, late in the autumn of 1860, to Rhoda Comstock, of Marcellus, Onondaga Co., N. Y., who was a very estimable widow, with 4 children. She is now known as Mrs. B. P. Sherman, of Bancroft, Shiawassee Co., Mich. After the lapse of three or four years, they deemed it best for the interests of these children to move to Shiawassee county, near Byron, on a new farm, where they were successful; and his earnestness and zeal gave an impetus to those about him that did not cease when he was called to rest from his labors. He was stricken with apoplexy a few days before his departure to the Eternal city.

Michael Staebler, farmer, was born in Washtenaw county, Sept. 7, 1843, and is the son of Frederick and Barbara Staebler, natives of Wurtemberg, Germany, who emigrated to America in 1831, settling in this county the same year. The subject of this sketch was reared on a farm and sent to the district school, the best then afforded in this county. May 14, 1867, he married Catherine Paul, born in this county April 7, 1847, and the daughter of Jacob and Dortha Paul. To this union were born 6 children, 5 of whom are living—Jacob F., Robert E., Edward E., Albert H. and Alice C. Mr. S. has held the office of Justice of the Peace and Collector, for one term each, and at present is Supervisor from Lodi tp. He owns a fine farm of 225 acres, which vocation he pursues in connection with stock-raising. In harvest time he operates a threshing-machine. Mr. and Mrs. Staebler are members of the Lutheran Church. Politically he is a Democrat.

Olleton C. Sweetland is among the leading and enterprising men of Lodi tp. He was born in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1812, and is a son of Eleazer and Deborah (Chamberlain) Sweetland, natives of Orange county, Vt., where the former was born Sept. 22, 1786, and the latter, Jan. 29, 1783. In 1816 Mr. S. removed with his parents to Livingston county, N. Y., where he was reared and educated. Dec. 11, 1842, he married Sarah A. Wasson, born in Livingston county, N. Y., March 6, 1816, and a daughter of Samuel Wasson. Three children were the result of this marriage—Edgar, who was born Aug. 8, 1845, married Marilla Newell; Helen, born Jan. 22, 1864, wife of Isaac W. Allen; and Miles, born Oct. 8, 1849, husband of Clara Smith. On Nov. 17, 1850, this union was severed by the death of Mrs. Sweetland, and April 13, 1851, Mr. S. married Mrs. Delia M. (Holden) Short, born Sept. 15, 1817. This union was blessed with 4 children—

Frank H., born Aug. 2, 1853, married Julia A. Geddes; Louis and Lester (twins), born Oct. 22, 1855; and Carrie, who was born July 24, 1861. Mrs. S. died March 30, 1873. Mr. S. is Justice of the Peace, an office which he has filled for over 25 years, and being so situated in the tp., that all the cases have been tried before the other justices near him, so in all his official career, he never had a case tried before him. He has officiated in different positions in the county for the last 40 years. He owns 240 acres of land, located on secs. 4, 5 and 9, and valued at $80 per acre. Mr. Sweetland is Democratic in politics, and a member of the Unitarian Church. Mr. S.'s ancestry were prominent men in their day, and pioneers in almost every section of country in which they located. A portrait of Mr. Sweetland appears in this work, on page 1153.

Royal Tower is a pioneer of this county, settling here in 1832. He was born in Addison county, Vt., March 18, 1811, and was a son of Eliphalet and Hannah Tower, natives of New Jersey. His father died in 1812, and at the age of 14 Loyal moved with his mother to New York, settling near Fort Ticonderoga, and in this section of country he was reared and educated. At the age of 21 he came to Washtenaw county. In October, 1836, he married Debbie A., daughter of Matthias and Sarah Valentine, the former settling in Pittsfield tp., this county, in 1838. This marriage was bountifully blessed with the birth of 14 children, 7 of whom, 3 sons and 4 daughters, are living—Henry, George, Frank, Julia, wife of Edward Manna; Sarah A., wife of Owen Stimpson; Angeline and —.

Abraham C. Voorhies, farmer, sec. 14, Lodi tp.; P. O., Saline; was born in Washtenaw county Jan. 29, 1838, and is a son of A. C. and Elizabeth Voorhies. He was reared on a farm, and educated in the public schools of this county. Aug. 9, 1862, he married Christiana Saley, born in this county Nov. 29, 1844, and daughter of Christian and Christiana Saley. One child was sent to bless this union—Ada M., born Sept. 8, 1875. On Aug. 8, 1862, Mr. Voorhies enlisted in Co. H, 20th Reg., Mich. Vol. Inf., under Col. Williams and Gen. Burnside. He participated in the battles of Knoxville, the Wilderness, Memphis, Chattanooga and Port Sanders. He served till the last gun was fired, and saw the star-spangled banner of "Freedom and Liberty" triumphantly unfurled above the bloody battle-field of the "Sunny South." He then returned home and resumed farming, and to-day owns 260 acres, valued at $80 per acre, and situated on secs. 14 and 19.

U. C. Warner, farmer, sec. 35, Lodi tp.; P. O., Saline; was born in Ontario Co., N. Y., Aug. 28, 1835. His parents, Oliver L. and Mary A. Warner, emigrated to this county in 1837, where C. C. grew to mature years. He was married Dec. 29, 1859, to Armina Sheldon, born in Washtenaw county Aug. 15, 1838, and daughter of Newton and Susanna Sheldon, natives of Cayuga Co., N. Y. On May 13, 1879, Mr. W.'s barn was struck by lightning and the entire contents, consisting of 52 head of sheep, four head of cattle, with 100 bushels of wheat and 200 bushels of corn, with the building, were burned to the ground. He recovered $1,600 insurance money from the Washtenaw Mutual Insurance Co., which repaid him in a great measure for the loss sustained. He now owns a valuable farm of 160 acres, situated on secs. 26 and 27.

Henry R. Watson, M. D., Saline, was born in Licking Co., Ohio, Nov. 18, 1828, and is a son of Daniel and Elizabeth Watson. Mr. Watson was reared on a farm, but his father being a physician, he naturally took to that profession, and in 1848 began the study of medicine with his parent. The following year he assisted his father, except one term spent at the Cincinnati Eclectic College. In 1850 he made a trip through the Southern States and located at Vicksburg, Miss., where he practiced his profession for some 10 months, at the expiration of which time he removed to Saline, Mich., and practiced with his father for four years. He then opened an office for himself, and has secured a lucrative practice. In 1878 he married Fidelia B. Lindsey. They have 1 child—Charles H. Mr. Watson owns a fine farm of 195 acres, located one mile north of Saline. Politically he adheres to the principles of the Democratic party.

Arthur A. Wood, breeder and dealer in thoroughbred Merino sheep, Saline, Mich., was born in Washtenaw county, July 18, 1850. His parents were Geo. S. and Fidelia Wood, the former a native of Cincinnati, and the latter of New York nativity. Mr. W. was reared on a farm, and educated at Ann Arbor. January, 1870, he was married to Clara J. Rogers, a native of this county, where she was born March 14, 1848, and the daughter of Joseph and Julia Rogers, both natives of the Empire State. One child, Roscoe M., has been sent to bless this happy union. Mr. Wood owns a fine farm of 120 acres, valued at $100 per acre, and is devoted to a great extent in breeding and raising of fine thoroughbred Merino sheep, of which he has a fine flock, numbering over 200. Mr. and Mrs. W. are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Saline, and politically he votes with the Republican party.

Ira Wood (deceased) was born in Danbury, Conn., Aug. 29, 1796. His parents were Daniel and Wealthy (Monroe) Wood, the latter being a second cousin of James Monroe, President of the United States. On Nov. 28, 1816, Mr. Wood married Maria Scott, and 5 children were born to them, 4 of whom are living—Lyman S. (a sketch of whom appears below), Jessup and George (twins), and Austria. Jeremiah died, aged 27. Mr. Wood started with his family to Washtenaw county in October, 1836, and after many serious hardships and privations, they arrived at their destination. He purchased five 80-acre farms in Lodi tp., settled down and began to clear them of timber. Mrs. Wood was born in Fairfield Co., Conn., April 3, 1797, and was a daughter of Jerry and Amelia (Wakeman) Scott, (both deceased) of Scotch ancestry. Her grandfather was an officer of no mean ability in the eight-years' war fought by the 13 colonies to free themselves from the yoke of England. Mr. Wood died March 27, 1856, after a life of usefulness and benefit to the community wherein he resided. He was a member of the Congregational Church of Lodi tp. till it disbanded, and was a prime mover in the organization of the society, and the building of the house of worship. When it was disbanded he immediately connected himself with the Congregational Church of Ann Arbor, being a member of that body at the time of his demise. "So sleep the pioneers who sink to rest, with all their country's wishes blest."

Lyman S. Wood was born in Danbury, Conn., April 9, 1819, and came with his parents to this county in October, 1836. He was reared in this county, and educated at Penn Yan Academy, in Yates Co., N. Y. He taught school for a number of years, but in 1878 retired from active life with a competency sufficient for a good old age. Mr. W. is one of the original members of the Washtenaw County Agricultural Society, and holds a life membership in that association. He was President of the society in 1873-'4. In 1854 he assisted in the organization of the Republican party, and is to-day one of its firm adherents. On Oct. 6, 1841, he was married to Parmelia Ward, born Sept. 20, 1821, and daughter of Owen S. and Harriet Ward. To this union 5 children were born—Martha and Mary (twins), the former the wife of L. J. Taylor, a soldier in the civil war; Emily, Morris G. and Ira E., husband of Ada Cobb, of Saline. Mr. Wood possesses 160 acres of good farm land, on sec. 22, and valued at $80 per acre.

In 1834-'7 the tide of immigration flowed along the valley of the Washtenong, until toward the close of the latter year every acre of arable and waste land was claimed by a patentee. In the case of Freedom it may be said that immediately succeeding the date of its organization 2,000 acres of the wilderness was turned into fertile fields; throughout its length and breadth the woodman's ax was heard, and a few more years of labor converted the country into a smiling garden.

FIRST EVENTS.

Dr. Porter traversed the township early in 1831. James W. Hill was the first settler in June, 1831.

The first school was established by Hill in his own house. He was teacher of the first district school.

Miss Gillett was the first child born in the township.

The first marriage in the township was that of Miss Angelina Rouse in 1833. The second that of Eldred Spencer and Miss Emeline Adams, in December, 1834. A marriage license was granted to John Lewis and Sarah Ann Miller in 1832, but the ceremony took place in an adjoining township.

↳ Roswell Preston was appointed a Justice of the Peace March 7, 1834, by Gov. Porter. H. M. Griffin was the first Supervisor.

In 1833 the provisions of the settlement were exhausted, and a report was current that not a few of the settlers were wholly without food.

As late as 1834 the wolves destroyed 20 sheep belonging to James Raymond, in one night. This is only an instance of their terrible ravenousness.

The first ball was given at the house of Litchfield, in 1833.

B. F. Burnett, a Methodist exhorter, presided over the first religious meeting ever held in the township, at the house of James W. Wills. Arunah Bennett was the first ordained preacher who held services in the township. The meeting was at R. Preston's house in June, 1834.

James W. Hill built the first log house, raised the first barn, and planted the first wheat field in 1831. Richard Preston raised the second barn, without the aid of whisky.

The first brick-kiln was constructed in 1833, by Douglas & Co., on the Campbell farm.

In 1834 Mrs. Barbary Bailey, then an old lady of 84 summers, arrived in the township after an uninterrupted journey from Benton, Yates Co., N. Y. She died in 1845, aged 95 years.

Of the citizens of Freedom, James W. Hill, Levi Rogers and Dr. Morgan were members of the State Legislature. Dr. Samuel was elected County Treasurer; Judah B. McLane, Register of Deeds, and Jacob Preston, Drain Commissioner.

Americans settled the township. To-day there is not one American family occupying a home there. It is a German community, living under and enjoying the blessing of American laws.

The first death in the settlement was that of Jacob Haas, who was killed October, 1831. Haas was a young man of 20 winters, industrious, agreeable and the eldest son of one of the first settlers. He, with his father, was engaged in cutting logs, when one of the heavy oaks fell on the boy, crushing him to death. His end was as sad as it was sudden. Eldred Spencer, a citizen of Scio, and the nearest neighbor of the Haas family, was soon present on the scene. He conveyed the dead body to Schelling's house in the neighboring township, where it was prepared for burial.

A year after the death of Haas, two young men, named David Cook and William Campbell, left their homes to assist at the raising of Bingham's saw-mill in the town of Lina. Having finished their labors they started en route to Hugh Campbell's dwelling in Freedom; but owing to the want of a blazed trail and to a bad pocket-compass, the unfortunate boys realized their worst fears—they were lost. Tired out with fatigue, disheartened, cold and hungry, Campbell sank down upon the virgin soil, while Cook pushed onward, desperately, earnestly, to seek an outlet from that interminable forest, and reach the home of man. He succeeded in reaching home in an exhausted condition. A search was made for Campbell; but when found, his last breath was escaping. He lay upon the brink of eternity.

ORGANIC.

The settlement of this portion of Washtenaw made such progress that within a few years after James W. Hill made his location, a meeting to organize a municipal government was called. In December, 1833, 22 voters assembled at the house of Henry M. Griffin to consider the subject of organization. Alexander Peekins proposed that the meeting petition the Territorial Council to enact that a portion of the county known as township 3 south, in range 4 east, be a township by the name of Freedom. This proposition was seconded by Samuel Peekins, and carried. A petition was drawn up and presented to the council and an act in accordance with the prayer of the petitioners was approved March 7, 1834. This act provided, also, that an election of township officers should be held April 7, at the dwelling-house of Henry M. Griffin. This election was duly held, and resulted in the choice of H. M. Griffin for Supervisor, with David C. Raymond as Town Clerk.

The supervisors of the township from H. M. Griffin's time to the present, comprise: Reuben Williams, Stunburg, Wm. Ossius, Elias Haire, Breining and John G. Feldkamp. Mr. Feldkamp has served in the office for two terms,—one of seven years and one of three years.

The clerks since D. C. Raymond's time to the present comprise Elias Haire, Wm. Buss, Philip Johns, Fred Vogle, Jacob Breining and Jacob Knapp.

Elias Haire, Wm. Ossius, Joe. Daviter Jacob Breining and Aaron Feldkamp have served as Justices of the Peace. The present officers are: J. G. Feldkamp, Supervisor; Jacob Knapp, Clerk; Geo. Veigeding, Treasurer; Henry J. Daviter, Wm. Byerle, Jacob Johns, Justices of the Peace; Godfrey Grau, Highway Commissioner; John Butler, School Superintendent; and Wm. Kiebe, Mr. Grau and Theodore Ulrich, Constables.

THE CHURCHES.

The Evangelical Lutheran Church of Freedom was organized in 1842, with Rev. Mr. Schmid as pastor. The members comprised: Jacob Raab, Geo. Schmirring, Ernst Haarer, Geo. Fuegel, Gottlieb Scherds, Matt. Alber and Adam Spathelf. The pastors succeeding Mr. Schmid were Revs. Wertbraht, Klerniges, Hildner, G. J. Hildner, John Newman and Gottlieb Kunzler, the present pastor. The present church was built in 1858. The number of the congregation in 1881 is 106. There are two more Lutheran Churches in the township, of which Revs. John Bauman and Mr. Klingman are pastors.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is presided over by Rev. Edward Weiss, as pastor. The congregation is large.

Catholic.—The first church of this denomination was erected two miles north of the present church, in 1839. The missionary priests were Revs. Kreutel and Bernick. The old members comprise John Emer, John Graff, T. Mosier, Adam Kress, Martin Cash, Paul Fritz, Adam Reidle, J. Plum, Adam Kramer, Conrad Sickinger, Frank Lerch, Sapphire Lerch, Philip Franc and Joseph Weis, with their families.

The present church was erected in 1858, at a cost of $3,000, and dedicated to St. Francis de Borgia, by Bishop Lefevere the same year. The mission has been attended by Revs. Van Gennip, Van Lawe, Olgeier, Lichtner, Bruck and J. Stauss, the present pastor. The congregation at present numbers 200. The parochial house, a neat brick structure, was built in 1873, at a cost of $2,000.

Miscellaneous.—Rev. M. Sullivan, of the M. E. Church, organized a class in the township in May, 1835. Rev. Fred Smith, a Wittenbergian, preached at the house of William Schultz in 1835. The Lutheran Church was subsequently organized in 1843. The Catholic congregation was organized about the same time. The Churches of the township at present comprise three Lutheran, one Catholic, and one German M. E. Church. The church buildings are among the finest in the county.

The Schools of the township are well ordered, and the morale of the children good. It is said that both the young and old form a hive of quiet industry wherein every competitor not of German nativity or extraction must fail to exist. Industry is inculcated in the schools and fostered in the home circle.

BIOGRAPHIES.

William Beuerle, Freedom tp., sec. 22, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, A. D. 1839, where he was educated, and lived until 1854, when he came to America. He remained in New York a short time and then came West by the way of Buffalo and Canada. He went to Lansing, thence to Wisconsin, and later into the Southwestern States. In 1861 he returned to the north and purchased land where he now lives. He built a log house and opened a saloon, which he has carried on to the present, at the same time doing much work as a carpenter. In 1865 he built his present commodious quarters. In politics Mr. Beuerle is a Democrat. He has held the office of Constable six years, and during that time was Deputy-Sheriff; Tp. Treasurer, two terms; Justice of the Peace over 10 years, and still holding it. He is a member of the Arbeiter-verein of Manchester. In 1863 he was married to Caroline Artz, of Lansing, a native of Wurtemberg. To them have been born 6 sons and 2 daughters.

Rev. G. Kuenzler, Pastor of the Evangelic Lutheran Bethel Church of Freedom, was born in Switzerland, Canton Thurgau, A. D. 1842. His parents were John and Anna Maria Bornlauser, his father being a farmer. There he was educated and reared. He graduated in his native land, and after coming to this country in 1873, he graduated from Mission College, at Marthasville, Mo. The same year he was ordained at Washington, Mo. His first pastorate was at Elliston, Ohio, where he remained until 1877. In that year he became pastor at Freedom. In 1874 he was married to Miss Anna M. Deuber, a native of Switzerland. To them have been born Gottlieb Ernest and Anna Maria.

F. Pfizenmaier, Freedom tp., sec. 3, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, A. D. 1819. His parents were Michael and Gottlieben (Kubler). There he was reared and educated, and lived until 17 years old. In 1837 he came to America and came to this State, county and town. For three years he worked by the month. In 1843 he bought 80 acres of land in the south part of Freedom, where he lived until 1850. He then purchased his present farm of 180 acres and there has since lived. In politics he is a Republican and has held a number of town offices. In 1873 he was appointed Postmaster of Fredonia postoffice, which office he now holds. Mr. Pfizenmaier is a Lutheran in religion. In 1846 he was married to Regina Koch, a native of Wurtemberg, who died in 1865, leaving 3 sons and 5 daughters. He married for his second wife, in 1868, Mary Spitteler, a native of Switzerland. To them have been born 2 sons and 4 daughters.

Rev. Joseph Staus, Priest of St. Francis (Roman Catholic) Church of Freedom, and St. Mary's, of Manchester, was born in the city of Bensingen, Hohenzollern, March 13, 1848, his father being a farmer in that country. At Sigmaringen he was educated, studying at the Gymnasium of Hedingen nine years, and passing from it by examination in 1872. During the next year he traveled and taught six months in his native town, to fill a vacancy caused by the death of the regular teacher. In 1873 he came to America, going at once to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he arrived Nov. 23, 1873. Dec. 15, 1873, he entered the Theological Seminary of Mount St. Mary's, at Cincinnati, and passed his examinations in 1875. March 12, 1876, he was ordained priest at Monroe, Mich., by Bishop Burgess. His first pastorate was at Pontiac, where for six months he filled the place of a priest who had gone to France. From there he went to the parishes of Wright, Ottawa Co., and Alpine, Kent Co., serving these two four years. June 13, 1880, he assumed the pastorate of St. Francis and St. Mary's parishes. In the first there are about 30 families, and in the second about 45 families. Father Staus is a man of fine education and talent. Broad-minded and intelligent, he is liberal and just to all. His kindness of heart and truly Christian charity has won for him the love and respect of all who come in contact with him, so that in both parishes not only the people of his own flock, but many others as well, feel that in him they have a true friend.

SHARON TOWNSHIP.

Sharon is a country of agriculturists. For them it forms the ideal of rustic beauty, even as it wins admiration from the passing traveler. The surface is a succession of gentle undulations, with a ridge running from northeast to southwest, known as the "Short Hills." Throughout the township, the fields and homes of a happy people may be seen scattered with a beautiful negligence as to regularity of location. The forests were comparatively extensive, but are now reduced, leaving only a few acres appertaining to each holding. The soil is of the most productive character, being a loam soil with a gravelly subsoil, and the water courses, comprising the Raisin river with a feeder of Mill creek, capable of supplying all the motive power required for the successful running of mill-machinery in the present or prospective time. There is no body of water deserving the name of lake in this township; however, a few ponds are found which form the receptacle for the waters of entering rivulets. The valley of the north bend of the Raisin and the high lands on each side, form a magnificent district of which any people may be proud.

THE AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

Sharon township comprises an area of 23,040 acres, laid off into 137 farms. The lands under cultivation in the district extend over 17,500 acres; the unimproved lands include the remainder. The area sown to wheat in 1880 was 4,267, being an increase of 267 acres over the year 1879. In the latter year 4,000 acres produced 96,723 bushels of wheat, which shows an average of 24.18 per acre. The corn crop aggregated 128,545 bushels, produced on 1,736 acres. Five hundred and twenty-one acres in oats yielded 20,830 bushels; 812 acres of clover gave a return of 1,038 bushels; 102 acres of barley produced 2,506 bushels; 86 acres of potatoes yielded 7,747 bushels. The meadow lands, comprising 2,426 acres, produced 3,366 tons of hay.

The township is peculiarly an agricultural one. The cultivators of its rich soil leave nothing undone to excel in their vocation, and thus a salutary system of agriculture gives promise of transmitting to another generation a fertile and inexhaustible soil.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The following sketch of the early settlement of Sharon, from the pen of Col. J. H. Fellows, one of the surviving pioneers, contains many interesting facts, and will form a valuable addition to this history. He states:

The first land bought from the Government was in the fall of 1830, by Lewis C. Kellam, and the second purchased by M. Luce, of Livingston county, N. Y., on section 32, which was afterward bought and improved by Amasa Gillette. The next was taken by Moses Pool in the spring of 1831 for his adopted daughter, Hannah P. Tracy, subsequently Mrs. Perry. The next was taken by David I. Sloat, on section 34, early in 1831. About that time there was much excitement about the farm lands at the north bend of the Raisin, and the woods were thronged with land-seekers. People came from all quarters; they built fires and camped out nights, and their beds were made of soft marsh hay cut with their jack-knives. After their morning meal they sped on each day with renewed strength and courage. Before that year passed the most of the land was taken. David I. Sloat built the first house. His three sons—John, Joshua R. and Cornelius, with J. H. Fellows, assisted in erecting this pioneer dwelling. Elm bark was used for roofing, also for the upper floor or chamber; there was no ground floor. The house was finished in a week, and the family moved into their new home in May, 1831.

Joseph O. Gilbert was the first to plow the land, in June, 1831, on the farm where Daniel G. Rose now lives. Mr. Gilbert was the first Postmaster and mail-carrier, bringing the mail in a shot-bag from Lodi Plains to his house. In that year the following persons together with those named above built shanties, and began a pioneer life in Sharon: John Bessey, Henry Gilbert, Henry Rowe, Joseph O. Gilbert, Amos Bullard, David Cook and Francis A. Gillet. In the spring of 1832 there came several pioneer families, comprising Ebenezer H. Conklin, Oliver Kellogg, Lewis Allen, Nicholas Becker, Abijah Marvin, R. L. Fellows, Marvin Burke, Ira Annabel, Wm. Campbell and Geo. C. Lathrop. J. H. Fellows, Amasa Gillett, Wait Peck, Oliver and Hiram High came in 1833, and Ashley Parks in 1834.

June 22, 1830, Lewis C. Kellam, of Pike county, Pa., located the first lot of land in this township, being the north 84.24 acres of the northeast quarter of section 1. Oct. 1, 1830, Daniel F. Luce, a Government surveyor, located the second lot of land. It was the northeast quarter of section 32, and afterward formed part of the farm of Amasa Gillett. If those gentlemen did not get up a corner on real estate in this town, they each got as close as they could to the opposite corners diagonally—Kellam in the extreme northeast, and Luce lacked one section of the extreme southwest. Miss Hannah Tracy located the third.

In the spring of 1831 Ira Annabel, Amos Bullard, John Bessey, M. Burk, David Cook, Edward Campbell, James Harlow Fellows, R. L. Fellows, Joseph O. Gilbert, Francis A. Gillet, Henry Row, Gilbert Row and J. R. Sloat made the first visit to this township, and this their life-long home.

The familiar names of Dr. Ebenezer H. Conklin, Courad Row Wait Peck, Nicholas Row, John Cobb, Sidney W. Dewey, Sabin Johnson, Oliver Kellogg, and others, appear on the tract books as having entered land in 1831, but did not settle thereon until later.

THE OLD PEOPLE OF THE TOWNSHIP IN 1881.

Among the old people of Sharon, who have attained the age of 70 years and upward, are the following: Samuel B. Raymond, 81 years; Mrs. Charlotte (Sweet) Raymond, 78; Wait Peck, 72; Col. James Harley Fellows, 72; Amos Bullard, 71; Charles Bachman, 71; Mrs. Sarah Campbell, 71; Mrs. Abigail Conklin, 78; Mrs. Maria Cook, 75; Matthew C. Dubois, 75; Mrs. Sarah Dubois, 73; Miss Louise Flatt, 71; John Faulkner, 72; Mrs. Augusta High, 72; John Hartbeck, 80; Mrs. Mary Kappler, 71; Mrs. Olive List, 78; Mrs. Sophia Fellows, 77; Henry Landwehr, 80; Adam Lehmann, 78; Mrs. Rica Lehmann, 71; Joseph Mount, 73; Ashley Parks, 79; Miss Nancy Rice, 75 (died Jan., 1881); James Raymond 76; Betsey Raymond, 79; Cyrus Raymond, 73; Mrs. Laura St. John, 80; Carlos Spencer, 73; and Mrs. Hannah P. Perry, 70.

Mrs. H. Perry, Mrs. Conklin, Mrs. Sophia Fellows, Wait Peck and James H. Fellows reside upon the lands which they or their husbands purchased from the general Government.

ORGANIC.

By an act approved April 12, 1827, this then unorganized and unnamed township was attached to and formed part of the township of Dexter. The town then had no name and not much reputation, except the lingering one that was given it and the whole territory by a committee of the Congress of 1818, sent to the Territory of Michigan to examine it for soldiers' bounty land. That committee actually reported that the Territory of Michigan was worthless for agricultural purposes. It must have got lost in the "Short Hills" over there, or got stuck in Chandler's big marsh near Lansing; it is certain that when old Father Time stood feeling of his keen-edged scythe on the morning of the first day of the year 1830, this township had no inhabitants save the wandering Indians who roamed its forests in search of game, or fished along the shaded banks of the Sho-wae-cae-mette, or River of the Grapes, now called the Raisin.

In 1832 and 1833 the township was rapidly settled, and a name for this beautiful tract became of the first importance. Some differences of opinion arose as to the proper one to select. It was thought by the settlers who came from Amenia and Romulus, New York, that the name of their old town would confer honor on this new child of the forest; while pioneers knew that "Sharon" was the loveliest name among ten thousand, and that the name of their home in Connecticut ought to be given to this, the new home of their adoption. Petitions were forwarded to the Legislative Coun-oil expressing those different views. It is related that Dr. Amariah Conklin was mounted on a horse by his father, old Dr. Conklin, and sent out with a "Sharon" petition up into Berks and Annabil settlement on his first electioneering tour. The doctor has had great success since then as a physician, but he never did a better day's ride in his life than when he killed those Amenia and Romulus petitions.

On the 7th day of March, 1834, the act of the Legislative Council was approved by Gov. George B. Porter, enacting that "all that part of the county of Washtenaw comprised in surveyed township 3 south, range 3 east, be a township by the name of Sharon." In the words of an old and honored citizen, Andrew Robison, "We are satisfied with a good name, and would not change it for any other this side of Paradise."

The first town meeting held in the township of Sharon, appointed at the house of Oliver Kellogg, April 7, 1834, met and adjourned to the school-house. The following were the officers elected: Lewis Allen, Supervisor; Benjamin F. Burnett, Town Clerk; Conrad Rowe, Daniel Porter, Francis A. Gillet, Commissioners of Highways; Allen De Lamater, Henry Rowe, Benjamin F. Burnett, Commissioners of Common Schools; Conrad Rowe, Abijah Marvin, Overseers of the Poor; Gilbert Rowe, Oliver Kellogg, Micah Porter, Assessors; Luke Gilbert, Constable and Collector; Micah Porter, Henry Rowe, Fence Viewer; John Sloat, Pound Master. Signed by the Board of Directors of Election: Ebenezer H. Conklin, Benjamin F. Burnett, Micah Porter.

J. M. Cowen

The public men of the township since its organization who have served in the Legislative Chambers and Constitutional Convention comprise Dr. A. H. Conklin, Micah Porter, Lewis Allen, Oliver Kellogg, Amasa Gillet, Andrew Robison, Oliver High, J. J. Robison and David G. Rose.

LIST OF PRESENT OFFICERS.

David G. Rose, Supervisor; Albert H. Perry, Clerk; Geo. L. Kuhl, Treasurer; Stephen M. Merithew and Matthew I. Flynn, Justices of the Peace; Will B. Osborn, School Superintendent; Augustus High, School Inspector; James H. Hood, Commissioner of Highways; Elnathan C. Fish, Drain Commissioner; Geo. L. Kuhl, J. Tabor Feldkant, Charles W. Raymond and Joseph K. Perry, Constables.

THE FIRST ON THE GROUND.

In June, 1832, the first religious society was organized within the dwelling of Gilbert Row. Rev. E. H. Pilcher was the chief organizer. The first society comprised Henry Row, Conrad Row, Harriet Row, Geo. C. Lathrop, Mrs. Lathrop, Mrs. Conrad Row, Mrs. Gilbert Row, Anthony Yerkes and J. O. Gilbert. A church was subsequently built at Row's Corners, which was afterward moved to Manchester.

The saw-mill was always one of the first industrial establishments to connect itself with settlements on timber lands. S. H. Row, in his reference to the first saw-mill erected in the township, states that "the first saw-mill in Sharon was built on sec. 29, by Amasa Gillett and B. F. Burnett, on the extreme northerly bend of the River Raisin. The running gear was placed above the saw, and made a terrible noise. This mill was the beginning of 'Sharon Hollow.' It never justified the expectations of its younger days, but it was a rare treat for some of us to go there. Goldsmith was born in 1728, so he did not take Sharon Hollow as a text for his "Deserted Village;" but when I first saw it some portions of his poem would have been appropriate."

"How often have I paused on every charm,
The sheltered cot, the cultivated farm,
The never-failing brook, the busy mill."

Ashley Parks, the first village blacksmith, arrived in 1834.

The first dwelling-house was built by David J. Sloat, on section 34. In its construction he was assisted by his three sons and Col. J. H. Fellows.

Richardson and Temple opened the first store in the township. It subsequently passed into the hands of Nathaniel Ambrose, who made additions to the building. The latter kept a grocery and tavern, and is said to have done a large and profitable business. The building ultimately was purchased by Michael Kappler.

The first child born in the township was Minerva Bullard, born Sept. 3, 1833. The first male child born was Virgil Peck, in 1834. The first marriage in the township is said to be that of Loran Keefe with Miss Palmer, a lady who came over the lake with the Fitzgerald family. Keefe is now living at Teconsha, Calhoun Co., and fails not to remember his search for a license, and then for Justice Smith Lapham, of Lodi.

The first death occurred in 1833. During that year David J. Sloat, the builder of the first house ever erected in the township by an American, was laid in a grave made on the land which he purchased a short time previously.

The first supervisor was Lewis Allen, and the first town clerk B. F. Burnett. The first justices were Micah Porter and Lazarus Hull.

The first attempt to levy an execution resulted in the stampede of the law officers, one escaping with a simple warning, and the other with a quart of boiling starch covering his hat and coat.

The first frame house was built by Luke Gilbert in 1833. It was located on the spot where J. J. Robison's residence now stands.

The first frame barn was erected by Amasa Gillet, on section 32. In 1836 the barn-building era commenced.

The first case of drowning in the township was that of a son of Joseph Gillet. He was a boy of six summers and drowned in the mill-race. The second occurred in 1878, when a child of James Corwin was drowned.

The first homicide committed in the township was that of Geo. Coleman, killed at the hands of Mr. Wood, who was arraigned on a charge of murder; but the jury concluded that he was not-guilty of murder, believing it to be a case of justifiable homicide.

The suicide of a settler named Tague, in 1835, was one of the first tragedies in the settlement. The second was that of an unknown German, who hanged himself in November, 1867.

THE FIRST SCHOOL

taught in the township was that in the Row school-house, by Miss Myra Winchester. The curriculum was of the most primitive character; so was the building, yet the young school-mistress is said to have taken a special pride in the old house, and to be much interested in her young pupils. The school-house was a frame building, but neither lathed nor plastered.

MISCELLANIES.

However strange it may appear, the early settlers of Sharon were not exposed to the numerous and serious difficulties which surrounded those of the neighboring townships. While over 50 per cent. of the settlers of Manchester and Bridgewater were suffering from fever and ague, not more than 10 per cent. of the people of Sharon were ill.

All that remains of the wild-cat bank of Sharon is the bank building, and the recollection of all the evils fostered within it. Under the free banking law a company was organized, a branch of which was located here, with Reuel Ambrose as President, and S. Baldwin, Cashier. The business of this concern was actually extensive, until justice swept it out of existence.

In 1832 the threats of the Black Hawk warriors and the fears of the pioneers of Chicago caused a thrill of fear to pervade the settlements from Chicago to Detroit. When the news reached Sharon many of the settlers were away; but the terrible reports which reached them on their travels urged their quick return to their new homes. Many assembled at the shanty of Porter C. Lathrop, and resolved to defend the settlement; but the Sacs never came sufficiently near to permit the sons of Sharon to expend their valor.

The Toledo War seemed to offer opportunity to the settlers to indulge their penchant for a military career. The action of Gov. Lucas, of Ohio, was stigmatized. Various epithets of an unusually uncomplimentary character were hurled at the new claimant for the "six-mile strip," and a hundred resolutions made to give battle to the Buck-Eye invaders. The soldiers of Ohio calmed down before the Wolverines; the United States' troops presented themselves also, and all the terrors of a "Peninsular war" fled before the assurances of a peace doubly preserved. Col. James Harley Fellows, of Sharon, was one of the leading spirits in this "war," and for a short period commanded the defenders of Southern Michigan.

The story of the death of William Campbell, given in the sketch of Freedom township, is referred to by the early settlers of Sharon. It occurred in 1832, and was perhaps the second death recorded in the history of the district now forming the southwestern townships of Washtenaw.

During the earlier years of the settlement, two immigrants from New York State made their homes in Sharon. One arrived a year after the other. The new-comer was accosted by Oliver High, who, on learning the native place of the party addressed, said: "Why, there is a neighbor of yours located a little ways off." After hearing his name, the new settler said: "Oh! yes, I knew him very well down in _____. He had to run away with an officer at his heels." Mr. High then waited upon the older settler and said: "Why, I met an old neighbor of yours down here, named _____." "Why, yes, of course; that fellow had to leave _____ between two days, and also left a hundred neighbors searching for him."

One of the old ladies of Sharon, whose son was employed by J. C. McGee, waited upon the employer with the object of demanding pay for the boy's services. Mr. McGee told her that he had paid the boy. This incensed the old lady to such a degree that when she reached the door, she addressed him, saying, "I'll call you the worst name possible: You're a —— black Republican."

In the days of the Toledo war, the wives and children of the settlers looked forward to the moment of parting, with a singular sorrow. The time at length arrived when the volunteers mustered into service. They bade adieu to their friends as soldiers generally do; but in the cases of several men of Sharon, their wives would not permit them to go. However, they should go, and in one instance the wife cried out, "I'll never see you any more," then fainted, and before the lady recovered, this faithful soldier was off to the war. This lady now dwells in Sharon.

THE WOLVES.

Very soon after Col. Fellows' arrival in Sharon, himself, Amasa Gillett and others purchased a few sheep. Within a year the wolves grew so bold that they visited the sheepfold, scared the woolly creatures, which fled through the fields pursued by the wolves. During that chase the destroyers robbed the settlement of three sheep. Col. Fellows went forth to prevent a greater destruction, and met sheep and wolves face to face, too late, however, to save the three animals already killed. Next day traps were set, which resulted in the capture of an old wolf; the day succeeding, a young wolf was trapped. The latter was killed by the Colonel.

The discovery of a fire in the saw-mill of "Sharon Hollow" by the son of the owner, saved the township from being charged with incendiarism. The running gear, which was placed over the saw-gate, set fire to the wood, which smoldered from shutting hour on Saturday night until Monday morning, when at the moment of discovery the blaze broke out.

A monument to the 24 soldiers of Sharon who died in the war for the Union, has been erected. The designer and builder was Eisele, of Ann Arbor, who received $1,500 for his labors.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

There are nine school-houses in the township (including one now being built). Seven of these are of wood-frames, one of stone and one of brick.

Of church edifices there are three, two owned by the M. E. Church, and one by the Evangelical or German Methodist. The first one built was on sec. 32, and beautifully situated in the burr-oak grove left by its donor for the purpose, the late Amasa Gillett. Hence its name, "Gillett church." The building known as "Sharon Center church" was built by the Congregationalists in 1848. The society was organized Jan. 24 of that year, Andrew Robison, Chairman, and H. E. Osborne, Secretary. The first trustees were: Oliver Kellogg, Micalh Porter and Harvey Annabil. The first pastor given to the M. E. society was Rev.

McGee Bardwell. The first pastor under the new order was Rev. Mr. Sutton. Rev. Duke Whitting is the present pastor.

The German Methodist church is of brick, and situated on Rowe's Corners.

He was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention that met in Baltimore in 1872. He has twice been nominated for Congress, in 1874 and in 1876. Has been for several terms chosen Supervisor of his town. In 1878 was elected to the Lower House of the Legislature, and was complimented with his party nomination for Speaker. While Mr. Robison has been the nominee of his party for various places of honor and trust, he boasts the fact that he never solicited a nomination from a single delegate.

MANCHESTER TOWNSHIP.

The township of Manchester, or Mashawesid Senibawegin, forms the main section of the Burr Oak Plains of Washtenaw. The principal water courses include the River Raisin in the northeastern, and Iron creek in the southern, sections. The lakes comprise Iron lake, Half-Moon lake, Lower lake, Mud Lake, Holmes lake, Twin lakes, Mountain lake and Sigwan Kitchigami, a small pond near the medicinal springs, in section 30. Iron lake, or Biwabiko, occupies one-fourth the area of section 29, with arms stretching into the northwestern quarter of section 28. Upper and Lower Half-Moon lakes are picturesque sheets of water, connected by a creek which runs through Mud lake and other ponds. Mountain lake, in section 35, is so called from the range of hills which rise from its eastern shore. Throughout the southern sections the surface is undulating, the soil rich, and the water supply sufficient for all purposes. The Raisin enters the township at the northwest angle of section 6, and again in the northeast quarter of section 3, where it takes a southeasterly course, flowing through the village of Manchester. The Jackson branch of L. S. & M. S. and the D., H. & S. W. railroads run through the northern sections, each having a depot at Manchester.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

Manchester township claims the largest area of land of all the other municipal divisions of the county. The improved lands are said to occupy over 15,136, and the unimproved 7,320 acres, giving a total of 22,456 acres. There are 238 farms in the township, which if equally divided would contain 94.35 acres each.

In 1879, 3,811 acres were devoted to wheat; but in 1880 this number was increased to 4,355. The total product of this cereal in 1879 equaled 93,114, or 24.43 bushels per acre. The number of acres under corn in 1879 is said to be 1,635, which produced 116,115 bushels; 678 acres devoted to oats yielded 27,416 bushels; 459 of clover showed a product of 774 bushels, and 179 acres of barley produced 4,335 bushels. The acreage given to the growth of potatoes was comparatively limited, only 98 acres being planted in 1879, which produced 9,793 bushels. 2,360 acres of meadow lands yielded 2,945 tons of hay. This yield of hay is much below the average of other years.

ORGANIC.

The first township meeting was held at the school-house in the village of Manchester, Monday, April 3, 1837, under authority of an act approved March 11, 1837, directing that all "that portion of the county of Washtenaw designated in the United States survey as township 4 south, of range 3 east, be, and the same is, hereby set off, and organized into a separate township, by the name of Manchester; and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the school-house in Manchester." This meeting was organized by appointing James H. Fargo, Moderator; Joshua L. Smith, Wm. S. Carr and Levi B. Pratt, Inspectors of Election, and Wm. D. Clark, Secretary of the meeting. Those officers decided that the electors should record their votes by "general ticket." Having completed these preliminaries, the election was proceeded with, and the following results obtained:

James H. Fargo was elected Supervisor, having received 78 votes, Geo. J. Barker and John B. Crane, his opponents, receiving one vote each. Wm. D. Clark was elected Township Clerk by a majority vote of 78, Bennett F. Root, the opposing candidate, receiving one. The Justices elected were Samuel Palmer, Joseph S. Clark and Fordyce Foster. The first received 81 votes, the second 78, and the third, 44. Morris Frost and James H. Rice, the unsuccessful candidates for that office, received respectively 35 votes and one. Joshua L. Smith, James Stevens and Thomas Morgan were elected Assessors. The first received 78, the second 80, and the third 80 votes. Daniel A. Mills, Fred Valentine and W. S. Carr received one vote each. The Commissioners of Highways elected at the first meeting were Erastus Palmer, 79 votes; Levi B. Pratt, 74 votes, and Henry Hay, 59 votes. The candidates not successful were John B. Crane, 24 votes; John Fisk and Joseph Noyes, one vote each. The first School Inspectors of Manchester township were John B. Case, Thomas Stockwell and John B. Crane. The two former received 79 votes each, the latter 39 votes. Morris Frost and Levi B. Pratt were elected Overseers of the Poor, the former receiving 51 votes and the latter 74. The first Constables elected were George Roberts and Samuel W. Foster, each of whom received 79 votes; George Roberts was elected Collector, having received 79 votes, David B. Gilbert, the second candidate receiving only one.

The following Path-Masters were elected by a viva-voce vote:— Thomas Green, district No. 1; Daniel Cross, No. 2; Zenas Root, No. 3; James H. Fargo, No. 4; George Roberts, No. 5, with Joseph Noyes and Frederick Valentine. In addition to the duty of road overseer imposed upon each of the above named men, he had also to act as fence-viewer and pound-master in his district. The first series of resolutions adopted by the township comprised the following: "That all cattle and swine, excepting hogs under 40 pounds weight, should be free commoners; that each pound-master shall use his own yard for a pound; that a bounty of $10 shall be paid to each and every person who shall catch and kill a wolf within the limits of this township; that a fence four and one-half feet in height shall be considered as sufficient and lawful; that a sum of $25 be raised for the support of the poor during the ensuing year; that the sum of $50 be raised to pay the bounty on wolves during the ensuing year; that Geo. J. Barker be Treasurer to hold the money raised for bounty on wolves." The minute book is signed by the moderator, clerk, and two inspectors of election, Levi B. Pratt's signature not being appended.

At a special meeting of the Board, held in October, 1837, W. M. Carter was elected Collector and Constable, vice Roberts, resigned.

In the following list the names of the principal township officers are given from November, 1837, to the present time.

THE FIRST INDUSTRIAL BUILDINGS.

John Gilbert, of Ypsilanti, patented the lands upon which Manchester village now stands. He saw that it was a favorable site for a village, and with a view of building up his interests here, he contracted with Emanuel Case for the construction of a grist-mill. The lumber used in the erection of this early industrial concern was prepared by the contractors, Mr. Case and Harry Gilbert, the hewed timber being got out by W. S. and Elijah Carr.

Emanuel Case built the first hotel and the first saw-mill in 1832, as well as the first grist-mill. The saw-mill was erected for Major Gilbert. This mill is standing at present and is known as the "Farmer's Grist-mills'."

Lewis Allen erected the first school-building in 1834, on the present site of the "Old brick school-house," the old frame being moved backward.

The Manchester distillery was erected in 1838, by Barnabas Case and Benj. Davis. Elias Fountain, John Faulkner, Ben. French and F. Freeman subsequently purchased an interest. The structure was located on the bank of the river, opposite the site of the iron foundry. The original building is still standing. An apostle of temperance happened to question Case on the propriety of establishing such a concern, when the distiller replied, "I am doing more for the cause of temperance than he who advocates total abstinence. I sell the pure article; it will hurt no one. Manufactured as it is, on the banks of the pure waters of the Raisin, it is as pure as the water you drink. No one need fear of being injured by it." This reasoning would scarcely justify the distiller of to-day; yet 40 years ago the temperance orator feared to dwell on the point.

OTHER EVENTS OF EARLY TIMES.

Emanuel Case was the first justice of the peace. He had his office in the hotel which he built, then operated by George Roberts. This hotel was a frame building, and the site is now occupied by the main building of the present "Goodyear House."

The Sac war created the usual excitement throughout the settlement. Col. Fellows called out the men, placed them under arms and awaited patiently the advance of the scalping Sacs. Black Hawk did not come, however, and so the warrior zeal calmed down, permitting the citizen soldiery to resume their various industries.

The Toledo war was the second signal or call to arms. Gov. Mason demanded of the Territory a defensive force of 1,000 men, and to make up the regiment of defenders, Manchester offered its quota. This little army corps was placed under command of Col. James H. Fellows, who led it into the "six-mile strip," as an army of occupation, and quartered there for a period of three months, awaiting the onslaught of the Buckeye militia. Fortunately the timely interference of Uncle Samuel in this inter-State quarrel obviated fratricidal strife, and brought about that interchange of kind words and actions which should always characterize the States of the Union. Col. Fellows and his troops returned to their homes, satisfied that they performed all that was required of them.

The first postoffice established in the township was that of the hamlet of Elba in 1833, with Harvey Squires as the postmaster. In 1837 Squires resigned, when Dr. Bennett F. Root was appointed. Dr. Root presided over the Elba office until it was abolished in September, 1852. An office was established about the same time at the village of Manchester, with Harry Gilbert as postmaster; he was succeeded in the office by James H. Fargo, Barnabas Case, Lorenzo Higgins. In 1848 William Root was appointed. In 1853 Alanson Case was placed in charge and held the office until 1859, when Alanson Case resigned and Hull Goodyear was appointed. In 1861 the present postmaster, Chauncey Walbridge, was appointed, and for a period of 20 years has administered the duties of his office faithfully and well.

The first marriage celebrated within the township is said to be that of Miss Palmer, who came to this State with the Fitzgerald family. The ceremony was performed by Smith Lapham, Justice of the Peace. The people of Sharon lay some claim to this event, it having taken place in their township; but that it took place at D. Fitzgerald's house, in Manchester, is now unquestioned.

The wild-cat bank established a branch office here about 1838. Geo. Howe was president of the institution, and James Erwin, cashier. It is unnecessary to revert to the evils of the old banking system. In every other page of county and township history, the ruin which it brought upon the people is referred to. Manchester was not an exception. The people lost much, gaining in return for all their losses and troubles a valuable experience.

Dr. Bennett F. Root was the first regular physician who settled here. He came with his two brothers in 1834 and entered immediately upon his professional labors. In his reference to the sanitary condition of the district at that time, he states that the first settlers suffered much from sickness. After commencing to plow and cultivate the soil, the ague or intermittent fever was sure to follow. Very few escaped. From 1830 to 1840 there was a rapid immigration to this State and the settlers were quite sure to go through a rigid course of seasoning before they became acclimated. Fever and ague, dysentery and scarlet fever prevailed to an alarming extent. It was not uncommon in his professional labors to prescribe for 40 or 50 patients every 24 hours; yet, notwithstanding the great number of sufferers, there were very few deaths. Many were unable to labor, their pecuniary means were exhausted, and in many instances whole families were thrown upon beds of sickness, so that at times there were not as many convalescent persons in the settlement as would be required for the care of the ailing.

In November, 1834, Dr. Root was crossing the Raisin on the old pole bridge which then spanned the river where the present bridge near the foundry now stands, when he fell through the treacherous corduroy into the river. The Doctor was then aged 71 years, and had been a regular physician for 50 years previous. He was a believer in the "cold-water" cure up to the period of his immersion, but after his fortunate escape could never reconcile his ancient faith with his modern experience.

The bridge now connecting Exchange place and Jefferson street was built in 1833, which was a substantial, safe viaduct.

PIONEER PREDICTION IN 1839.

In those early years, many members of the community, men who made Manchester their homes and contributed to its progress, addressed their friends in quiet meetings. Among the number was J. D. Corey. In his address on "Improvement," delivered about 1839, a few paragraphs of a philosophical character were used, the acceptance of which truths tended to teach each citizen to know himself, to love his country, and to honor the laws which regulate the affairs of the Republic. He said:

"The situation of our Confederation, washed by 6,000 miles of sea, stretching through many degrees of latitude and longitude, watered by numerous navigable rivers, with a population of 18,000,000 scattered over every part of its surface, from the lakes of liquid silver on the north to the Gulf of Mexico on the south, and from the ice-bound current of the Kennebeck to the rapid streams of California, all protected from tyranny by the strong arms of the tree of liberty, exhibit a scene of grandeur which ancient Rome in all her splendor might envy. Should our country continue its present gigantic march of improvement, ere another century shall have fallen over the precipice of time the whole of her wild Western territories, which are now nothing but 'an unfenced desolation' of forest and mountain, will become a picturesque and well cultivated portion of this land of liberty. Splendid cities will adorn the Western coast, which will vie with these which now stand on the Atlantic shore, and by means of some great work of internal improvement, passengers as well as intelligence will be conveyed from the Eastern emporium to the Western metropolis, almost as rapidly as the sun will travel from one shore to the other. The Rocky Mountains themselves, whose tops are enveloped in the clouds, will be obliged to yield to the hand of art and industry; their bosoms made to heave by the villainous saltpeter, and their base transformed into a garden. These anticipations may seem chimerical; but who can predict to what height of wealth, and power of glory and grandeur our country shall yet attain? Yet the perpetuity of our Republic depends upon the intelligence of the people; for this is the true source of republicanism and the spirit of union. The enemies of our present form of government vauntingly predict its approaching dissolution, and point to the downfall of Greece and Rome and modern France, and to the anarchy and confusion which reign in the republics of South America as precedents and unerring indications that man is not capable of governing himself. But the inquiry arises, What caused the overthrow of those time-honored and brilliant republics? The answer is to be found in the ignorance of the people."

This prediction of the pioneer has been literally fulfilled, his brightest day dreams surpassed.

MERCANTILE ASSOCIATION.

In the year 1858 the "Washtenaw County Self-Protective Mercantile Association" was organized here, with Jeremiah D. Corey, President; H. E. Osborn, Vice Pres., and John Robinson, Secretary. The directory comprised L. D. Watkins, Charles Kingsley, Andrew Robinson, Isaac Magoon, and Hull Goodyear.

The preamble to the constitution adopted by this association of Manchester men, sets forth that, "Whereas, the producing classes receive so small an equivalent for their excessive toil, that in many cases no surplus remains after the purchase of their necessaries of life; and, whereas, those with small means are subjected to disadvantage in making their purchases alone, which a union of their capital with that of their brother laborers would overcome; and whereas, it is desirable to create a feeling of brotherhood among these classes and to afford opportunities for mutual consultation as to their true interests; therefore, in order to establish a just and economical method for the production, distribution, and consumption of the fruits of human industry, to release society from the burden of sustaining useless functionaries in the several departments of mercantile, civil and social life; to establish such a system of exchange as shall protect and ennoble, rather than despoil and degrade, human labors, to associate producers into an organization for their mutual benefit and improvement, and to secure to each the strength of all; we hereby associate and organize ourselves as a body mercantile, which shall be designated and known as the Washtenaw County Self-Protective Mercantile Association, to be located at Manchester; and we hereby adopt and agree to abide by the constitution."

This was the initial movement in this portion of Michigan which led to the organizations of the present time.

A MILITARY COMPANY.

The "Manchester Union Guards" was organized under the militia law of the State in 1857. The company comprised 57 men, well equipped and uniformed, under command of Captain Comstock, with Isaac L. Clarkson, 1st Lieut.; L. D. Watkins, 2d Lieut.; J. H. Fountain, Sergeant Major; Chauncey Walbridge, Commissary Sergeant, and James Kelley, 1st Orderly. This company volunteered as Company D in the 1st Michigan Infantry (3 months); served at Alexandria and the first Bull Run. Having completed its term of service, the command was mustered out in July, 1861. It was reorganized the same month as a reserve corps, sending recruits to the front at intervals during the war. Since that period Manchester has been without an organized military force. The second lieutenant and the commissary sergeant did not go to the front in 1861.

A $50,000 DONATION PARTY.

A meeting of the citizens of Manchester township was held May 13, 1869, for the purpose of considering the advisability of granting the sum of $50,000 to the Detroit & Hillsdale railroad on condition that such road should be so located and constructed as to make the village of Manchester a depot, station or point. This meeting resolved that a request to Supervisor Newman Granger be signed, asking him to call a special township meeting. This document was signed by J. S. Reynolds, Lewis H. Weis, J. D. Van Duyn, G. W. Brown, Barnabas Case, Matthew D. Blosser, G. M. Hewitt, E. E. Force, Frederick Kurfess, M. D. Case, Goodrich Conklin, G. W. Doty, C. Lehn, Joseph Swatz, C. H. Nichols, G. Underhill, Wm. H. Gray, B. W. Bonnell, U. G. Beach, G. B. Morey, W. P. Haag, N. Hay, A. N. Stevens, E. W. Logan, J. M. Lazzell, Charles Weir, F. Freeman, O. A. Wait, David Burroughs, C.

Kingsley, William Baxter, W. H. Pottle, P. F. Blosser, I. L. Clarkson, Henry Aldrich, T. J. Farrell, Chauncey Walbridge, Henry Goodyear, James Goodyear, G. R. Palmer, D. D. Fitzgerald, Wm. Kirchgessner, E. G. Carr, J. H. Miller, Wm. H. Bessac, A. C. Torrey. Supervisor Granger acceded to the request. A township meeting was called for June 7, 1869, in regular form; the meeting was held and resulted in an affirmative vote of 342, with 199 opposing.

Subsequently township bonds were issued for $50,000, bearing interest at 10 per cent. per annum, payable in 20 annual installments on the first of February each year, the first falling due Feb. 1, 1871, amounting with interest to $7,500; and the last, with interest, due Feb. 1, 1890, amounting to $2,750. These bonds were transferred to the State Treasurer of Michigan in trust for and by the township of Manchester, for the benefit of the Detroit, Hillsdale & Indiana Railroad Company, and the receipt of such bonds acknowledged by H. D. Bartholomew, Feb. 10, 1870.

After all this trouble and expense had been undergone, the people of Salem township disputed the right of any township to vote aid to railroad or other private corporations, and this action was fully sustained by the Supreme Court; the bonds issued by the Board were declared void; the Township Board demanded their return from the State Treasurer, which demand was acceded to, and the bonds consigned to the fire by Supervisor Burch. Subsequently the citizens subscribed voluntarily a sum of $30,000, which was placed to the credit of the railroad company. The first train of this company steamed into the village Sept. 23, 1870.

THE WHEAT FAMINE.

In the summer and fall of 1834 wheat was worth but four shillings per bushel, but owing to the rapid increase of population in the spring of 1835, the price increased to 10 shillings, and the grain very difficult to be had at that price. Pork was worth from $30 to $35 per barrel.

Regarding this period one of the old settlers related the following story of his search for flour:

"In June we were out of bread, which could not be had here at any price. I procured a horse and went to Dexter—could find none; to Ann Arbor—none there. I then went to Lodi, was recommended to Esq. Orrin Howe. He says, 'Wife, how much flour have we? Can we spare the man any?' She says, 'I think we can; it won't be long before harvest.' He weighed me 20 pounds, and further said, 'I have a little corn in the crib; if you will shell it, you may have a bushel.' I did so, and was glad to get as much as that. I spent three days and felt well pleased."

THE FATE OF A SLEEPY MILLER.

In the spring of 1835, Matthew T. Prout left his home with the intention of buying a few bushels of grist from Deacon Marvin, and of proceeding thence to Tecumseh, 35 miles distant from his home, for the purpose of having it ground. In the first instance he was successful, but on reaching the Tecumseh mill, he was told that he should wait two or three days. This he determined to do. Night came; Prout walked over to scan the work of the miller, but to his surprise he found that individual sleeping. He was not slow to take in the situation. He heard the warning bell, and yet the miller slept; without loss of time he emptied his grist into the hopper, had it ground, the flour placed in sacks, and was on his homeward journey before that miller awoke. He has never since that period learned of all the "complimentary" words expressed by the sleeper when he awoke, nor does he remember whether or not he gave the necessary toll.

AN ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION, 1881.

Of the many privileges now enjoyed by the pioneers, perhaps that one most especially enjoyable is the anniversary of a birthday. On such an occasion invitations are mailed in due form to many of the early settlers, and particularly to contemporary pioneers. The anniversary day arrives; if in winter, the guests arrive in sleigh after sleigh, the merry jingle of the bells bespeak a holiday, all the surroundings of the house tell of festivity. Within are assembled the old people, all joyful in company, all with the memories of the never-forgotten past fresh and green, all happy in their reunion. The latest, and probably one of the most characteristic of such celebrations, was that attendant on the 77th anniversary of Mrs. Sophia Fellows' birth. There were Mrs. M. H. Hixon (relict of D. Hixon), and Mrs. T. W. Hunt, nee Fellows, both ladies being octogenarians, with 11 others, aged from 70 to 79 years. Among the assembled guests were five pioneers, who, in coming to Michigan 55 years ago, crossed Lake Erie in a sail boat, and reached Detroit in safety. The entire party had not met since 1826; indeed, a few of them had not seen each other for over half a century, until the celebration of March 4, 1881, brought them together at the house of Mrs. Wait, the daughter of Mrs. Sophia (Perrin) Fellows. The names of those re-united friends are J. H. Fellows, Festus A. Fellows, Harriet Fellows, Mrs. D. Hixon and the lady whose 77th anniversary was being honored. The pioneer guests included the following:

Rev. Mr. Palmer, Mrs. Wm. Palmer, Messrs. Jeremiah D. Corey and Mrs. Corey, Charles M. Fellows and wife, Isaac Jones and wife, Mrs. H. Morey, Mrs. Esther Palmer, Mrs. Richmond, Miss S. M. Marvin, James Winton and wife were among the invited guests. The participants in the celebration numbered 40. Nor was the juvenile element wanting. A number of pretty children indulged in the gaiety which such an occasion inspires, and did not fail—children never do—to cause that peculiarly agreeable disturbance, or “chord of the seventh,” which varies, as it were, the harmony of such pleasant reunions.

A HEALTHY LOCATION.

The officers of the village and Township Board of Health are Drs. A. B. Conklin and A. C. Taylor. The report on the sanitary condition of the village bears, indeed, a very favorable comparison with the statement made 46 years ago by the first physician who settled in the township. Then miasmas prostrated the settlers; now disease has almost disappeared until the medical officer declares the sanitary condition of the village, and the health of the inhabitants to be higher than at any previous time in the history of the village.

THE NUCLEUS OF A VILLAGE.

As late as 1834 there were but few settlers in what is now the village of Manchester. William S. Carr, Ben. Case, Elijah G. Carr, Emanuel Case, the Widow Annabil and J. Soule appeared to be the only inhabitants. Wm. S. Carr had a small store where now stands the Guinner block. Soule was running a saw-mill on the bank of the river at East Manchester. Mrs. Annabil buried her husband a short time previously. A building was being enclosed on the corner where the Union Hall now stands, and which now forms a portion of that building; the ground was muddy and literally covered with stumps; a few log huts were erected wherever room could be had; no roads existing; in fact, it was not a very inviting place to settle at that day. There were no hotels, no regular mechanic shops, no organized Church, no regularly established school, no grist-mill,—nothing calculated to administer to the wants of a community, to elevate the condition of society. Very soon, however, through the rapid increase of population, and the energy and intelligence of the people, many of these wants were supplied, and the nucleus of the present village formed.

MANCHESTER.

The village is pleasantly situated on the Raisin river, occupying a large area of the northeastern sections of the township, and forming the market town of the district. The river enters at the western limits, forms a curve at the cemetery, and flows southeasterly through a tortuous channel to the L. S. & M. S. R. R. bridge, between which point and the mill-race, at the City Road bridge, is formed the southern bend. The valley of the Raisin in this neighborhood is picturesque, the location of the village appropriate, and the view from any of the varied elevations within the corporate limits singularly beautiful. The D., H. & S. W. R. R. enters the village on the east, a little north of the Raisin, and crosses the L. S. & M. S. R. R. outside the western limits. The depot of the former road is situated east of the railroad bridge, north of Jefferson street, and south of Corey's addition; while the M. S. depot is located north of Case's addition and west of Clinton street, on the west side of the river. The original plat was made by Major Jno. Gilbert. It comprised 22 blocks, bounded on the north by Exchange place, with blocks 1 and 2 extending to Madison street on the southwest, and south by the L. S. & M. S. R. R., and on the east by the river. The streets named therein are: Exchange place, Grove, Jackson and Boyne streets, running east and west, and Union, Macomb, Washington, Clinton and Railroad streets, running north and south.

The second plat was made east of the river, with an extension on the west side, north of the original village, comprising eight blocks on the west and 21 blocks on the east side. These plats were made in 1837. The next addition was made by Granger and Morgan, comprising six blocks, located south of the City road and north of the south bend of the river.

Morgan's addition was made north of the City road, bounded on the west by Torrey's addition, and on the east by the line of the village as now platted. Cowan's first addition is situated northeast and north of the river, west of the Ann Arbor road. It is laid out in seven blocks. The second addition lies north and west of the first, and contains five blocks. Torrey's addition of seven blocks lies west of Division street, and east of the second portion of the village as platted in 1837. In 1868 the tract north of the D., H. & S. W. R. R. and east of the Ann Arbor road was surveyed; subsequently the land east of what was platted. This is now known as Corey's addition. Case's addition, south of the L. S. & M. S. R. R. was laid out in half-acre lots by Barnabas Case. This contains 40 acres.

Exchange place, from the river to the Goodyear House, may be termed the business center of the village, though on the Eastern extension of the street, known as Jefferson street, are a number of large brick houses devoted to mercantile business, with other blocks in course of erection. Since the building era of 1867 there has not been any great effort made by the citizens to build up the village until the present time. Now, a few important commercial houses are being constructed and a large number in prospect, so that with a renewal of the enterprise of 1867, there is every hope of Manchester reaching that important place which it is so well fitted to hold.

ORGANIZATION OF THE VILLAGE.

A bill to organize the village of Manchester was introduced by J. D. Corey, Feb. 28, 1867, approved March 16, 1867, and was amended March 25, 1871. The charter granted in 1867 was set aside in 1879, and the village affairs carried on under the authority of the general law of the State. The first election of village officers was held at Union Hall March 18, 1867, when Newman Granger was elected President; Alvinza S. Doty, Recorder, and Philetus Coon, Treasurer. Since that period these offices have been filled as follows:

THE COMMERCIAL BUILDINGS.

The first brick building erected in the village was that by W. S. Carr, for a general store in 1837. This is standing at the present time. It has been the store of Dr. Bessac for many years, and is now occupied as a hardware store by C. M. Norton. The first brick store erected on the east side of the river was that of J. D. Corey, in October, 1858, and now occupied by Charles Singer. The second brick store erected on the west side was that by John Keyes in 1838. Dr. W. S. Stowell is the owner of this property.

The store now occupied by Case & Corey was built in 1852, by Andrew Spafford. The "Gleeson Block" was built in 1863 by J. Gleeson. Chauncey Walbridge built the store west of Gleeson block subsequently. The Hoy Block, in which is the Masonic Hall, was built in 1866; the Goodyear Block in 1869; the Goodyear House in 1869. The Kirchgessner and Lehn Block was erected in 1873. The Bank Block was erected by Peabody and Baxter. The Conklin Block was built by Dr. Amariah Conklin in 1880-'81. It stands on the east bank of the river, north side of Jefferson St. The northern part of the Daly & Unterkircher Block is now occupied by Postmaster Walbridge, who purchased it from Unterkircher. Daly owns the second part. The Burkhardt Block was erected immediately south of the post-office. In March, 1881, Conrad Lehn and John J. Clarkson entered upon the erection of a large building, on the north side of Exchange place, near the Goodyear House. The large brick building now occupied by Mack & Smith was built for Isaac L. Clarkson.

The principal residences of the village include J. D. Van Duyn's, L. H. Coon's, J. J. Clarkson's, W. S. Carr's, R. Hall's, J. D. Keefe's, Dr. Bessac's, Dr. Lynch's, Clarence W. Case's, G. W. Hoy's, on the west side. The principal residences on the east side are J. D. Corey's, Dr. Conklin's, Franklin Freeman's, Dr. Hunter's, E. Jayne's, Goodrich Conklin's, C. Walbridge's, Dr. Root's, Dr. Monger's, W. H. Pottle's, B. J. Lovejoy's, Geo. W. Doty's, A. T. Bruegel's, Mrs. Porter's, Henry Kirchoffer's, Vanderworker's, Wm. Hewitt's, J. Everett's, Mrs. Kingsley's and Dr. Taylor's.

THE FIRE.

The fire of 1853 broke out about 6 A. M. on Sunday morning, May 1, originating in the Manchester flouring mill. It extended to the buildings in the neighborhood and reduced the business portion of the village to ashes. Fourteen business houses and one dwelling were destroyed. The loss on the mill alone was about $20,000, and the entire loss was estimated at over $50,000. The devouring element was brought under control just at the moment when the old Manchester House was threatened. The inhabitants labored earnestly and well, and to their efforts may be attributed the safety of the village west of the hotel.

THE PRESS.

In the chapter on the Press, the histories of the Enterprise and the Journal are given. Here it will be only necessary to state that the former was established by Geo. S. Spafford in 1867, purchased by Mat. D. Blosser in 1868, and now forms one of the leading journals of the county.

The Manchester Journal was projected in October, 1873, by G. R. Palmer, but fell through within the following year.

THE SCHOOLS.

There are seven school buildings in the township, together with the Union school-house of the village. Union district No. 2 comprises the village proper with portions of the adjoining sections. Here is situated the Union school, presided over by a corps of seven teachers. Dr. A. B. Conklin is Township Superintendent of Schools. Prof. J. W. Robinson and Prof. C. F. Field preside over the high school. Miss M. K. Hunt, Miss Altie Colwell, Miss Alice Richmond, Miss Anna A. Shakell and Miss Mary E. Webb are teachers in the Union school. The School Board is composed of the following members: Jeremiah D. Corey, Dr. Amariah Conklin, M. D. Case, W. S. Stowell, S. H. Perkins and Rev. J. B. Gilman. The Union school building was erected in 1867, at a cost of $25,000. Bonds were issued for that amount at the time, the last of which was redeemed Feb. 1, 1880. The house was dedicated to school purposes immediately after its completion, with Prof. C. E. Olney as principal. During the winter term of 1880-'81, 48 pupils were in attendance at the high school, 46 attended the grammar classes, 59 the intermediate, 53 the second primary, and 88 the first primary.

The township schools are known as No. 1, fractional with Norvell, with Geo. S. Field present teacher; No. 2, fractional with Franklin, with Michael Cummins as teacher; District No. 3, under Miss Laura Gray; District No. 4, presided over by Miss Mary Blyth; No. 5, by Eva Palmer; No. 6, by Miss Cynthia Crane; No. 7 by Miss Alice Scully; No. 8, by Miss Lina Campbell. The number of pupils attending these schools during the winter term of 1880-'81 was 221. Of this number 25 attended No. 2, with Norvell; 26, No. 2, with Franklin; 35, No. 3; 18, No. 4; 31, No. 5; 33, No. 6; 23, No. 7, and 30, No. 8. The number of children of school age exceeds the number in attendance fully eight per cent.

No reasonable expense has been spared by the citizens of Manchester to render the working of their schools perfect. It must be a subject for congratulation to a people who made such sacrifice of time and money, to behold the result of their own earnestness in the matter, and the zeal manifested by the township school officials and the teachers in charge. Parents throughout the township must convince themselves that the absence of eight children in every 100 of school age is not in accord with their own or their country's interest. They must co-operate with the School Board and the teachers in the desire of the latter to have a regular attendance, so that the children may advance together toward a knowledge of such studies as may prepare them for the duties of citizenship.

CHURCHES.

The Presbyterian Church.—The Presbyterian society may be said to have been organized at the house of Mr. Root, Dec. 27, 1835. Rev. A. B. Corning was appointed Moderator, and Wm. Page, of Ann Arbor, Clerk. The meeting resolved to establish the first Presbyterian Church of Bridgewater and Sharon, when the following named persons subscribed to the roll of membership:—Wm. J. Root, Rhoda Root, William F. Crafts, Lucinda Crafts and John Ruckman.

The first minister was Rev. A. B. Corning, employed by the Church and society April 3, 1836. His pastorate extended over three years.

In January, 1838, the society petitioned the State Legislature to enact that the original name of the Church and society be changed from that of Bridgewater and Sharon to that of Manchester.

About three months after the organization of the Church, Abijah Marvin, Wm. Root, and Wm. S. Crafts were elected ruling elders, and Mr. Corning received a call as its minister. The latter resigned in August, 1839, and since that period the pastorate has been filled by the following:

The Universalist Church.—A primary meeting was held March 15, 1846, in accord with the laws of the State when Chandler Carter, Wm. S. Stowell, and Russell Bodine issued a call for the first meeting of the society of the Universalist Church. This was held at Manchester, March 31, 1846. Barnabas Case presided, with Dr. W. S. Stowell, clerk. Talmon Case moved that the meeting adjourn to April 2, when the members assembled at the old school-house. At this adjourned meeting Chandler Carter and T. L. Spafford were appointed a committee to decide upon the qualification of voters. The names of voters qualified were: Thomas L. Spafford, Jos. S. Clark, Wm. Andrews, Tolman Case, Franklin Freeman, Wm. The cost of the building was $1,200, with furnishings valued at $400.

The Baptist Church was organized Feb. 17, 1836, at a meeting held within the dwelling-house of James Stevens. The membership roll of the Church as organized in 1836 comprised the names of James and Mrs. Stevens, James Nowland, Sophia Fellows, Josephine Fellows, Samuel Palmer, Mrs. Palmer, Wm. Kief; Recording Secretary, Joseph S. Clark; Treasurer, Samuel R. Perkins. The lodge was disbanded Sept. 12, 1851, but re-established March 15, 1872, with five charter members. Schmid, Financier; H. Kirchoffer, Guide; Fred Scheible, I. S. W.; Jacob Rammel, O. S. W., and J. H. Kingsley, D. to G. L.

The order of United Workmen has made steady progress since its organization here. The members have shown a remarkable unity of sentiment, and so the lodge has gained a place in popular esteem which may contribute, within a short period, to win such members to its ranks as may obtain for it one of the highest places among the 82 lodges of Michigan. This fact will become more evident when it is remembered that the order rents one of the principal halls in the village, which was dedicated Dec. 2, 1879.

age on the ill-fated vessel Central America, and suffered the untold horrors of an ocean wreck, clinging for six and one-half hours to a board to save his precious life. He was finally rescued, and on his arrival in this county bought a farm on sec. 12 of this tp. He was married in 1859 to Hannah M. Conklin, a native of New York. He owns 164 acres of land, and is Republican in politics.

Dr. Ebenezer H. Conklin, the third son of Capt. Benjamin Conklin, was born at Lenox, Mass., May 4, 1790. When a boy he learned the wagon-maker's trade, which he pursued for a few years, but soon gave his attention to study and education, teaching school during a portion of the time, and in the mean time devoted his energies to the study of medicine, having completed which, he married Miss Lucy Winchester, the daughter of Amariah Winchester, of Amenia, Dutchess Co., N. Y., where he located in the practice of his profession as physician and surgeon. After 25 years of successful practice at this place his health failed him, and in 1831 he was induced to emigrate westward, which he did, and coming to Michigan became one of the first settlers of the tp. of Sharon, in Washtenaw county, where he located some 400 or 500 acres of land. He still continued in the practice of his profession, though surrounded by the wilds of a frontier life and but a few families near him, at this time being the only physician in Southern Washtenaw. As one of its citizens he held many positions of honor and trust, and his history is closely identified with that of Sharon itself. Through his influence and efforts it received its name.

Living upon his farm four miles north of Manchester, he managed his agricultural affairs and followed his profession until he died, in June, 1851, at the age of 61 years, leaving a wife and 5 children, as follows: Amariah Conklin, born Jan. 20, 1822; Cynthia Conklin, Dec. 2, 1824; Goodrich Conklin, Dec. 19, 1826; Mary Conklin, July 19, 1828; and Ebenezer Conklin, Oct. 27, 1836, all of whom are living in Manchester at present, with families, save Cynthia, who died Feb. 23, 1860, as the wife of Franklin Freeman, to whom she was married Feb. 12, 1851. The other daughter (Mary) is the wife of William S. Carr, in the western part of the village. He was a very active business man, progressive in his views of medicine, a man that read and thought a great deal outside of medicine, was very liberal in his views, and kind but firm in his family.

Amariah Conklin, the first son of Dr. Ebenezer H. and Lucy Conklin, was born in Amenia, Dutchess county, N. Y., Jan. 20, 1822, where he spent his younger days, till he came to Michigan with his father's family, then consisting of the parents and 4 children, 2 boys and 2 girls. From this time till he took up the study of medicine he remained with his father upon the farm, where he became acquainted with the hardships of frontier life. He helped to clear up the farm and afterward had the management of it, till he decided to study for the profession, in which he completed his studies and began the practice in June, 1849, having given it his time for several years previous, and the last two at the Medical University of N. Y.

June 7, 1853, he was married to Lovina A. Carpenter, this village, where he was located in the practice of medicine and surgery. After living here for three years he moved into Sharon with his wife and 1 child, upon a portion of the farm owned by his father, where he remained seven years, having an office in the village and doing a very extensive business in his profession. In 1861 he moved to the village again, having at this time 3 children, where he remained about three months, and being unable to ride much on account of his poor health, again moved upon his farm, where he resumed the practice of his profession again, having partially regained his health; but in the winter of 1871-'2 he took his family, comprising 4 children, 2 boys and 2 girls, to the village for the purpose of giving them a better education. His family consists of the following: Ebenezer M. Conklin, born Jan. 1, 1855; Amariah B., Sept. 16, 1857; L. Sophia, Nov. 18, 1859, and Julia M., June 13, 1867. The 3 eldest are graduates of the Union school, and the 2 sons in the practice of medicine and surgery, the former a graduate of Bennett Medical College, of Chicago, and the Medical Institute of Cincinnati, and now practicing in Tecumseh, and the latter a student of both institutions and a graduate of the latter; he is now located in the practice of his profession with his father in this village.

Like his father, the subject of this sketch has been a man of study and thought, and has done much to liberalize the practice of medicine in this county, believing in standing by the right though he stood alone, which he did for a long time in the practice of his profession as an Eclectic. He started as a poor man in the midst of men of years and experience, whose combined influences were against him because he believed medicine should progress the same as any other branch of science; but as liberal medicine must triumph, it did through him, as the extent and success of his practice for years will show; and those who in his younger days opposed him with the bitterest hatred have coincided with him, and even now employ him in their declining years.

As a public man he has filled many honorable positions, being a strong advocate of anti-slavery principles during the war. He has always been connected with the educational interests of his community, both as a patron and as a strong supporter of education and free schools; is a temperance man, though no temperance worker. So also, like his father, his views have always tended toward "Liberalism," though the Church has always received favors from him, as has the world at large from his being generous to a fault with all. Is now 59 years old.

Marvin Cooley, sec. 34; P. O. Clinton; was born at Phelps, Ontario Co., N. Y., in 1830. His parents were Charles and Electa (Goodell) Cooley, natives of New York and Massachusetts. In 1844 the family came to Michigan, locating at Ann Arbor. Here Mr. Cooley grew to manhood and lived until 1854. He then removed to Franklin, Lenawee Co., where he lived two years. He then went to Brooklyn, Jackson Co., where he followed farming about three years. He then went to Woodstock, Lenawee Co., where he was engaged in farming and threshing until 1870, when he purchased a farm in Manchester, where he has since lived. Mr. Cooley started poor and now has 232 acres of fine land well supplied with buildings and stock. He makes a specialty of fine Merino sheep, of which he has a very fine flock. In politics is a Democrat and has held several offices in the town, now being a Justice of the Peace. Is a member of Clinton Lodge, No. 75, F. & A. M., and also a Mark Master in the Chapter. In 1854 he was married to Mrs. Jane Moore, of Brooklyn, Jackson Co., a daughter of James Moore, an old pioneer of this part of Michigan. To them have been born 4 sons, all of whom are living. The eldest son is married, but all live at home with their parents.

Lorenzo H. Coon was born at De Ruyter, Madison Co., N. Y., in 1811. His parents were John and Sarah (Carpenter) Coon, and were old residents of Cortland county. In 1836 his parents came to Michigan and located at Parma, Jackson county. In 1837 they came to Manchester tp. and purchased land. In 1842 Mr. Coon purchased a farm in the eastern part of Jackson county, where he lived until 1853. He then came into the township of Manchester, where he still owns land. In 1875 he came into Manchester village to live; was Commissioner of Highways, but has generally kept out of politics. In 1849 he was married to Mary Phelps, a native of Chautauqua Co., N. Y. To them have been born 2 sons. By a former marriage he has 1 daughter now living. Mrs. Coon's ancestors, the Phelps and Adamses, date back in America to 1630, only 10 years after the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock.

Hon. Jeremiah D. Corey is among the early pioneers of this locality. He was born in Onondaga county, N. Y., in 1816. His parents were Peleg and Sarah (Spaulding) Corey, the former a native of Rhode Island, and the latter of the "Empire State." Mr. Corey received an academic education in his native State, and in 1833 came to Michigan. He located in Lodi, and subsequently in Sharon tp., on the farm now owned by O. L. Torrey, where he resided until 1844, when he removed to Manchester tp., and in 1868 to Manchester village. He was a farmer in early life, and is still interested in that business. During his early residence in this county he taught school for several terms, having at one time 104 pupils, many of whom now have grandchildren in the schools of Washtenaw county and elsewhere. In 1840 he was severely ill, and looks back to the care and kindness bestowed upon him by Dr. Bessac and others, through whose attentions he was brought back to strong health. In early days himself and brother "ker t bachelor's hall," but that was ended by his marriage, in 1844, to Elizabeth A. Gage. Two children were born to this union—a daughter, now the wife of O. L.

Torrey, and Jay, a business man of Manchester. Mr. Corey votes the Democratic ticket, "straight," and in 1866 was elected from this district as Representative of the Michigan Legislature. In 1874 he was elected State Senator. During his official career he introduced several important bills and resolutions, one of which was for the construction of a ship canal across the Southern boundary of the lower peninsula of Michigan. Since his residence in Manchester he has done much to forward its interests. He gave $4,000 for the construction of the D. H. & S. W. railroad, and also much time. He was the first Director to represent Manchester, and has been the only one. He is a Director in the People's Bank of Manchester, with which he has been connected for some time. Mr. Corey has been very systematic in his business operations, and since his marriage has kept a minute account of all moneys expended for business and home expenses, not including that invested in real estate, stocks, etc., and on April 1, 1881, the amount was $46,061.75. Mr. Corey's business life has been a success. He began life with nothing but his own brain and muscle, and has acquired a competency sufficient for the remainder of life. He is a man of active, energetic habits; full of integrity and honor, and well worthy the emulation of the rising generation.

John W. Cowan, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in Washington Co., N. Y., in 1822, the 3d son of John M. and Elizabeth (Greene) Cowan, natives of the same county, and occupants of a farm. They moved to Onondaga Co. when J. W. was nearly five years of age, and in a few weeks to Monroe Co., 12 miles west of Rochester, and took a farm of 200 acres. Here Mrs. C. died, leaving 8 children—3 sons and 5 daughters. The family then moved back to Onondaga Co., where Mr. C. married again, and in the autumn of 1837 he, with wife and 3 children, emigrated to Michigan, the other children to follow the next spring. They came by wagon along the lake shore, when the roads were bad, requiring four days to cross the Maumee swamps. Startling rumors were rife at this time of Fenian invasions into Canada, and the route of the emigrants was thronged with demoralized troops from the Canadian border. The family arrived in Manchester, Jan. 20, 1838. In 1862, after a long and eventful life, Mr. Cowan died, and the surviving widow died some time afterward in New York State.

At the time of his father's death the subject of this biography was in his 21st year, and had not a dollar of capital; but with those stern qualities of mind which characterize a hero, he went forth to the battle of life, first finding work in the employ of Lewis Allen and Nichols Baker, for two and a half years, at $10 to $13 a month, next buying a horse and a half interest in a threshing-machine, and following threshing and teaming for a time. He thus made $5 a day a large portion of the time; was encouraged to increase his business, and he spent a portion of the winters in teaming and dealing in dried fruit from Ohio, which he exchanged for lumber, shingles and furs, in the northwestern portion of the State. He invested his surplus means in real estate. He went to school during the winters of 1847 and 1848 at Ypsilanti and Kalamazoo, graduating at the Normal school. The winter of 1848-'9 he visited the scenes of his boyhood in the Empire State. In 1851 he married Dorcas M. Thompson, an estimable lady of Dexter; they had 1 child, Katie E., a very promising girl, who died in the 11th year of her age, of diphtheria. In 1849 Mr. Cowan bought the Stockwell place in Manchester, consisting of a store and dwelling house. A short time previously he had purchased a stock of bankrupt goods of the noted Zachariah Chandler, but in 1853 a fire burnt him out. Nothing daunted, however, he went to work with a courageous heart, farming, then in rapid succession carriage-making, meat-marketing, running a livery stable, making brick, auctioneering, building and contracting—in all these assisting to rebuild Manchester after the great fire of 1853, which burned up the business portion of the place. He has been liberal in public enterprises, donating at one time $3,000 to the building of the D. & H. railroad. At one time he owned as much as 1,500 acres of farm land, a portion of which was laid off and sold for village lots; he has dealt largely in real estate, and although he has met with many losses, he still ranks as one of the most prosperous citizens of the place. He still owns 300 acres of land and 30 or 40 lots in Manchester village.

Mr. Cowan is liberal toward the Churches with money as well as in spirit; has aided in the erection of every church in the village; built the first public hall; helped procure the first printing press; founded and platted that portion of the village of Manchester, where now are the nicest residences of the place. Politically, Mr. Cowan is not ambitious for prominence, but has always been ready to bear his burden of local affairs; has been Justice of the Peace, Notary Public, etc. He never turns the poor away hungry from his door, or refuses employment to them if it was possible for him to find it.

Samuel W. Dorr, of Manchester, Mich., born at Keene, N. H., Jan. 20, 1823, the eighth son of Solomon F. and Elizabeth (Wilson) Dorr, the former of Brookfield, Mass., born at that place July 24, 1785, and the latter born at Keene, N. H., in 1782. The father, mother and three youngest sons emigrated to Michigan in the spring of 1834; on arriving at Detroit, the five found the money in all their purses amounted to only $1.70, which was divided as follows: One dollar and fifty cents was left the mother to take passage by stage, while the father and three sons had the remaining 20 cents, set out on foot for Ypsilanti, where Albert an elder brother, then lived, and where the four arrived, weary and hungry, some time during the following night, and the mother arrived the following day. In the spring of 1835 the family removed to Manchester and located on sec. 18. The subject of this sketch, then a lad of 12 years, received a common-school education, taught a district school five winters, purchased 40 acres of land, commenced farming for himself at the age of 20, and soon made additions to his originally small place. In 1849 he married Miss Elizabeth A. Blyth, of Franklin, Lenawee county. Of their large family of 10 children, 6 sons and 4 daughters, only 4 survive. The eldest daughter, Helen, is the wife of Wm. E. Pease; and the other daughter, Ettie, married B. F. Mattison. By untiring perseverance he became a practical and successful farmer of 220 acres, one of the best farms of Washtenaw county. From his earliest childhood being a great lover of fruit, as soon as he became the possessor of a piece of land, he made it his first business to plant an apple and peach orchard, and from time to time has made additions; at the present he has 30 acres of one of the most productive and profitable orchards of the State. He is one of the active pomologists, and at present President of the Washtenaw County Pomological Society, and one of the Vice-Presidents of the State Horticultural Society, of which he is a life-member, and with which he has ever identified himself since its existence. Mr. Dorr is also extensively engaged in sheep-raising.

Politically, he is a Republican; liberal and charitable in his religious views; professionally, a Free-Will Baptist.

In common with most Michigan orchardists of late, feeling the great need of a cheap, practical store-house for keeping winter fruit, he resolved in 1880 to build the first house in this part of the State for that purpose, which bids fair to be a success. The house is built on the principle of what is called the "cold-air" system, using no ice or artificial heat in regulating the temperature, involving no new principle or discovery, merely putting into practical use what has long been known, that in order to preserve fruit for any great length of time the store-room must be kept at a low, even temperature, as near freezing as possible, with sufficient ventilation to carry off all moisture and impurities, and frost-proof. This house is built in a hillside, descending to the northeast, 24x42, two stories; the basement of stone 10 feet high by two and one half in thickness, slat floor two feet above cemented bottom, supported by stone piers, the second story of wood, 12 feet high, treble walls 16 inches in thickness, filled with sawdust, slat floor as below. The ventilation is by means of 20 eight-inch sewer tile laid in the walls beneath the floors, the main ventilating pipe of sheet iron two feet in diameter at the base, in the center of the upper room, leading through the attic and roof, projecting 10 feet above, with valve to be opened or closed at pleasure. The ceiling overhead is packed with sawdust similar to side walls. The doors are all double, one swinging in, the other out; also windows with close shutters securely packed in winter to exclude light and frost, to obviate the use of boards and studs in forming fruit bins; 1,000 bushel boxes are filled with fruit and used for that purpose; the balance of fruit is placed in bulk upon the floors. The capacity of the house is about 5,000 bushels, and the cost about $800. The proprietor has been able to keep the temperature of the house for five months during the past winter within 2° of freezing.

At the age of 18 he took the first prize at the Ollerton plowing match, Nottinghamshire; after an absence of 38 years, 36 of which were spent in America, he visited England and attended a plowing match at the same place, as a spectator. At the age of 21 he left England, in company with his eldest sister, her husband and 5 children, and landed at Quebec, June 28, 1843, after a voyage of six weeks and five days; came thence via Montreal, the canal to Kingston, across Lake Ontario to Toronto, Queenstown, by horse railroad (the only railroad in Canada then) to Chipewaw, Buffalo and Detroit to Manchester, Mich. On arriving at Buffalo, Mr. Green had not a cent of money, except the "crooked" sixpence. From Detroit out to Manchester he and two others walked, while his sister and the children rode in a wagon. This journey was made during the night and one day,—13 days from Quebec. On reaching their journey's end Mr. Green was "homesick enough." In this wild West he could see nothing, and hear nothing but about (as it seemed) 50 cow-bells.

He first worked in the harvest field, at 10 shillings a day, for 10 days, then hired out for three months for \$38, and next went to cutting cord-wood at 20 cents a cord. He cut 150 cords in three months, and ditched three days during the time, at \$1 a day, and got a pair of new boots for the ditching. He then hired out for one year, for \$140, and during the year he did not lose a day. The next year he worked for (now Rev.) P. Van Winkle for \$12 $\frac{1}{2}$ a month. He cradled 45 acres of wheat, and Mr. V. raked and bound it. They had no help. He subsequently worked for Mr. V. again.

In 1846, also, he was married to Anne English, of Manchester, by Mr. Powell. He then bought 40 acres of land and moved upon it, but the title not being good he left it, losing $150 by the operation. After living on a rented farm three years, he moved to the place he now occupies. To make the first payment on this place he sold wheat at 49 cents a bushel. The first winter on this place he cut and split the rails and laid up a mile of new six-rail fence, overhauled a quarter of a mile of old fence and did all his daily chores.

In 1861 he had a severe attack of typhoid fever, but, after 15 weeks of sickness he was restored to health, under the care of Dr. A. Conklin, of Manchester.

In 1876 he attended the exhibition at Philadelphia. In 1878 he visited his native land, in company with his wife and niece, Georgia Chaple. Of an original family of 10 they found 5 still living. After visiting many of the most important cities and towns of England and several points in Ireland, Mrs. G.'s native country, they returned quickly and safely to their American home.

Mr. and Mrs. Green have reared 2 adopted daughters—Georgia Chaple and Phœbe M. Green.

Deacon Green is a liberal citizen and a highly esteemed member of the community. For building the parsonage he gave $1,000, and for the church bell $250; he also contributes largely for both home and foreign missionary work; has given $200 to the Kalamazoo College. Although he lives six miles from Manchester, he gave $100 toward the construction of the Hillsdale railroad. His farm is an example of neatness unsurpassed,—residence, out-buildings and all. He has a centennial grove of 102 evergreen trees, not one of this setting having died. The trees are 16 feet apart, set quincuncially, in perfect rows.

He came to this county in 1837, and once served as a Justice of the Peace. He was married Jan. 3, 1836, to Nancy Crozier, a native of New York, and of French descent. Both were members of the M. E. Church, in which body Mr. Wells was Trustee, Class leader and Steward for several years. He was a Republican in politics, and at the time of his death owned 100 acres of land. He died March 25, 1872.

James Williams (deceased) or "Uncle Jim," as he was familiarly called, was born in 1803, and came to Ypsilanti, Mich., in 1835. He was a single man, and resided for 27 years with Mr. and Mrs. Wells. He was a strong Republican, and a worthy member of the M. E. Church. He died in 1879.

His parents were Caleb and Betsey (Fargo) Wood, natives of Connecticut, the former being of Irish and the latter of French descent. When in his ninth year the family removed to Livingston county, N. Y., where he was reared and educated. In Wyoming county, he learned the trade of wagon-maker. In 1837 he started for Michigan. He then engaged in farming near Saline for his brother-in-law, Joshua Forbes, for many years well-known in this county. He remained here four and one-half years and returned to New York on account of being troubled with the ague. He lived in New York until 1854, when he came to this State, which has since been his home. He settled in Saline tp. on a farm owned by Mr. Forbes. He remained there two, years and having recovered his health, engaged in the wagon business, which he followed two years in that town; then removed to Clinton, Mich., where he followed the wagon business until September, 1870, when he came into Manchester tp., where he has since followed farming, on sec. 28. In politics he has been a Whig; since Taylor's nomination for Presidency, he has been a Free-Soiler; since 1854 he has been a Republican. Has always been a temperance man and worker. Was married in April, 1848, to Miss Mary Gilbert, of Warsaw, N. Y., a native of Pike, N. Y.; Mrs. Wood died in 1859, leaving 1 son and 1 daughter, both of whom are living. For his second wife he married in May, 1864, Mrs. Loretta (Sterrin) Messenger, of Clinton.

John Wuertner, proprietor restaurant, Manchester, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1849. His father was a watchmaker and organ builder. John was reared and educated in his native country, and there learned the trade of tailor. In 1871 he came to America and worked at his trade at Adrian, Mich., and Manchester. In 1878 he opened his present billiard hall and restaurant. In politics Mr. W. is a Greenbacker, but has held no official positions. In 1872 he married Caroline Yentler, of Adrian, Mich., a native of Wurtemberg. To them have been born 2 sons and 3 daughters, 2 of whom are living; 1 daughter is deceased.

John C. Ziegler was born in Germany, and is a son of Phillip and Barbara (Meir) Ziegler. He learned the weaver's trade in his native land, and in 1854 immigrated to America, coming to this county the same year. He has been a farmer during his residence in Washtenaw Co., and owns 80 acres of fine land on sec. 13. He was married in 1859 to Mary Kindlinger, a native of Germany. They have 2 children—Eliza and Philip. Mr. Ziegler is a Democrat, and himself and wife are members of the Lutheran Church.

BRIDGEWATER TOWNSHIP.

Bridgewater is a country of gentle undulations, valuable forest lands, beautiful rivers and streams, picturesque lakes, and an industrious, enterprising and contented people.

Joslin lake in sections 11 and 12, with its feeding creek; Columbus lake, with its satellites in the shape of a trio of ponds, in section 3; the expansion of the Raisin in section 20, the county drain, forming almost the boundary of the notheast quarter of the township, the Raisin river and Iron creek,—all present their advantages. The Raisin enters the township in section 7, and after a tortuous course, generally south, makes its exit in section 32. In this section is the confluent of Iron creek. The L. S. & M. S. railroad is built, principally through the Raisin valley, and for a great part of its length runs parallel with the river. The D., H. & S. W. R. R. passes over the plains of the northern sections. The soil is clay with loam in many places, rich in all its constituents. The mineral resources as now known consist only of marl and peat iron. The forests and orchards are both extensive and valuable. From the following reference to its agricultural resources, the rich character of the soil will be better understood.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

The township of Bridgewater contains an area of improved and unimproved lands equal to 21,677 acres, laid off into 196 farms, averaging 110.55 acres each. The improved lands extend over 15,230, and the unimproved, over 6,437 acres.

In 1879 no less than 3,956 acres were sown in wheat, yielding 86,041 bushels, or an average of 21.75 to the acre. In May, 1880, the area reported as sown under that cereal exceeded 4,382. The corn-fields of the township produced in 1879, 100,593 bushels, harvested from 1,578 acres, and 44,063 bushels of oats from 1,022 acres. 698 acres of clover gave a yield of 1,226 bushels of seed; 148 acres of barley produced 3,470 bushels; 109 acres, devoted to potato culture, yielded up 9,663 bushels, and 2,466 acres of meadow lands produced 3,054 tons of hay. In reviewing these statistics, it may be truthfully observed that a reasonable average was not obtained in 1879. The soil is capable of doing much more for the industrious husbandman.

ORGANIC.

Bridgewater formed a part of the township of Dexter until 1832, when its inhabitants with those of Manchester resolved to organize a township under the name of Hixon. The Legislative Council passed an act, which was approved June 26, 1832,—“that all that part of the township of Dexter, in the county of Washtenaw, comprised in surveyed townships number four south, in ranges 3 and 4 east, shall be a township by the name of Hixon, and that the first township meeting shall be holden at the house of Daniel S. Brooks, in said township. A meeting of the voters of Hixon township was held April 1, 1833, at the house of Brooks, over which Grove Barker presided as Moderator; Lyman Downs, Clerk, and Howell B. Norton, Justice of the Peace. The election resulted in the choice of the following named town officers: Geo. Howe, Supervisor; Robert H. Heggie, Clerk; Harvey Gilbert, Collector and Constable; Oramel D. Skinner, James Stephens, and Wm. B. Peir, Assessors; Eli R. Sayles and John Lockerby, Commissioners of Schools; Thomas Gilbert, Overseer of the Poor; Levi P. Pratt, Jacob Gilbert, and Shove Minor, Commissioners of Highways.

Subsequently that portion of Hixon comprised in township 4 south, of range 4 east, was organized into a separate township by the name of “Bridgewater,” and the remainder of Hixon tp. organized in 1836 under the name of Manchester. George Howe gave the name to the township. The first election held in Bridgewater resulted in the choice of George Howe as Supervisor; R. H. Heggie, Town Clerk; Norman L. Conklin, Treasurer, and B. H. Norton, Justice of the Peace. Among the succeeding township clerks was D. W. Palmer, who held the office over 30 years. Justice Malcolm McDougal held his judicial position for 35 consecutive years.

A special meeting was held May 2, 1833, for the town of Bridgewater, for the purpose of electing town treasurer, school commissioners and overseers of highways. It was at this meeting that Norman L. Conklin was elected Treasurer, he being the first who held that office. Reuben Downs and Eli R. Sayles were elected School Commissioners; Alex. Sargeant, Thomas Gilbert, Isa Ward, Philip Poucher, D. Soules and Eli R. Sayles, Overseers of Highways. Shove Minor was Moderator and R. H. Heggie, Clerk of the meeting.

The first annual township meeting held was April 7, 1834, at the house of John Valentine, where N. L. Conklin's residence now stands. Emanuel Case was Moderator, with Norman L. Conklin, Clerk, and Howell P. Norton, Justice of the Peace. The election resulted in the choice of Geo. Howe, Supervisor; Norman L. Conklin, Clerk; Thomas Gilbert, Treasurer; James Stephens, Jacob Gilbert and Lyman Downs, Assessors; Ambrose Ely, Levi B. Pratt and Andrew Harris, Commissioners of Highways; Emanuel Case and H. B. Norton, School Committee; Reuben Downs, Elijah G. Carr, Odle H. Stone, Constables; James Stephens and Stephen Walter, Directors of the Poor; Robert Powell, George Calhoun, Norman L. Conklin, J. W. P. Groves, Elijah Carr, School Inspectors. The overseers of highways and fence-viewers elected were:—Robbins Douglas, L. B. Pratt, Joseph Noyes, James Crampton, L. Downs, Joshua L. Smith, James Valentine, Levi Cole, Jeremiah Kenecut, Robert Powell, T. Gilbert, Geo. Howe, Miner Mallet, Andrew Harris, N. L. Conklin, Dennis Lancaster, Moses Bivins and John Haynes. At a special meeting held at the same house May 1, 1834, over which Jacob Gilbert presided as Moderator, Emanuel Case was elected Supervisor, Wm. Brayton, Commissioner of Highways; Elias Durby, M. Mallet, Wm. Auls and J. Haynes, Overseers of Highways. At the time this meeting was held Manchester formed a portion of Bridgewater.

NAMING OF BRIDGEWATER.

As has been said, the name of this district after it was laid off as a separate township from Dexter, was Hixon. In 1833 the people desired to organize a separate township, but subsequently they, at the solicitation of Geo. Howe, accepted the name of Bridgewater, in honor of the village of the same name in Oneida county, N. Y. A petition to the Legislative Council praying for such a change of name and boundary, was presented early in 1833, and an act passed to that effect in the summer of the same year.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settler of that portion of Washtenaw, known as Bridgewater, was Col. Daniel Hixon, who in coming here tarried in Lenawee county when Tecumseh contained only two log-cabins. George Lazelle, T. Lazelle and E. Wheelock came in 1829, a few days after Dan. Hixon. B. H. Felton, Jacob Gilbert, James Crampton and Thomas Pickett settled in May, 1830. C. W. Sergeant, B. Way, Harvey, Ephraim and Esther Platt, Thomas, Elizabeth and Anna Gilbert, and Daniel Porter arrived in 1831. John Haynes, John Valentine, Norman L. Conklin, Daniel Brooks, John Scott, H. A. Katner, M. Dewey, Stephen and Lawrence Walters, Geo. Howe, Shove Minor, Lewis Ingersoll, M. Mitchell, Jonathan Mitchell, Bennager and Benjamin Lockerby, M. Darby, John Lynch, Russell M. Randall, Wm. Ruckman, Lyman and Reuben Downs, Geo. L. Calhoun, John Milson, Washington Hewitt, W. H. Arells, W. W. Plummer, Henry Bird, Jacob Dubois, E. Graves, M. Evans, Chas. Brush arrived in the fall of 1832 and spring of 1833; J. T. Calhoun in 1834. Norman Calhoun arrived in 1836.

THE TOWN HALL.

The first annual township meeting held in the town hall was that of April 6, 1857. The question of erecting a town hall was brought before the Township Board April 2, 1855, when a building committee was appointed, comprising Daniel Le Baron, D. W. Palmer, Norman Calhoun and W. H. Aulls. This committee reported June 22, 1855, and was discharged. Another committee was appointed April 7, 1856, composed of Norman Calhoun, Lewis Potts, Junius Short and Ransom Bradley. Those gentlemen were authorized to locate the town hall within one and one-fourth miles of the geographical center of the township, and instructed to have it completed by November, 1856, if possible, so that the next town meeting might be held therein. To enable them to accomplish this, a sum of $250 was ordered to be raised and added to the sum of $300 already voted for that purpose. The hall was formally opened in September, 1856. On April 6, 1857, the following act was passed by the Board: "Voted, that the town hall be opened for moral and scientific lectures, and for funerals." It would appear strange now-a-days to have such a hall devoted to funeral purposes.

FIRST TOWNSHIP BY-LAWS.

The adoption of the following "By-laws for Bridgewater" characterized the second meeting of the township government in 1834. "Voted, that thirty dollars be raised for the support of the poor; voted, that four dollars be a bounty on every full grown wolf; voted, that all hogs weighing upwards of forty pounds shall be free commoners, under forty not free unless with a good sufficient yoke; voted, that a lawful fence shall be four feet and a half high, and the cracks in the fence two feet up shall not exceed four inches; voted, that there shall be one poundmaster in each surveyed township—Ephraim Gilbert Poundmaster for the east, Frederick Valentine for the west; voted, that each pathmaster be fence-viewer; voted, that the next township meeting be held at the house of Stephen Walters." Such by-laws were adopted by the township Board, to be in force until the next annual meeting.

MARKING THE CATTLE.

In olden times it was the custom to mark cattle and horses, as it was also the duty of the owner to register the mark so used. On the records of Bridgewater this practice was carried out so extensively that many pages of the small record books of early days are devoted to descriptions of such cattle, horses, etc. An entry of this kind may be given thus:

By request of Levi B. Pratt, of Bridgewater, a mark for his horses, cattle, sheep and hogs is to be a square crop on the end and two slits on the underside of the left ear of s'd animals.

A notice should be served on one or other of the township officials when a stray animal would come into the possession of a citizen, in this manner:

Mr. R. Higgin Sir I have one stray steer that came in with my kattle about the first of July last he is red and white mostly white with a half crop of the underside of the left ear and to all appearances a small three-year-old maybe four, long slim horns, one a little topt.
NATHAN MARTIN.

Bridgewater Nov'r the 27th 1833.

ROBERT H. HEGGIE
Town Clerk.

Another notice is given to Mr. Conklin in this way:

Mr. Conklin Sir I have one stray bull which came to my house about the middle of Nov two years old small size brindle a white spot in his forehead about two thirds of his tail white and both hind feet with a slit in his right ear.

Dec. 18th 1834.

WM. BALDWIN.

When animals were not sought after within a certain period, the finder or other party might demand that such animal should be appraised, and purchased at such appraised value. The valuation was made and recorded as follows:

Washtenaw County } s. s.

I, M. McDougal, Justice of the Peace in and for the said county do certify that on this 26 day of November 1850 did appraise a certain stray pony colt of a Bay color supposed to be three years old taken up by Dennis Lancaster of the township of Bridgewater at the sum of twenty-five dollars.

Dated Bridgewater November
26 1850

M. McDOUGAL,
Justice of the Peace.

Notwithstanding this fair appraisal, the parties interested brought the matter into the courts and paid heavily for so doing.

It is unnecessary to enter more fully into this subject. That such marks were in existence, and such records made, cannot be doubted, neither can they be ridiculed. To-day the cavalry horses of the European armies are branded distinctively; and certainly, if the animals of uniformed villainy of this century require to be marked, the absolute necessity of marking the horses and cattle of the honest early settlers of the western woods cannot be questioned.

OLD TRAILS AND INDIAN VISITORS.

The Pottowatomies and Sacs had each a trail, the Sacs along the west bank and the other tribe along the east bank of the Raisin. In 1832 a band of Indians visited the Bridgewater district. This was during the Sac war excitement, so that the settlers watched the movements of the dusky warriors. This watchfulness on the part of the settlers resulted in the capture of a squaw by Simeon Spencer; while Levi D. Smith and other officers from Clinton arrested the warriors, and brought them to Clinton. Here the Indians, harmless in themselves, began to suspect the whites of treachery, and accordingly loaded their muskets to commence a fight, when a Chicago man, who understood the Indian language, reasoned with the braves and quelled what would have proved a terrible calamity to the settlement.

INDIANS RETURNING.

In 1843, when the Indians were returning from Malden, they camped on the land now forming the farm of Zerah Jenkins, and there indulged in their barbarous festival, maddened by drink, tobacco and sugar purchased at Malden and Detroit. John T. Calhoun, Jacob Platt, Harvey Gilbert and Geo. L. Calhoun walked down to visit them, when a squaw walked up deliberately to J. T. Calhoun, asked for whisky, and meeting with a refusal, the red woman struck him a terrible blow, stunning him and laying him prostrate. This was the first and last blow struck at this pioneer.

GOING TO MILL.

Mrs. B. H. Felton, in her paper read before the Washtenaw County Pioneer Society by R. Randall, of Clinton, says:

"In those early days we had to get our grinding done at Brownsville. I recollect in 1831 Mr. Carpenter took his ox team, went out to Lodi or that vicinity, purchased a grist of wheat, got as far as Clinton, staid over night and early in the morning went to Brownsville, dug potatoes to pay for his breakfast, had his grinding done, and reached home the second night. There was no more wheat to be had on any conditions, so we cut small patches of the green wheat, dried it until it could be threshed, then boiled it. In this manner we sustained ourselves until harvest. Jacob Gilbert ground corn in a coffee-mill to supply his family until the harvest gave them better fare. We had no road on which to travel in those days, but went by Indian trails and by marked trees. We might have adopted the language of Alexander Selkirk, and with the greatest truthfulness exclaimed :

“The sound of the church-going bell
These valleys and woods never heard,
Nor sighed at the sound of a knell,
Or smiled when a Sabbath appeared.”

THE RESULT OF SUNDAY TRAVELING.

In the fall of 1830 Jacob Gilbert and James Crampton started out on the Pottawatomie trail on Sunday morning, to see what they could discover, taking their fire-arms along. The sight of game lured them from the trail, and so they lost their way. After wandering about until nearly midnight they came upon a small cabin where a man was living alone. They stayed one night with this man, took breakfast, left their game with their host, and started out, confident of reaching home in an hour or so ; but to their surprise night found them at the same cabin again. Next morning they went forth with fresh zeal, traveled all day, and when night came they were an unknown distance from any known point. They built a fire, cooked some game, and slept by the side of a friendly log, with Heaven's dome over them. The following day being Wednesday, they still started afresh. The fortunes of the day were similar to the previous days, and night found them in the trackless wilderness. They cooked game and lay cown to “meditate on the uncertainty of human events.” Thursday morning Mrs. Crampton solicited one or two neighbors to go in search of the wanderers. These neighbors promised to search for the fugitives if they did not return by noon, but just before 12 m. the heart of Mrs. Crampton was made glad by the safe arrival of her husband and his companion. Such were a few of the perils attendant on early settlement.

WOLF-SLAYERS.

John Haynes, a celebrated hunter of the district in early years, went out one Sunday, when he saw what appeared to him to be five foxes. He took aim and sent one bullet through the bodies of the whelps. On going down he found that he had killed five wolves. About the same time the Gilbert brothers and Geo. Haight discovered a hole on the east bank of the Raisin, wherein were seven young wolves. These animals were smoked out, and their captors received $91 State and township bounty for the scalps. In 1835 the township paid out to Witherell and H. W. Sessions, $16; to John

B. Crane, $4, and to Joseph Aulls, $4, as bounty on wolves killed during that year.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first birth was that of Henrietta Hixon, who in later years married Rev. D. Kedzie, of Three Rivers. The first marriage was that of Dennis Lancaster and Harriet Frederick. The ceremony was performed by Howell B. Norton. The first death was that of Mrs. Thomas Bolton, who was buried on the bank of the Raisin in section 21. The first settler was Daniel Hixon. The first log cabin was built by Daniel Hixon. The first frame house was built by Daniel Brooks. The first frame barn was built in 1834 by Rev. Robert Powell. The first district school-house was built on section 28 in 1834; and the school was taught by Norman L. Conklin. The first saw-mill was erected on the "East Bend" of the Raisin by Jacob Gilbert, in 1834. The first grist-mill was built by Wm. W. Annin in 1857. The first church was erected on section one in 1855 by the German Lutherans, with Rev. Mr. Foltz as pastor.

INDUSTRIES.

The cider-mill of Wm. Hankee is on the N. E. quarter of section 20. This was built about 1870.

The Hankee saw-mill is situated where the old saw-mill was built by Wm. Hankee in 1870.

The Taylor and the Morris saw-mills existed up to 1870, when a fire destroyed both. A shoddy mill was established here; but owing to the difficulty of obtaining rags, it was discontinued.

The Southern Washtenaw Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. has its office in Bridgewater. Junius Short is president and D. W. Palmer, secretary. This company has a membership of 225, with a capital stock of $542,935. Owing to its local character the income of the society for the year ending Dec. 31, 1880, was $142.79, and the expenditure $119.65. The business of the company is carried on in a most satisfactory manner, and the benefits conferred upon the district much appreciated.

SCHOOLS OF BRIDGEWATER.

There are nine school-districts in the township, numbered respectively from 1 to 9. The names of the directors for the year to the end of September, 1881, were Jacob Blum, Jacob Luckhardt, Christian Saley, James Taylor, Alexander Seymour, E. M. LeBaron, Peter S. Knight, Henry C. Calhoun and Geo. Calhoun.

Of the nine school buildings, eight are constituted of timber and one of brick. The number of children between the ages of five and twenty years in the township is set down at 390, and the number attendant on school during the year ending Sept., 1880, 275. The school property is valued at $3,035. The number of teachers employed in 1880 was 19, teaching in the aggregate 66½ months, or about 106 days each, for which they received in toto the sum $1,129.75 or $59.46 each. The total expenditure for the year 1880 was $1,859.92, leaving $229.93 on hand at the close of that year. The one-mill school tax for the year amounted to $543.90.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Brief personal sketches of old settlers and other citizens follow here, as an essential part of the history of Bridgewater township.

William F. Allen was born July 19, 1813, in New York State, and now resides near Clinton, this State, where he owns 180 acres of land. His early days were spent upon a farm, although he worked to some extent as a cooper. He afterward bought his present farm in Bridgewater tp., now consisting of 220 acres. Receiving little education in life, except a practical one, he has through industry accumulated the property before mentioned. He was married March 13, 1845, at Clinton, to Miss Louisa Lincoln, of New York State. They have 4 children living, and 1 deceased—Eva, who died in 1854. Emmet, the eldest, was born on the homestead, in 1846; Frank, born in 1848, married Miss Lydia Van Gieson; George, born in 1852, married Miss Emma Warner.

H. C. Blaisdell, miller at River Raisin, was born in this township June 26, 1838, and is a son of James and Isabella (Smith) Blaisdell, natives of Virginia and of Scotch descent. D. W. Palmer.—There is a tradition that three brothers named Palmer came from England, two of them settling in Connecticut, and one in Rhode Island, and that of the former had a son named Joseph, who became a celebrated physician; the latter had 2 sons, one of whom, Joseph (2d) married Susan Kinney, and had 7 sons and 4 daughters—Stephen, born June 14, 1771; Joseph (3d) was born Nov. 18, 1778, and married Abigail Wheeler, May 12, 1805, daughter of David and Prudence Wheeler. Mr. Wheeler died when Abigail was an infant, and Stephen Palmer married the widow, thus becoming father-in-law to his brother. To Joseph (3d) and Abigail were born, June 5, 1807, David W., the subject of this biography; Abigail, Sept. 7, 1809; Harry M., Nov. 22, 1813; and Russell D., Dec. 25, 1818.

David W. Palmer married Flora L. Randall March 19, 1829, and Dec. 30 following, a son, Francis Marion, was born. Mrs. P. died Oct. 2, 1833, and Mr. Palmer Dec. 21, 1837, married Fidelia D. Randall, and to them have been born—Flora C., Nov. 21, 1838; Emmett N., June 9, 1840; Albert F., May 24, 1847; Henry R., Feb. 12, 1849; Abbie S., July 24, 1853; and Ara H., Oct. 4, 1856. David W. was born in Poluntown, Windham Co., Ct., and in 1810 the family moved to Madison county, N. Y., settling in Lenox tp., where he went to school and worked in pioneer woods. The winters of 1824–5–'6 he hauled pine logs from the pinery of the noted statesman, Gerrit Smith, of Peterboro, five miles distant, preparatory to building a dwelling-house. Preparing to teach school he, having no assistance from living instructors, experienced the hard work and tasted the sweets of self-education. For a number of years he taught school during the winter and followed the farm during the summer. He was married March 19, 1829, but his wife died some time afterward, and then he entered the Academy at Munnsville, Oneida Co., under the superintendence of the celebrated mathematician, Tobias Ostrander, who soon after offered him the position of teaching his large grammar class, and to reward him with special instruction in higher mathematics. A vacancy occurring, Mr. Palmer took the place of assistant in the chemical department of Hamilton College; next, taught a select school near home; then, in the spring of 1836, in order to invigorate his health, he commenced traveling for a book firm in New York, to sell books by subscription. He traveled through many of the western counties of New York and Northern Pennsylvania; but failing to receive his pay, he emigrated to this State in October (1836) in company with an uncle, coming by way of the Erie canal on a line boat, and by steamer on Lake Erie, on which they were tossed about by wind three days and nights. The Maumee being too low for them to make Toledo, the passengers were left at the mouth of the River Raisin, five miles distant, on the wreck of another vessel. A small steamer soon came to their relief and landed them in Monroe. This was Friday afternoon. They went to the stage office to secure passage out into the country, and the clerk, looking over his books and seeing that the men were all stout enough to carry a rail, said they could go by the following Tuesday, and that he should charge them $7 each, to ride to Tecumseh! But these independent yeomanry soon found a teamster who would take their trunks at $2 each, while they would foot it.

When Mr. Palmer arrived in this tp. (Bridgewater) he found he had but $3 in money. He accordingly commenced teaching school immediately, in order to obtain a little money. His school was a private one, in Clinton, where he soon had all the pupils he could take care of. His postage bill averaged $1 a week; letters 25 cents each, and no pre-payment required. He next bought 40 acres of land and two village lots in Brooklyn, Jackson Co., and the following May (1837) returned to New York, worked through hay-making and harvest, and in the fall he came back to Michigan, bringing his little son, and taught school in Clinton. In December he married his present wife, leaving his son with his Grandfather Randall; taught school during the winters and farmed during the summers for seven years; then purchased of the State the southwest quarter of sec. 16, tp. 4 S., of range 4 E., then in a wild state. This purchase he made in order, principally, to give his children physical training at farm work. They cleared the land, plowed the "openings," with six yoke of oxen and a mammoth plow, split rails, made fence, put up buildings and prospered. The children attended a good school, about 70 rods distant, and ultimately became teachers.—F. M., four terms; Flora C., two terms; Emmett N., seven terms, and is now a graduate of the medical department of Michigan University and a practicing physician; Albert F., 30 terms, and served six years as County Superintendent of Schools for Woodson county, Kan.; Henry R., 11 terms, and now Tp. Supt. of Schools for this tp.; Abbie S., eight terms, and Ara H., six terms.

Mr. Palmer taught school a part of each year for 17 successive years; was School Inspector in New York eight years and in Michigan 30 years. He also had an interesting experience as a member of the drilling squads after the war of 1812 for many years, and after coming West he was appointed Captain for the south half of Bridgewater, and afterward Colonel, which latter office he resigned. In 1869 he was employed as Secretary of the Washtenaw Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company, and he kept their books when their capital stock was $5,500,000. He is now Secretary of the Southern Washtenaw Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company. He was never ambitious for public office.

Mrs. Fidelity D. Palmer, nee Randall, wife of the preceding, came to Michigan in the fall of 1836, with her parents and other members of her father's family, being then at the age of 16. They came by canal to Buffalo, and by steambot to Detroit, being 10 days in making the journey from Canastota to Detroit, and two and a half days with teams from Detroit to Bridgewater. She taught a winter term of school in Bridgewater after her arrival in Michigan, and the summer following on what was then Napoleon (now Norvell) Plains. The school-house in which she taught was the first one built in the township. It was made of logs, with a huge fire-place in one end, and the seats were slabs, with sticks for legs and without backs. Her parents were both natives of New London Co., Conn., father of Stonington and mother of Groton. Her father's name was Roswell Randall, and he was the son of Peleg and Hannah Randall, of Scotch descent, the former a soldier of the Revolution and afterwards a minister of the Baptist denomination.

Her maternal grandfather's name was Zedediah Morgan, and he was one of the garrison at Fort Griswold; was home on a permit to visit his family, when the attack was made by Arnold, and hearing the firing, started at once. When he arrived in sight he saw the British just leaving, and on reaching the fort found his commander, Col. Ledyard, and also many of his immediate friends and neighbors, weltering in their blood. Her grandfather Morgan moved from Connecticut to Bridgewater, Oneida Co., N. Y., about 1797. Her father came to the same place in 1799, and was married to Priscilla, the daughter of Jedediah and Lois Morgan, in 1801, and in 1805 removed to Lenox, Madison Co., N. Y., where they resided until they came to Michigan. Her father was a man well educated for the times; he taught 11 winters, held many offices of trust in the town, and at one time was appointed by the Governor one of three commissioners to treat with the Stock-bridge Indians for the purchase of their lands. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, holding a Lieutenant's commission, acting as Captain at Sackett's Harbor.

Mrs. Palmer is the youngest of 8 children, and has 3 brothers and 1 sister still living—R. Randall, of Clinton, Lenawee Co.; Mrs. J. M. Colgrove of Winchester, Tenn.; S. A. Randall, of Momence, Ill.; and the Hon. F. P. Randall, of Fort Wayne, Ind., for many years Mayor of that city, and once Senator of that State.

Francis M. Palmer, an enterprising farmer of this tp., was born in New York State in 1829, the son of David W. and Flora L. (Randall) Palmer, the father a native of New Jersey and the mother of New York, both of English descent. Francis was reared on the farm, and came with his parents to this county in 1837. He taught school five winters, working on a farm during the intervals. He has made of life a success, and now owns 110 acres of good land, with a neat and substantial residence; is a breeder of short-horn Durham cattle and thorough-bred Merino sheep. He is a Democrat, and a Notary Public, and has been School Director and Tp. Treasurer. March 4, 1875, he married Olive L. Soper, of Jackson county, Mich., and they have 1 child—Nettie B.

Joseph Lawson was born at Northampton, England, in 1829 crossed the ocean and for a time worked as a baker at Albany and Saratoga Springs, having been regularly apprenticed to this vocation in England; in 1838 he was married to Mercy Hoyt, a daughter of James P. Hoyt; two years previous to his marriage Mr. H. was a teacher in district schools, and also among the pioneer teachers of this county, whither he removed in 1834, and in 1836 became a permanent settler in this tp., where he invested in 160 acres of unimproved land. He was unusually industrious, and was soon on the high road to prosperity. He died Dec. 11, 1880; his pioneer wife and 4 children survive him, who through his industrious efforts are comfortably situated in life.

Mrs. Seelye, the eldest of the children, is a resident of this tp.; Martha married James Gregory, residence Saline; Mary married Wallace Dell, of Bridgewater; George, from whom this sketch is obtained, and who ranks among the more public-spirited citizens of Bridgewater, was married to Elizabeth Nestell, a daughter of John B. Nestell, but this lady died of consumption in 1875, soon after her marriage. In 1877 Mr. R. married Mrs. Ella King, a daughter of Rufus King, a pioneer of this tp. Mr. and Mrs. R. have 2 children—Elizabeth and Frank. Mr. Rawson is the owner of 149 acres of land.

Junius Short, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in Livingston county, New York, in 1819; in 1840 he was married to Miss Betsey, daughter of Jacob and Elvira Tiffany. In 1849 Mr. Short came West and located in this township, where he bought in March, 1851, his present valuable farm of 140 acres. In 1857 he expended large sums of money upon an elegant residence, and erected extensive barns and outbuildings for the shelter of stock. Mr. S. makes a speciality of raising fine-wooled sheep, having at the present writing, a flock of 200. Mr. Short frequently ships to the far West, and ranks high in this special line of farming. There were born to Mr. and Mrs. Short 3 children—Elma, who married Dr. Lynch, of Manchester; and Mary and Wilbur, George Schmidt (deceased) was a native of Hesse Cassel, Germany, where he was born Oct. 25, 1826. He came to America in 1849, and settled first in Saline and bought 82 acres of land in that township, residing there a number of years. About 15 years ago he bought the property where his family now lives, consisting of 80 acres, upon which stands a fine house, which was built in 1871 at a cost of several thousand dollars. Mr. Schmidt was a very industrious man, and left his family well provided for in life. He died Nov. 19, 1877, having had consumption the last ten years of his life, and was laid at rest in the Bridgewater cemetery. He had 5 children, 3 of whom are living—Henry, George and Fanny. Mrs. Schmidt was married Feb. 16, 1881, to Edward Egan.

B. P. Starr, is a native of Palmyra, N. Y.; at the age of 18 years he moved to Michigan, and first located in Saline tp., where he bought and lived a number of years; afterward he moved to this tp., and bought farm property. He was married to Miss Elizabeth E., a daughter of Elder Powell. Mr. and Mrs. Starr are now residents of Clinton, and are very comfortably situated in life. One child was born to them—Octavia, who was married in Washtenaw county, Feb. 5, 1871, to Washington W. Hess, of Plainfield, Ill., and they have 1 child—Minnie.

Thomas J. Van Gieson, farmer, sec. 22; P. O., Clinton; was born in Patterson, N. J., Nov. 24, 1825, the son of John and Ellen (Van Riper) Van Gieson, natives of New Jersey and of Dutch descent; he came to the county in 1836, worked by the month to get a start, has succeeded well in his calling, and now owns 160 acres of good land, which was entered by his father. His first marriage was to Sarah P. George; they had 1 child; she died, and in 1874 Mr. V. married Rhoda McNeil, a member of the Baptist Church. He is a Republican, politically.

Hiram Welch was born in Onondaga county, N. Y., in 1804; in 1832 he came to Michigan, and first settled in Pittsfield tp., in this county, where he bought a farm of 80 acres; this he partially cleared, and not long afterward erected a comfortable farm-house; thence he moved to Scio, where he purchased 160 acres in company with Edward Briggs; and from time to time bought and sold other tracts of land that proved remunerative investments. In 1852 he settled upon his present property, on which he now resides, and on which he erected 23 years ago his present residence. In 1824 he was married to Miss Mandy Briggs, who died in 1841, at Lodi; in 1842 he was married to Maria Isbell. In 1869 his wife was laid at rest in this county, and in 1871 Mr. W. married for his third wife, Miss Louisa Lathrop.

SALINE TOWNSHIP.

The town of Saline comprises all of township 4 south, of range 5 east. It was first settled in 1826 by Leonard Miller, who built the first house in the town, near the salt spring, about one mile south of the present village of Saline. Previous to this time, and for a period of probably 200 years, it had been the home of the red man, there being many evidences that near the salt spring an Indian village once flourished. The Indian burying ground upon the east bank of the river, south of the village, bears evidence that this was one of their settlements. Early seekers for relics did not hesitate to open the shallow graves, and the ground was strewn with the bones of departed warriors. The existence of several trails (six at least), all centering at this point, also attests its importance in by-gone days. In the early part of this century the tradition was current and undoubted among the old settlers of Detroit and Monroe, that a very large Indian village existed around and west of the springs. Fifty years ago the ruins of a well were seen by some of the earliest settlers of the town, and the report has been current for half a century that salt was made here, and also that a part of Gen. Anthony Wayne's army wintered here for that purpose. There can be no doubt that the existence of salt at this point drew the deer and other animals, and that the hunters, first with their bows and arrows and afterward with their guns, followed.

William M. Gregory, in a paper read before the Washtenaw County Pioneer Society, says: "We cannot doubt that this region was a favorite resort of the old Indian tribes, especially the Pottawatomies. Driven from their fishing grounds on the Detroit river, by the French, almost two centuries ago, they had but to pass the low belt of timbered land to find this lovely Washtenaw. They found fish in the streams; they found game in the forests and plains; and good planting ground everywhere. Almost every old pioneer resident has, perhaps, some of the relics of their savage life. Those relics of the stone age when implements of war, of the chase, and of domestic life were wrought from this material. Soon after the year 1500 they were able to procure rude implements made of metal, from their first visitors, the French, and these, in a measure, supplemented the other. But how to keep them in repair they knew not. The iron axes and other tools we have found, almost always lack an edge. Rude were their lives, and rude and ungainly were the means by which they sustained these lives. As the Indian tribes were led to join the English, in the war of 1812, they never could feel fully at peace with us afterward, and this accounts for

SURFACE, SOIL AND TIMBER.

The central portions of this town are undulating, but not hilly, while the southeastern part is level, timbered land. While Saline cannot boast of such beautiful and extensive plains as those of Bridgewater and Lodi, it is remarkably free from waste and unproductive tracts. Small portions of sandy land, alternating with clay, loam and alluvial, produce a very desirable variety of soil, adapted to every kind of crop peculiar to this latitude; and the growth of black walnut, butternut, maple and basswood, even upon the highest lands, betoken a soil fertile and easily worked. While oak may be stated as the most common timber, hickory and ash are also found.

MARSHES, SPRINGS AND WATER-COURSES.

There is only one lake in the town, and the marshes, with one exception, are small and few—all capable of cultivation, and highly prized. The Saline river, which rises mainly in the town of Bridgewater, enters the town on section 13, running in a northeasterly direction, passing through sections 8, 4 and 3, into Lodi, thence back into the town on section 1, running nearly south, through sections 12 and 13, entering the town of York from the latter section. Macon creek rises on section 15, taking a southern and southeastern course, and passes through secs. 22, 27, 26, 35 and 36 into Lenawee county and Spring Brook. These comprise all the living streams in the town. Springs are not common. The salt springs have undoubtedly been of greater note in years gone by than they are at the present time. It has been reported that the largest spring exists in the present bed of the river where it courses through section 1.

EARLY SETTLERS OF THE TOWN.

As already stated, Leonard Miller was the first settler of the town, erecting his cabin near the salt springs on section 1. Here he kept a public house, entertaining in a hospitable manner all who chose to partake of his bounty. The sign which he swung to the breeze bore the inscription, "Live and Let Live." Mr. Miller died in 1830.

Daniel Cross built the second house in 1826, near Mr. Miller's, and, like the latter, furnished entertainment for man and beast.

Another settler in 1826 was Russell Briggs, who located west of the village, and is yet living upon the old homestead. Orrin and Chester Parsons also settled the same year. Orrin Fuller came in 1828; Samuel Cross in 1830, as also George Miller.

Orange Risdon purchased his land in 1824, but did not settle for some years after. A full reference to this pioneer is made in the biographical sketch following this history.

Orrin Parsons was a noted person in this town. He was born in the town of Sandisfield, Berkshire Co., Mass, in 1794. In 1802 his parents removed to Windham, Greene Co., N. Y. At 22 years of age he married Miss Rebecca Fuller. In May, 1826, in company with his brother Chester, he purchased 160 acres of land on section 12. The next year, 1827, they erected the first saw-mill in the town, which was of great benefit to the early settlers of all the surrounding region. The grist-mill was erected soon after. At the second annual town meeting in Saline, in 1831, Mr. Parsons was chosen supervisor, to succeed Mr. Davis, and was re-elected in 1832, 1833, 1835, 1837, 1838, 1839 and 1840. He also served as justice of the peace and in other town offices. In 1846 he was a member of the State Legislature. Mr. Parsons died at the early age of 57. His life was one of great activity and enterprise. He was public-spirited in a remarkable degree, and the poor and suffering were sure to receive from him sympathy and aid. As the owner of a grist-mill no one can recount the number and extent of his benefactions. Brought up to no particular trade, as occasion required he displayed a remarkable degree of ingenuity and mechanical skill, surpassed by very few men, even among the first settlers of a new land.

Another prominent and public-spirited citizen of the town was Julius Cruttenden, who was born in Poultney, Vt., in 1791, and in 1831, with his father, Thomas Cruttenden, came to Saline and purchased several hundred acres of land. In 1842 he was elected supervisor, but died in September of that year, before the expiration of his term. He was remarkably genial and popular. In mentioning the early settlers of the town, there are three that deserve special mention, from the fact that they were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, in which each bore an honorable part.

Timothy Cruttenden, in company with his son Julius, of whom mention has been made, came to Saline in 1831, and died September, 1832, nearly eighty-five years of age. He was born in Guilford, Connecticut, in 1747. While residing in Lenox, Berkshire county, Massachusetts, he enlisted in the Revolutionary army. In 1776 he went to Montreal and Quebec. From the latter place our forces retired on the approach of the British transports. In the autumn of 1777 he shared in the notable campaign against Burgoyne; was in the battle at the ford of the North river, near Fort Edward, where Burgoyne, after the last battle of Saratoga, attempted to force his way back to Canada. He afterward witnessed the surrender of Burgoyne.

Archibald Armstrong was born about 1753, in one of the lower counties of the Mohawk Valley, New York. He was in Fort Schuyler, now Rome, when it was besieged by the British. He was also in the battles at Cowpens, Monmouth, Germantown, and finally at Yorktown, where he saw the surrender of Cornwallis.

He died about 1846. He came into Saline in 1832 with his son, Schuyler Armstrong. It is said he was present at the execution of Major Andre, the spy, and drummed his death-march. His grave lies near the southeast corner of Saline village cemetery.

In the Benton burying ground near Chester Parsons', is a grave unmarked by any monument—that of Dr. Francis Smith, another Revolutionary soldier. He was born in Rhode Island in 1761, came to Saline about 1836, and died in 1839. He enlisted in the Revolutionary war at sixteen years of age.

Alfred and Asher Davis bought a large portion of section 13, May 13, 1826. The farms of Samuel Cross, Jonas Bond, J. L. Hoyt and B. Wienne are wholly or in part on this tract. Asher died soon after the purchase. Alfred is still living at Grand Rapids. He was the first Supervisor in the town.

Robert Mills bought the southeast quarter of section 15, May 8, 1830. He lived but a short time to enjoy the fruits of his enterprise.

Geo. W. Miller bought the northwest quarter of section 14, September 29, 1830. The death of Mr. and Mrs. Miller almost simultaneously a few years after was a public affliction.

Norman G. Fowler took up May 17, 1831, the southeast quarter of section 14, the farm now owned by Albert R. Clark.

Daniel Wallace and Daniel D. Wallace purchased upon the turnpike, three miles west of the village of Saline, in 1831. The brother has passed away. His wife still lives, making her home at Saline.

Lewis M. Phelps purchased June 12, 1832. He is the only one remaining upon the original purchase, who attempts the cultivation of his farm. Mr. Gregory and Russell Briggs retain portions of their original purchases.

There are other men, and women, too, who are equally worthy of honorable mention, among whom may be named Robert Edmunds, David Hammond, Freeman Moulton, Jeremiah and John Smith, Smith Lapham, Aaron Goodrich, Robert Shaw, William M. Gregory, John Kanouse, Robert Hammond, Geo. Partridge, Joseph Annin, James Russell and Jacob Sherman.

FIRST THINGS.

The first building in the town was erected in 1826 by Leonard Miller.

The first birth was a daughter to Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Miller—now Mrs. Louisa Stoddard, of Lebanon, Clinton Co., Michigan.

Death claimed his first victim in the person of Asher Davis, who died in 1827. His remains were interred on Whitney's farm, afterward moved near the Judd school-house, in York.

The first marriage seems to have been in the Benton district, on the Chicago road, between Robert Craig and Miss Polly Gilbert, on April 12, 1829, by Orange Risdon, a Justice of the Peace. Mrs.

Risdon accompanied her husband on the same horse to the bride's house, to witness the ceremony.

The first school-house erected in the original township of Saline was in section 18, of what is now known as York.

The first school-house was upon the Chicago road, about a mile west of the village of Saline, and built mainly through the efforts of Russell Briggs, in the year 1831.

Calvin Lamb taught the first school, in the winter of 1831-'2, and Miss Harriet Sumner afterward. Mrs. Russell Mills taught the next summer school.

The first election was held at the house of Orange Risdon, the first Monday in April, 1830.

S. Douglas entered the first land in the town, the date of his purchase being June 16, 1824. He bought 80 acres on section 5. Orange Risdon bought the northeast quarter of section one, August 12, 1824.

The first mill built in the town was by Orrin and Chester Parsons, on Saline river, two miles south of the village, in 1827. This was a saw-mill.

The first frame house in the original township of Saline was that erected by Orrin Parsons, in 1829, on section 12. This is now occupied by Mrs. M. M. Sumner, a daughter of Orrin Parsons.

SALT WORKS.

In 1863 a company was formed, composed of representative men of the village and town, for the purpose of manufacturing salt from the spring on section 12. A building was erected, a derrick put in place, and boring commenced. After three unsuccessful attempts to sink a well, the project was abandoned. There has always existed a doubt in the minds of many whether the contractor engaged to sink the well acted in good faith. The charge is boldly made that he was bought off by rival interests. That salt has been made here in years gone by cannot be doubted. Iron kettles have been found which were once doubtless used for this purpose. The Indian trails, already mentioned, lead to this place.

In 1834 H. F. Parsons met a Frenchman near Monroe, while himself and his father were in quest of horses, who, on learning the home of Mr. Parsons, said that years ago there were houses and a salt factory located in what is now called Saline.

SCHOOLS.

The first school-house in the town was built in the winter of 1830-'1, and school was held therein the following winter. The town was not organized into school districts until 1834. The boundaries of the several districts have been changed from time to time until at present there are five whole and six fractional districts.

Fractional District No. 1 is composed of all of section 1 and part of sections 2, 11 and 12, together with portions of the towns of Lodi, Pittsfield and York adjacent. District No. 1 was organized first in 1834, and was then composed entirely of territory in Saline township. In 1838 a large part of the territory was taken from it and it was made a fractional district, to which was annexed a portion of the town of Lodi. At a later date a small part of the towns of Pittsfield and York were added. (For further information of this district see history of the village of Saline.)

District No. 2 is composed of parts of sections 2, 3, 11, 15, 16, and all of sections 9 and 10. The organization of this district dates back to 1834, but has been changed several times. A frame school-house was erected on section 10 in 1855, and is now valued at $300. Matthew Seeger is the present director. During the school year of 1879-'80 school was held seven months at a cost of $126.

Fractional District No. 3 is composed of parts of sections 3, 8, 18, and all of sections 4, 5, 6, 7. A good school-house is on section 5, which was erected in 1878, and is valued at $775. John W. Gross is the present director.

Fractional District No. 5 is composed of parts of sections 11, 12, 13 and 14, and adjacent territory in the town of York. A school-house is on section 12, which was erected in 1856 and is valued at $300. James Hoyt is the present director.

Fractional District No. 6 is composed of parts of sections 13, 24 and 25, together with much territory in the town of York, where the school-house is located.

Section 26, together with parts of sections 23, 24, 25, 27 and 35 form District No. 7. The school-house is located on section 26, and is valued at $300. Henry A. Hammond is the present director.

District No. 8 is quite a large district, with a good school-house on section 22, valued at $600. The district comprises parts of sections 14, 15, 16, 21, 22, 23, 27, 29, 33, and all of section 28. John Gordon is the present director.

Ezra Sanford is the present director of District No. 9, which is composed of parts of sections 18, 8, 16, 24, 29, 30, and all of sections 17, 19, 20. The school-house is on section 27, and is valued at $400. This is known as the Benton school-house.

District No. 10 comprises parts of sections 29, 30, 33, and all of sections 31 and 32, with a good school-house on section 32, valued at $500. The present director is C. L. Morgan.

Fractional District No. 12 comprises parts of sections 27, 33, 35 and all of section 34, with considerable territory in the bounty of Lenawee. It has a school-house on section 34, valued at $400. L. C. Grady is director.

Fractional District No. 13 comprises a very small part of sections 25, 35 and 36, together with territory in York, and the towns of Macon and Milan, Lenawee county.

ORGANIZATION AND ACTS OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

The first town meeting in Saline was held on the first Monday in April, 1830. Boaz Lamson was made Moderator, and Barnabas Holmes, Clerk. The meeting proceeded to elect officers of the town, and resulted as follows:

Supervisor—Alfred Davies.

Town Clerk—Smith Lapham.

Assessors—Apollos Severance, Boaz Lamson, Evelyn Scranton.

Commissioners of Highways—Timothy W. Hunt, James Maybee, Ira Bonner.

Overseers of the Poor—Isaac Brown, Allyn Williams, Silas Lewis, Aretus Belden, Luke Gilbert.

Collector—Jason Gillett.

Constable—Horace Williams.

Commissioners of Common Schools—Allyn Williams, Isaac Brown, Aaron Swain, Arba Lamson, Luther Hatch.

Inspectors of Common Schools—Apollos Severance, Aretus Belden, Evelyn Scranton, Asahel Sawyer, Smith Lapham.

Treasurer of Poor Fund—Arba Lamson.

Trustees of School Lands—Orange Risdon, Timothy W. Hunt, James Maybee.

Treasurer of School Funds—Orrin Parsons.

At the first town meeting it was resolved that the height of fences shall be not less than four and a half feet.

The directors of the poor met and drew lots as to the length of their respective terms. Allyn Williams and Isaac Brown drew one year; Luke Gilbert and Silas Lewis, two years; Aretus Belden, three years.

The business of the town, judging from the records, was not very pressing, as no meeting was held previous to the annual meeting the first Monday in April, 1831, at which time officers were chosen for the following year.

Township records were ordered to be exhibited for inspection at the next annual meeting, and it was resolved that the sum of $2 be paid for every full-grown wolf taken in the township during the year.

At the town meeting held in April, 1832, $50 was voted for the support of the poor for the year.

In 1833 it was voted that it should be a standing rule that officers of the township who compose the Town Board, should exhibit yearly at the annual township meetings accounts of the receipts and expenditures of the township.

Since the organization of the town in 1830, a period of 51 years, many individuals have served the public in the various town offices. Some of these have moved to other States and Territories;

others have been called to their final reward; others yet linger on the shores of time, waiting to hear the summons to come up higher. Their names recorded below will afford satisfaction to those yet remaining and to unborn generations. Following is the list:

Saline is considered from its organization to the period of its partition, by the formation of the townships of York, Lodi and Pittsfield, and on this account the record includes many names now identified with these new townships. At an early day a school-house was built in what now forms York, a portion of the original township of Saline; this was burned in a short time after, and a new one erected, owing to the advice and co-operation of Orrin Parsons.

SALINE VILLAGE.

Among the villages of Michigan there is not one, perhaps, which surpasses Saline in beauty of location, regularity of streets, or in the neatness of its commercial and dwelling houses. The people belong to that class known as progressionists, who seize upon every opportunity to build up the interests of their town. This is apparent in the number of business blocks which they have erected, in their principal school-building, in their churches, and in the taste displayed in the homes of the people generally. The business center of the village presents a busy scene that bears a very favorable contrast with the commercial quarters of much larger towns, so that it may be truly said, Saline forms one of the most pleasant little centers of population in Michigan.

SETTLEMENT.

Aug. 12, 1824, Orange Risdon entered the northeast quarter of section 1, township 4 south, of range 6 east. Mr. Risdon, who had penetrated every nook and corner of this fair county, doubtless selected this spot for the foundation of a future great city. That the selection was well chosen cannot be doubted by any who have visited the place. Surrounded on all sides by a lovely country capable of producing food for a multitude, with fuel in abundance and water for manufacturing purposes, it would seem that no mistake could have been made. Long years before Mr. Risdon set foot on this soil, the red men had here a large village. No less than six trails have been discovered leading to this point, and it is an acknowledged fact the Indian never makes a mistake in the selection of a site for a village.

About one mile south is the famous salt spring, of which mention has been made in the history of the town, near where Leonard Miller and Daniel Cross erected their cabins and "kept hotel" as early as 1826. The Detroit & Chicago road, which was surveyed by Mr. Risdon, passed through this section, making it on the line of the great highway to the West. Everything thus seemed to be propitious for the building up of a flourishing village or city at this point. Accordingly, in September, 1832, Mr. Risdon surveyed and platted the village to which he gave the name of SALINE, after town and river which was already so named. Since the original survey was made there have been several additions made to the village, the first of which was in January, 1848, by David S. Haywood. After Mr. Haywood, no further additions were made until after the completion of the D., H. & S. W. railroad, the advent of which gave an additional impetus to the growth of the village. In May, 1870, A. H. Risdon made a large addition to the village plat, and was followed a few months later by Harvey Bennett, who surveyed and platted a number of blocks in the town of Lodi joining the village on the north. In October, 1871, Russell Mills made an addition, the last made. It is proper to say these additions were only made as the growth of the village seemed to demand.

The first house built upon the original site of the village, was by Orange Risdon, in 1829. Here for about 10 years Mr. Risdon engaged in the business of an inn-keeper, the house enjoying an excellent reputation far and near. At this house the first town election was held.

Some time before Mr. Risdon platted the village, Mr. Finch came to the place from the State of New York, and proposed to establish himself in the mercantile trade. For want of more suitable accommodations, Mr. Risdon rented him his parlor, and in this room goods were first sold in the village of Saline. In the summer of 1832 Mr. Finch erected the first store building on the corner of Chicago and Adrian streets, the same building now occupied by J. McKinnon & Son. However, a small shanty stood on the opposite corner. Caleb Van Husen was next to engage in general mercantile trade, and was for many years a successful merchant in the place. Since Mr. Van Husen's time many others have engaged in the same and kindred lines of trade, some of whom have proven successful, and others not. Trade, as a general thing, has always been profitable, the village attracting trade for many miles around it.

MANUFACTORIES.

While not considered a manufacturing village, yet there has always been more or less done in this line. The mills in the village and vicinity deserve special mention in this connection.

Schuyler Mills.—This mill is located about one-half mile west of Saline village, and was built about 1845 by Schuyler Haywood, a native of Barnegat, New Jersey. Mr. Haywood found a sufficient supply of running water for his purpose, and so when first built the mill was run by what is known as a "breast wheel." This wheel was about 18 feet long and 16 feet in diameter, and 18 yoke of cattle were required to bring the shaft—which was three feet thick—about one mile. Mr. Haywood, after running the mill for some 10 years, sold out to Jacob Sherman, and he, after two years, to William H. Pattison, who ran it successfully till 1866, when he disposed of it to John A. Klein, who has since then operated it. Under the supervision of Mr. Haywood, the mill was used to the best advantage and turned out an average of 25 barrels of flour per day, exclusive of custom work, which at that time was estimated at $20,000 yearly. Since Mr. Klein has become the proprietor, the mill has been doing only a fair amount of merchant and custom work, but making flour of the very best quality. Three grades of flour are made, and the patent flour finds a ready sale in the larger cities of Ann Arbor and Detroit, mostly at the latter place. Three sets of burrs are used in the mill—two for flour and one for corn. The mill is run altogether by water-power, and Mr. Klein has recently added the Excelsior Turbine Water-wheel and patent Eureka machine. The mill is a structure of three stories and a basement, and stands at a place where the old "Chicago turnpike" crosses the Saline river.

Reference has been made to the first saw-mill erected by Orrin Parsons. In 1836 the first grist-mill was built also by Orrin Parsons. It contained two run of stone, and was erected on section 13. It was enlarged in 1842. This building as enlarged was 50x63 feet, five stories high on the east side, and three on the west. The capacity of the mill was 30 barrels flour and custom work per day. The building and machinery cost about $20,000. The breast-wheel used for this mill was 15 feet long and 18 feet high.

Schairer Bros.—The gentlemen comprising this firm have several buildings situated on the south side of Chicago street, and do quite an extensive business in the manufacture of wagons, buggies, fine carriages, and harness. The business was established in 1870, and since then has grown to be one among the many noted manufacturing of Washtenaw county. They carry a stock of $3,000, and their average sales amount to some $13,000. They occupy two large buildings, and have in connection a large blacksmith shop.

Tannery.—In 1853 James Seeley started a tannery in a building 50x25 feet, and tried to build up a trade by honest and fair dealing with everybody. In the spring of 1857 Christian Helber purchased this building and trade of Mr. Seely, and immediately went to work to better the building and apparatus pertaining thereto, and to make for his leather a reputation second to none in this part of Michigan. He enlarged the buildings, placed better facilities for the manufacture of leather in them, and gave his son, Eugene Helber, charge of the work. The tannery proper is 25x50 feet, two stories and a basement, and situated on Henry, between Adrian and Russell streets. Mr. Helber has some 200 cords of oak-bark always on hand to use in the coloring business. In the manufacture of heavy harness leather, Mr. Helber has surpassed his own expectations, and enjoys a reputation among leather-dealers of making a quality which is hardly excelled in the West. His leather passes through some 24 vats and two large tanks in the process of tanning, and finds a ready sale in the cities of Chicago and Detroit. Some years ago the senior Helber turned over the establishment to his son, Eugene, who now has full control of the business.

Saline Windmill.—J. G. Gross & Bros., the manufacturers of this mill, bought out the firm which occupied a building on West Chicago street, and started the pump and windmill business on Nov. 16, 1875, had patented the "Saline Standard Windmill," which they now manufacture. They occupy one large manufacturing building, one pattern shop and blacksmith shop, and have in their employ 12 men. They also deal extensively in Fairbank scales and farm implements, and carry a stock of about $1,500, while their annual sales amount to nearly $18,000. The "Standard" mill has secured an enviable reputation throughout the surrounding country. A foundry was formerly in connection with the shops, but has been discontinued.

Wagon Shop.—The manufacturing establishment of William R. Crane is situated on Russel street, south of Chicago street in Saline village. He turns out a very good quality of wagons, cutters and carriages, and also has in connection a shop where general repairing is done and satisfaction guaranteed.

RELIGIOUS.

A settlement is no sooner made in a new country than the minister of the gospel of Christ makes his appearance, proclaiming the gospel of the Son of God. He waits not for palatial meeting-houses, but is content to break the bread of life in log school-houses, barns, or in the hospitable cabin of the hardy pioneer. The settlement in and around the village of Saline was no exception to the general rule. The Methodist circuit-rider, the Baptist and Presbyterian missionaries, were early in the field, and the invitation was given to all to "partake of the waters of life freely."

The First Baptist Church of Saline, Mich., was organized in 1831, in the house of Deacon Jesse Stephens, who, with John Smith, were at that time ordained the first deacons of the Church. Rev. Thomas Bodley, of Saline, assisted by Rev. Mr. Lamb, of Plymouth, were present. Mr. Bodley became the first pastor. The constituent members of the Church were: Rev. Thomas Bodley and wife, Deacon Jesse Stephens and wife, Deacon John Smith, Lorin Edmonds and Anna Ford—seven members in all. It has a history 49 years old. During this time 17 pastors have served the Church, viz.: Thomas Bodley, J. S. Goodman, J. Mitchell, Mr. Munger, J. O. Birdsall, J. A. Keyes, Charles Evans, I. K. Brownson, J. I. Fulton, L. Adams, J. C. Armstrong, C. E. B. Armstrong, O. D. Taylor, C. F. Nicholson, A. M. Allyn, G. M. Adams and H. M. Gallup. The 16 pastorates from the first average just three years each.

One of the most extensive revivals the Church ever experienced was during the labors of Rev. J. A. Keyes. For many months there were baptisms into the Church each month. The earlier records of the Church cannot be found, so that the history of previous revivals cannot be given. The Church has given several of its young men to the gospel ministry, viz.: P. Van Winkle, Geo. H. Hickox, and Jesse Boyden. The Church has held a willing, helping hand to all the benevolent work of the day—home missions foreign missions, domestic missions, Bible cause, and Publication Society. It has had its anti-slavery trials, and its war against intemperance, early placing on its records its strong opposition to all forms of this gigantic evil.

The present house of worship was built in 1837, a noble monument of the patience, faith and hope of that period.

The foregoing account we have from Rev. H. M. Gallup.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,

as will be seen by the following certificate, was organized in Newark, Wayne Co.:

The following persons, members of the Presbyterian Church at Newark, Wayne Co., N. Y., are about to leave this part of the country and settle in Michigan: Peter Cook, Jacob Cook, Rachel Cook, Eve Cook, Abraham Cook, Betsy Cook, David Hathaway, Phoebe Hathaway, Ira Hathaway, John Kanouse, jr., Sally Ann Hathaway, Nelly Kanouse. They were dismissed from said Church on the 22d day of May, 1831, and were organized into a Church at Newark aforesaid, on said 22d day of May.

THEODORE PARTRIDGE,

Clerk of the Session of the Church at Newark.

The members of this Church left Newark with their families on the 23d of May, 1831, and landed at Detroit, Mich., on the 29th of the same month, all in health. A portion of the Church remained in Detroit two weeks; the others proceeded westward to the town of Saline, where they made a purchase of lands, and where in the good providence of God, all the colony settled together. On the 18th day of July, 1831, the Church assembled together and determined to take the name of the Presbyterian Church of Saline, and proceed to act as a Church in this place. Rev. Reuben Sears was present at this meeting and remained with the Church five Sabbaths as stated supply. David Hathaway, Jacob Cook and Peter Cook were chosen elders before leaving New York. At nearly every communion season for some time following, additions were made to the Church. Meetings were held in private houses, school-houses, and in the meeting houses of other denominations until 1842, when a church edifice was erected, where the congregation have since met for worship. The Church has enjoyed the ministerial services of Rev. Mr. Wells, Bowton, Russell Whiting, Calvin Clark, A. D. Dunlap, Mr. Taylor, and doubtless others, as supplies, or occasional ministers, and of Rev. J. G. Kanouse, 12 years; E. P. Marvin, 2 years; Robert Laird, 3 years; L. J. Root, 2 years; Benjamin Franklin, 8 years; J. A. Marshall, 4 years; F. K. Adams, 2 years; Nathan B. Knapp, 3 years; Benjamin Parsons, 3 years; David L. Murray, 2 years; George C. Bush, since 1879, as pastors.

Methodist Episcopal.—The Church was organized by Rev. J. F. Davidson, who was the preacher in charge of Tecumseh circuit, the Rev. Thomas Wiley, his colleague. Rev. E. H. Pilcher, at the earnest request of the wife of Mr. Ansyl Ford had preached once or twice; he was entreated to make an appointment, but he left the charge about this time, and was succeeded by the above ministers. The date of the formation of the class or society was Feb. 12, 1833. It consisted of Mrs. Ansyl Ford. By recognition she had joined the Baptist Church, and they refused to give her a letter, and two men who had letters,—one who upon Bro. Davidson's talking with him requested to be dropped, and Conrad Dubois, who soon after left the country, leaving this good woman alone. Her husband was converted at a quarterly meeting held at Tecumseh, March 10, 1833, and he joined with several others at that time. Father Joseph Bangs held a two-days' meeting in the Union District, at which there were a number of conversions, among whom was James Irvine, who was appointed the leader. A class was organized in Saline village by Rev. Bradford Frazer in the latter part of 1833 or early in 1834. A Mr. Burd was its leader, who was a cabinet-maker.

In the latter part of this year Mr. Ansyl Ford purchased a small building of a Major Keits, which he had erected for an Episcopal church, paying for the lot and building $400. A board of trustees was organized, comprising Ansyl Ford, Henry A. Francisco, Allan Burnham, John P. Marvin, Salmon S. Haight, David I. Gilbert and Samuel Kellogg. A lot was secured from O. Risdon, Esq., who generously had promised a lot to any religious society who should build a house of worship. This gave the society a pleasant location.

The first death in the society was that of Harriet Newell Mills, wife of Russell Mills, March 19, 1835, at the age of 19 years and 10 months. She was a sister of A. D. Sumner, and was said to be a very estimable young lady. In the summer following two of the members, Allan Burnham and Denis Kelly, were killed by lightning and their bodies burned up in the building.

In the summer of 1839 a house was purchased for a parsonage, for $300, from Mr. McBane, who was leaving for the village.

Revs. Thomas H. Jacokes and Jeremy Boyington, of the Michigan Conference, and A. J. Richards, of the Detroit Conference, were all recommended from the quarterly conference of Saline.

The following have served this Church as pastor: W. M. Sullivan, 1836; L. Smith, 1836; Richard Lawrence, 1837; Lewis Smith, 1837; Arthur B. Elliott 1838; Lorenzo Davis, 1838; George Bradley, 1839; Urias Hoyt, 1839; George Bradley, 1840; Alanson Fleming, 1840; Z. C. Brown, 1841; Robert Triggs, 1841; Z. C. Brown, 1842; William Sprague, 1843; Jonathan Hudson, 1844; Harvey Vanarden, 1845; George Taylor, 1846; William P. Judd, 1847; M. W. Stambaugh, 1849; W. E. Bigelow, 1850; J. S. Swart, 1852; Joseph Jennings, 1853-4; Robert Bird, 1855; Orin Whitmore, 1858; J. F. Davidson, 1860; John Levington, 1862; F. W. Warren, 1864; M. Hickey, 1867; G. W. Lowe, 1868; Jacob Horton, 1871; W. J. Campbell, 1873; O. Whitmore, 1876; D. R. Shier, 1878.

Lutheran.—Rev. Mr. Wolf organized this parish in 1865, and held regular services here for three years, the services being held a portion of the time in the Baptist church. Mr. Wolf was succeeded by Rev. J. Dœfler, in 1868. In 1871, a brick edifice was erected at a cost of $5,600. It is capable of seating about 350 persons. Mr. Dœfler was succeeded by Rev. Frederick Mueller, who served until succeeded by the present pastor, Rev. K. Lederer, in January, 1878. At present there are about 50 families in the parish and the Church is in good working order.

HOTELS.

In the early day the sight of a public inn, as he traveled slowly along his way, was a blessed sight to the weary traveler. In the vicinity of Saline, in 1826, two public houses were erected, of which mention has already been made. The next was that of Orange Risdon in the village, opened in 1829, and run by him for several years. Other hotels have since followed, among them were, first, the American House.—This house was erected in 1833, by Smith Lapham, well known to all old settlers, and run by him for a time and then sold to Eben Sprague. From Mr. Sprague the house passed into the hands of Samuel Tripp, who, in 1853, disposed of it to John Kanouse, who ran it until the fall of 1879, a period of 26 years, when it was closed. At this house the greater number of town elections have been held since the organization of the town. The building is a two-story frame 60x55 feet. If the walls of this old house could speak what tales they could tell.

Saline Exchange.—This is another of the old and old-fashioned public inns, being erected in 1834, by Daniel D. Wallace. It has had in nearly half a century an eventuous career, and been controlled by a number whose names are well known to every visitor to this beautiful village, among whom were A. H. Goodrich, Charles Wallace, Joseph Bickford, James M. French, James Humphrey, J. M. Cutler, Henry Miller, Alfred Miller, Benj. Woodard, Anson Harman, John Warner.

Goodrich House.—This is a new house, kept by an old landlord, who ran the "Exchange" for a number of years—A. H. Goodrich. The house was erected and used for some years by D. S. Haywood as a private dwelling, but being among the business houses of the village, it was thought best to change it into a hotel. It is well furnished, and is a welcome house to the traveler.

RAILROAD.

The Detroit, Hillsdale & Southwestern railroad was completed to this place in 1870. George W. Hall was the first station and express agent, and has held the position to the present time. The road has been of great convenience to the citizens of the village, and of all the country tributary. It has opened up a market for the productions of the country, enabling farmers and others to realize handsomely on many of their investments. The principal shipments from this station are grain and live stock. In 1876 there were 5,000 barrels of apples shipped. The average shipments per year are, of wheat, 500 car loads; oats, 40. The receipts for merchandise and other articles of traffic received here amount to $10,000 annually. Richard Tuttle is the present telegraph operator at this station.

WOOL.

Among the products of this section which find here a good and steady market, is that of wool, there being from 100,000 to 125,000 pounds annually shipped from this point. This wool brings an average of 35 cents per pound, which is quite an item among the receipts of the farms.

INCORPORATIONS.

At a meeting of the Board of Supervisors for the county of Washtenaw, at their annual session held in the city of Ann Arbor on the 18th day of October, 1866, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the territory known as the northeast quarter, and the north half of the southeast quarter, and all that part of the northwest quarter lying east of Saline river, of sec. 1, township 4 south of range 5 east in the State of Michigan, be, and the same is, hereby declared an incorporated village by the name of the village of Saline; and that Joslin Forbes, Charles H. Wallace and E. B. Clark be, and they are, hereby appointed inspectors of an election to be held at the American Hotel in the village of Saline, on Tuesday, the 27th day of November, A. D. 1866, the said election being the first to be held under this act.

E. B. BOND,
Clerk of Board.

By virtue of the foregoing order in incorporating the village, an election was held on Monday, December 10, 1866, for village officers, the result of which is given upon another page of this work.

The first meeting of the Board of Trustees was held December 17, 1866. J. F. Draper, George Sherman and J. F. Seeley were appointed a committee on organization, and H. J. Miller, William Rheinfrank and S. D. Van Duzar a committee on by-laws, after which the meeting adjourned until Monday, December 24th, at which time the board again assembled and acted upon the reports of the committees.

Officers were elected annually until 1873, when three of the trustees were elected for two years, and three for one year, since which time three are elected each year to serve for two years. The following names comprise the elective officers from 1866 to 1880, inclusive:

SCHOOLS.

The first school within the corporate limits of the village was in 1830. The old system of ungraded schools was in vogue till 1865, when the present graded system was adopted. It has been highly satisfactory generally to the citizens. The following named have served as teachers in the graded schools: 1865--D. F. Boughton, Principal; Grace Maltman, Miss M. D. Henry. 1866--D. F. Boughton, Principal; Miss Alice E. Barnes, Miss Emily R. Kerr. 1867--Albert Hardy, Principal, fall term, S. B. Ormsby, winter term; Emily R. Kerr. 1868--S. B. The Union School building was erected in 1868, at a cost of $25,000. It is a three-story building, with basement, has five school-rooms, and one room each for chapel, literary, museum, laboratory, drawing, philosophical and dining.

SOCIETIES.

There are three benevolent societies in the village—Masonic, Odd Fellows, and Knights of Honor.

Saline Lodge No. 133, A. F. & A. M.—This lodge was organized March 21, 1861, with the following as its first officers and charter members: Everett B. Clark, W. M.; T. W. Lee, S. W.; A. H. Risdon, J. W.; E. D. Wallace, Sec.; D. Kellogg, Treas.; A. Miller, S. D.; G. M. Brown, J. D.; J. A. Rosabeck, Tyler. The lodge has had a steady growth, and now has a membership of 65, with the following named officers: J. McKinnon, Jr., W. M.; E. R. Aldrich, S. W.; D. P. McLachlan, J. W.; A. J. Warren, Sec.; C. J. Sturm, Treas.; G. W. Hall, S. D.; L. M. Thorn, J. D.; C. N. How, Tyler.

Saline Lodge, No. 272, I. O. O. F., was organized Jan. 20, 1876, with the following named charter members, who were elected to the office specified: J. G. Schairer, N. G.; William Lamb, V. G.; N. A. Waugh, R. Sec.; John Easterly, Per. Sec.; John Fowler, Treas.; M. E. Easterly, Warden; A. C. Cole, I. G.; Oscar Fulker-son, O. G. The membership of the lodge is 13. Schairer, Warden, Oscar Fulker-son, O. G.; John Sewalm, I. G.

Knights of Honor, No. 688, was organized April 10, 1877, by Daniel Thompson, of Ypsilanti, with ten charter members. It now numbers 30, with the following officers: A. Miller, P. D.; George W. Hall, D.; George H. Cobb, Vice D.; B. P. Davenport, Ass't D.; G. B. Mason, F. R.; O. L. Robinson, R.; William Smith, G.; William Schaffer, Guardian; John McKennon, S.; Jacob Sturnn, C.; Charles Burkhart.

POSTOFFICE.

The postoffice was established in 1830, with Orange Risdon, as postmaster. Mr. Risdon served until 1840, being succeeded in turn by the following named: E. S. Northrup, Dr. E. Hall, Mial Mason, A. H. Risdon and G. B. Mason. It was made a money order office July 31, 1871 the first order being drawn by Joseph A. Humphrey in favor of Solon McElroy, of Detroit, for $19.07. For the year 1878 there were 1,347 orders drawn for $21,325.29.

CHOLERA.

Among the impressions received by the early settlers, none could be more lasting than the dread scourge of cholera that visited the village and vicinity in 1834. A number were attacked, seven of whom died with the disease—Stephen and Ashfield Stowe being well remembered cases.

BANK.

A flourishing village like Saline, without its bank experience, would be like the play of Hamlet with Hamlet omitted. During the days of the wild-cat currency, in 1836, Abel Goddard & Co., started here a bank of issue, and nearly the whole community conceived the idea they were to grow suddenly rich. It ran about two years and suddenly collapsed like hundreds of others throughout the West. A bill of this bank is yet possessed by the postmaster of Saline. It is signed by S. Finch, President, and W. Cunnutt, Cashier.

PERSONAL SKETCHES.

In the following pages are given the biographical sketches of pioneer and leading citizens of the township. This very important section of the work has been fully treated; so that the history of Saline may be said to be complete in every respect.

Harvey Bennett, Saline, was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., Nov. 13, 1825. His parents, Peleg and Sarah (Finch) Bennett, natives of Columbia Co., N. Y., came to this county in May, 1835, settling in Saline township, where Harvey was reared to manhood. His education training was obtained in the "frontier school-houses" of that time. Mr Bennett, sr., died Dec. 14, 1861, at the age of 81 years, 11 months, and his companion through life followed him on March 29, 1868. The subject of this sketch was married on Christmas, in 1853, to Mary C. Riggs, born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., July 25, 1833, and daughter of Eli and Mary Riggs, natives of Herkimer Co., N. Y. In her early life her parents removed to Orleans Co., N. Y., where they lived till 1831, and then came to this county. To this union one child was given—Celia E., born Sept. 2, 1855, and in Feb., 1875, she married Silas Briggs, and they now reside in Tuscola Co., Mich. Mr. Bennett and wife are members of the M. E. Church. Politically Mr. Bennett is a Republican, and served that party as J. P. for 4 years. He owns 20 acres of land in Saline village, valued at $200 per acre, and also 125 acres in sec. 12. His grandfather, Dobson Bennett, was a Revolutionary soldier under Gen. Washington, and endured with the Continental army the hardships of Valley Forge, and participated in the battle of White Plains.

William W. Biddle, farmer, Saline tp., was born in Northumberland county, Pa., Jan. 24, 1840, and is the son of Israel (deceased) and Mary Biddle, natives of Pennsylvania. When two years of age his parents removed to this county, and settled on sec. 32, Saline tp. Here William was reared to manhood, and educated in the district schools. Dec. 29, 1875, he married Sarah L. Camburn, born in Saline tp., June 20, 1851. To this alliance 2 children have been sent—Margaret A., born Dec. 18, 1876, and Charles O., born July 31, 1879. Mrs. Biddle's father was born in 1816. His mother is still living on the old homestead, aged 66. Mr. B. owns a farm on sec. 32.

Charles C. Bliss (deceased) was born May 22, 1826, and was the son of John V. and Melissa Bliss, old pioneers of this county. Mr. B. passed his early youth and manhood on a farm, and in winter attended the public schools to receive the education needful to the hard-handed farmer boy. He was married Feb. 27, 1856, to Marietta Smith, born in this county, Oct. 14, 1828, and daughter of James M. and Elizabeth Smith, natives of Orange and Delaware counties, N. Y. They emigrated West and settled in this county in 1835, where the former died Oct. 2, 1853. Three children were sent to make glad the hearts of this happy couple—Otto, Melvin J. and Lula. Mr. Bliss had been a faithful member of the Baptist Church at Saline for 22 years, and on March 7, 1880, he was called to partake of that reward prepared for those who have walked in "the straight and narrow path," and have borne the cross in a way befitting the Christian man or woman. His father was a soldier in the war of 1812, and also assisted in building the Schuyler Mills, of Saline. Mr. B.'s mother was born in Delaware county, N. Y., Feb. 6, 1816, and is still living.

Augustus Bond, farmer, was born in Berkshire Co., Mass., March 7, 1821. His parents were Samuel and Sarah Bond. The former was born in Worcester, Mass., April, 1784, and died Dec. 11, 1859. The latter was a native of the same county, born in 1783, and died Sept. 3, 1843. They removed to Washtenaw Co. in Nov., 1836. This country was then almost a forest, and the subject of this sketch was reared amid the wilds of this dense and scarcely habitable region. He received only a limited education, and this in an old log school-house, with slab benches for seats, and in the evenings at home, before a huge fire-place. He afterward taught school for a number of years in Saline tp. He was married Dec. 22, 1860, to Hattie M. Taylor, and two children were born to them—Leila and Alban T. Mrs. B. is a daughter of Elbridge G. and Nancy Taylor, and was born in Erie Co., N. Y., Jan. 31, 1832. Mr. Bond's grandfather was a teamster in the Revolutionary war. Mr. B. has filled several local offices, and represented Saline tp. as Supervisor for 4 years, and was elected Justice of the Peace, but was never qualified. Both husband and wife are faithful members of the Presbyterian Church of Saline, and he is a member of the Pioneer Society and a Republican. A. K. Clark (deceased) was born in Jersey City, N. J., Nov. 1, 1810, and moved to Tyre, Seneca Co., N. Y., at the age of six years. His advantages for obtaining an education were very limited. He was obliged to labor to aid in supporting the family during the summers, and to support himself while at school winters by doing chores wherever he could find such opportunities. His father's poor health and a large family of 10 to provide for made it necessary for him to render all assistance possible for their support. Thus the avails of his labor were confined to his father's home till he was 18 years of age, when he was "bound out" as an apprentice to learn the carpenter and joiner's trade. Twenty-five dollars a year were given him for his services. At the close of three years' apprenticeship, he had good clothing and a considerable sum of money. This he earned by working over time, making chests, cupboards, etc., of evenings and odd hours. These found a ready sale, as such articles were seldom found. His father at this time was over 60 years of age, and poor in health, as well as in this world's goods, and Mr. Clark felt it to be his duty to provide a home for his parents in their declining years, that they might spend their last days in comfort and peace, and this he did with his first earnings. He then turned his attention to obtaining a competency for himself, and with that object in view came West. On his first trip he located land near Lake Michigan and worked at his trade in what are now the cities of Grand Rapids and Kalamazoo. He then returned to Seneca Co., N. Y., his home, and married Martha Stevenson, who still survives, Nov. 9, 1836, and soon after returned to Michigan and purchased 120 acres which forms a part of the homestead. He made a profession of religion in his early youth, and united with the Presbyterian Church in Saline, June 14, 1840. The same day his wife connected herself with that society. He always had in view one distinct and well-defined object, that of honesty, steadily and with a continuity of purpose seldom equaled, to live in the fear of God and to obtain an honorable competency for himself and family. All his property he had acquired was wholly the result of his labor and industry. On his arrival in Saline in the spring of 1837 he was very destitute of many things that would help a needy pioneer. There being no cellar under his house, was obliged to dig it nights, while during the day he was engaged hard at work to support his family. He cleared much of his land by the light of the moon and from burning brush and log heaps. It was a very common thing for him to travel six or eight miles to do a day's work at his trade. In precept and example he ever strove to teach his children to be industrious, true and honest and faithful to every trust. He bequeathed to them an inheritance better than silver or gold, that of a good name and an unblemished character. Mr. Clark was elected to the State Legislature in the fall of 1874; performed the duties of his office with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He has honorably filled other offices of trust and responsibility. In him the poor found a ready and ardent friend and helper. He was an advocate and supporter of all public enterprise. His life closed Dec. 21, 1879, with a triumphant death. Thus passed one of Saline's early and most respected pioneers.

Clark, of the firm of Clark Bros., hardware merchants, Saline, was born in Saline tp., July 13, 1843, and is a son of Albert R. and Martha Clark, the former a native of New Jersey, and the latter of Seneca county, N. Y. Albert M. was reared on a farm, and received a good education in the Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti schools. For eight years he was Superintendent of the Saline schools. He followed farming till July, 1868, when he received a sun-stroke which so impaired his health as to make it necessary for him to follow some other vocation. He opened a drug and grocery store in Saline, continuing in that business for three years. He then opened a hardware store, and in 1879 he received his brother into partnership, and the firm has since been Clark Bros. He also deals extensively in grain, owning the grain elevator in that village. Soon after leaving school Mr. Clark took a tour through the Western States, but subsequently returned to Washtenaw county, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until July, 1879, when he entered into business with his brother, Albert M. Clark, where he has since continued. He was married Oct. 8, 1873, to Clara E. Eddy, who was born near Ann Arbor May 21, 1852, and daughter of Orlando and Martha Eddy. Mrs. Clark died Oct. 17, 1878, and on Sept. 30, 1880, Mr. C. was married again to Jennie E. Rouse, who was born at Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 22, 1856, and daughter of Dr. William H. and Emily A. Her last days were like the first, spent in a quiet and peaceful home, and she sank sweetly and calmly to rest, trusting that in the "last day" she would be called to partake of the joys of Heaven—the blissful reward for the many trials and temptations she had overcome in the nearly 100 years passed upon this earth. After enduring the perilous life of a sea-captain for five years, he quit the sailor's life and became a "landsman." He emigrated to Washtenaw Co., and engaged as a clerk in the drug store of Keats & Ludden, where he remained one year. He then bought Ludden's interest in the business, and a year after the other half of the stock, and received into partnership S. P. Griswold. In 1836 he engaged in the hotel business, and not long after went to Chicago, Ill., remaining there one year, and from that time till 1861 he was in business in the States of Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and North Carolina. When Ft. Sumter was fired upon by the rebels, he was at Wilmington, N. C., and immediately came North again. He kept a hotel in Michigan City for three years; the Follet House at Ypsilanti for one year; traveled eight years for Bachelder & Co., marble dealers of Ypsilanti, and in May, 1879, he opened his present hotel in Saline, and enjoys a good trade. He was married Sept. 2, 1834, to Julia A. Stow, born in New York, Oct. 14, 1813. They were blessed with two children, one of whom is living—Charlotte F., wife of Joseph H. Neff, of Wilmington, N. C. Two children were born to them—Della J. and Nellie B., but the younger died Aug. 30, 1879, at the tender age of 18 years. Mr. Goodrich was Township Treasurer 10 years; Clerk and Supervisor one year each; Justice of the Peace for four years. His father died of cholera in 1831, being on his way from this county to Detroit. He formerly owned a vessel, and during the war of 1812 was frequently captured.

David Gordon (deceased) was born in Scotland, March 9, 1805. He emigrated to America in 1833, and remained in New York city, where he was engaged in contracting, and other business, for about 7 years. From New York he went to Hartford, Conn., and obtained the contract of building the Hartford bridge. On Nov. 16, 1843, he married Sally A. Cole, born in Allegany Co., N. Y., April 7, 1821, and daughter of Garrett and Sarah (Wrener) Cole, the former of which was a soldier in the war of 1812. This union was blessed with the birth of 6 children, 4 of whom are living—William, John, David and Ellen, wife of James Collins. In 1846 Mr. Gordon emigrated to this county, purchased a tract of land, and followed farming as a business till his death, which occurred Nov. 6, 1870, he being 65 years old at the time. He left a wife and 4 children and a large circle of friends and neighbors to mourn his loss. He was a good man and well respected by all with whom he was acquainted.

John F. Graf, Saline, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, March 6, 1833. His parents were John G. and Margaret Graf. Mr. G. was reared in his native land, and attended its public schools, where he received the education he now possesses. In 1854, he emigrated to America, and came West, till he saw Washtenaw county. This fair spot pleased him, and he purchased a farm; by subsequent purchases this farm has been increased to 305 acres. May 1, 1860, he married Dolly Grass, and this union has been blessed with 6 children, 4 of whom are living—Charles F., George A., William H. and Lydia. Mr. G. is a member of the German Lutheran Church, at Saline, and in politics is a firm believer in the principles adopted by the Democratic party.

Wm. Melville Gregory, whose portrait we present on page 401, is one of the pioneers of Saline township. Of the original settlers and purchasers of Government land very few remain. In some of the towns of our county probably not one can be found. He was born March 23, 1804, the time being memorable in history for one of the greatest snow-storms of modern days. Upon the farm now in possession of Hon. Albert G. Fox, in the tp. of Sand Lake, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., his father, Dr. Uriah M. Gregory, had settled in the year 1800, only ten miles from the city of Albany, where the Low Dutch from Holland had pitched their tents nearly 200 years before. The rugged pine-clad hills remained for New England enterprise to occupy. Dr. Gregory, although a practicing physician, of Connecticut birth and training, was a thorough farmer, as the heavy stone walls and enormous fences built of the stumps of pine trees, could testify. His mother, Lucretia, nee Ely, was also of Connecticut descent; the place of her birth was Westbrook, near the mouth of the Connecticut river, where her father, Col. John Ely, was for a long time surgeon and physician. As a commanding officer in the Revolutionary army, Col. Ely was in active correspondence with Gen. Washington. His life and service to his country, the well-known writer, Samuel G. Goodrich, also one of his grandsons, in his "Recollections of a Life-time," has presented to the world. In the early years of this century the schools of New England, and especially of New York State, were not noted for the extent of their teaching.

Mr. Gregory, the subject of this sketch, was the middle one of seven sons. In his thirteenth year his common-school education was considered as complete, he having mastered Willett's Geography, Murray's small Grammar, and Daboll's Arithmetic as far as the rule of square root. A thorough acquaintance with the Latin language was procured under private instruction as it could be found. In the fall of 1819, in his seventeenth year, he entered Lenox Academy, in Massachusetts, and several months' too close application to the Greek language nearly ruined his sight and led him back to agriculture as his occupation. His sight had been so enfeebled that he could not bear the light of the snow. One winter was passed in a dark room, the next in the South on the James river in Virginia, at Surrey Court-House, and the next in New York city, under the care of the noted oculist, Dr. Samuel Rodgers. The use of leeches was the doctor's only prescription. Only those from Portuguese waters were used, and the supply of these was soon exhausted. Necessity, the mother of invention, led him to contrive an artificial leech of glass. Its weekly use for one year fully restored his sight, which now, to the 78th year of his life, can master the finest print without the aid of glasses. This is a favor for which he would entertain the deepest and sincerest gratitude.

As a School Inspector for many years, and as a Supervisor for several years, he had all the opportunities for public service he desired or could well improve. Forty-three years he has been permitted to hold the office of Ruling Elder in one Church. When protesting of late years against a re-election, the consoling reply has been made, "The Church does not expect you are going to live long." To them he is grateful; to God he would be more so; to them for the exhibition of their patient confidence; to God for the privilege of serving Him and having a name and dwelling with his people.

Dr. Daniel Hall, Saline, was born in Perry Co., Penn., Jan. 11, 1825. His parents, John and Rebecca (Kohler) Hall, were natives of Berks Co., Penn. The Dr. was raised on a farm and educated in the common school of his native State, but in 1850 he commenced the study of medicine under Dr. George L. Potter, of Bellefonte Center, Pa. He remained here until Oct., 1852, when he came to Ann

After finishing his education he was appointed an Assistant Professor in Albion College, remaining there two years. He is now engaged in business in Washington, D. C. Y., in 1829, and remained with him three years. He then entered the Fairfield Medical College, and graduated Feb. 27, 1832. Wishing to obtain as much knowledge about his profession as possible, he attended the Geneva College of Medicine, and in 1865-'6 took a course of lectures in the medical department of Michigan University, graduating March 28, 1866. From 1832 to 1837, he practiced at Winfield, N. Y.; from 1837 to 1844, at Brighton; thence to Cohocton, and from the latter place to Rockford, Ills., where he remained till 1857, when he removed to Saline, and has since resided there, engaged in the practice of his profession. Y., and attended the Lima and Rochester seminaries, where he graduated in the commercial course. He was in the employ of the Erie R. R., on the Buffalo division, for three years. At the expiration of this time he went to Rockford, Ills., where he lived two years. From Rockford he came to Saline and was engaged in the hardware business 12 years. He then accepted a position as bookkeeper for Wm. H. Davenport, which he filled for two years. After a term of instruction in telegraphy, he obtained the agency for the above named road, at Saline, which position he still occupies. He was married Sept. 4, 1855, to Ruth A. Andrews, born in Canadaville, N. Y., Aug. 7, 1833, and daughter of Dr. Philo and Clarissa Andrews, natives of Vermont. Of their 4 children, 2 are living—Philo E., who married Frances English, and bookkeeper of Park, Davis & Co., of Detroit, and Cynthia. Mr. Hall and wife are members of the M. E. Church. He is connected with the Knights of Honor, and in politics votes with the Democratic party.

Henry A. Hammond was born in Essex Co., N. Y., July 28, 1838. His parents were Daniel and Mary Hammond, who came to this county in October, 1830. When they arrived $500 was all the money they had, and he at once entered 240 acres of land, on sections 24, 25, and 26. He built a log house and moved into it. In 1834 he sold 80 acres of his original entry, and purchased 120 acres of sec. 26. When he had got fairly started in his adopted county, in June, 1840, his house took fire and burned down, consuming all his household property, and leaving him entirely without anything to live in, or clothing to wear. His neighbors kindly aided him, and another house soon sheltered his family. Again, as he was beginning to prosper, he was seized with sickness, and May 14, 1847, passed away, being 53 years old at the time. He had formerly worked in the mercantile trade near Lake Champlain, N. Y., operating an extensive clothing establishment, but a couple of freshets swept away all his possessions, and he was forced to come West to retrieve his shattered fortune. Mr. Hammond, the subject of this sketch, was raised on his father's farm in this county, and received but a limited education in the common schools. Jan. 15, 1856, he married Eliza M. Boyden, born in this county, Dec. 6, 1834, and daughter of Lanson S. and Mary (Hutchinson) Boyden. Of the 6 children born to them, only 4 are living—Mary B., wife of Rev. James Lewis, of Rochester, N. Y.; George H., Ralph L., and Burt. Irvin and Hettie are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. H. are members of the Baptist Church. He owns a farm of 240 acres on sections 24 and 26, and is a Democrat. His paternal grandfather served in the Revolutionary war.

He came to this county in 1830, and entered 80 acres of land, which, after improving somewhat, he sold and procured the old homestead where his widow now resides. He was united in marriage Jan. 2, 1839, to Mary Valentine, born in Ontario Co., N. Y., April 1, 1804, and daughter of Mathias and Sarah Valentine. The result of this union was the birth of 6 children, 4 of whom are living—Sarah M., wife of Henry Griswold, of Hillsdale Co., Mich.; Ruana E., wife of Lyman Robinson; Mary A.; Rachel C., wife of Christian Cook. George R. and Georgiana are deceased. Mr. H. followed the occupation of farming till his death, which occurred Nov. 16, 1875, he being 73 years old at the time. He was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, and has gone to his reward. He assisted in the organization of Saline tp., and first represented the new tp. in the County Board of Supervisors. This position he satisfactorily filled for 14 years. In the death of this good man, the family lost a kind father and affectionate husband, the tp. a good neighbor and counselor, and the county an old pioneer and an enterprising citizen. Mr. H.'s father served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war under the famous General Putnam, or "Old Put," as he was generally known, enlisting at the youthful age of 18. Mrs. Hammond's father was an officer in the same war under General George Washington, and died in October, 1855, at the age of 81, and his wife in 1868, when she had nearly completed her fourscore and ten years on this earth.

Heavy Artillery, and won brilliant laurels fighting for "Uncle Sam." Mrs. H.'s father died Jan. 14, 1873, aged 61. The subject of this sketch owns a good farm of 95 acres in sections 35 and 35. He then came to Ypsilanti and worked for Beech & Co., till 1876, when he removed to Saline. He married Nov. 7, 1847, Sabrina Tutton, and of the 6 children born to them, 3 are now living—Alice A., wife of John L. Hickson, of Jackson, Mich.; Josephine E., teacher in the grammar department, Union school, Saline, and Harry, the inventor of an improved car coupler, mention of which is made in another portion of this volume. Mrs. Heller is a daughter of George and Betsey Tutton, and was born in England, July 18, 1826. Both are members in good standing of the M. E. Church of Saline.

J. G. Hoyt, proprietor of the York flouring mills, was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., May 16, 1822, and is a son of Timothy and Dorothea (Humpsted) Hoyt, natives of Ridgefield, Conn. J. G. passed his early life on a farm, receiving his education in the public schools. In 1845, he entered a grist-mill, in Meriden, Conn., as miller, which position he held for eight years. He then farmed for five years, but believing he could do better at his trade, in 1860 he came to Lyons, Mich., and engaged in milling till 1875, when he removed to Saline, and purchased the York mills. These mills, in connection with a stove factory, he has operated since. July 25, 1845, he married Isadore S. Van Will, born in New York, Feb. 8, 1826, and daughter of Henry and Lydia Van Will, natives of Albany Co., N. Y. They have 4 children—George G., married to Elizabeth A. Gerald, now living in Gratiot Co., Mich; Emily M., wife of John T. Percival, a merchant of Grand Haven, Mich.; William S., who married Jennie H. Hickmott, and Fred V. N. Both of Mr. Hoyt's grandfathers served in the Revolutionary war. Mr. Hoyt's great grandfather, on his father's side, was a boy 11 years old when Deerfield, Mass., was burned by the Indians. He was sleeping in the upper room of the house, and was awakened by the screams of the terrified inhabitants. This frightened him so that he jumped out of the window, and unnoticed, ran and hid in a corn bin, standing to the rear of the house. In this place he remained till morning, and seeing that the Indians had departed he emerged from his place of refuge, and his gaze fell on such a horrible picture of butchery and torture, inflicted by those red devils, as to make him faint. He did not know but that his own parents were lying among that unfortunate number, but not having the courage to look, he turned his face toward the nearest settlement, 40 miles distant, arriving there after a four days' march, the only one that remained of that once prosperous village, all the rest being killed or captured by the Indians. He subsequently returned to his relatives at Ridgefield, Conn., when he, with 28 others, purchased a township of land, and it is said that he gave his hat and coat for his part of the payment, having no other property. His cousin, John Hoyt, was once captured by the Indians, and they started for Canada with him, it being in the winter season. They came to the Connecticut river, which they had to cross. They gave him a pair of roughly made skates to help him along. He put them on, but would fall down every few steps. In this way he deceived the Indians, and they thought perhaps the skates were bad; so selecting a better pair, they made him put them on, but he made no better progress, still watching for a chance to escape. They would laugh at his awkward motions, and at last thinking he could get along as best he could, they started along faster, and he fell behind, but before they were aware, he was about 10 rods away, and going like a small hurricane. He skated about 10 miles, the Indians trying to catch him all the while, and came to where a small stream emptied into the river, and the channel being narrow at this point, the incoming flow of water had prevented any ice being formed. He looked back and saw the red skins not far distant, and knowing it would be certain death if re-captured, he made a brave resolve to leap across if it was possible. He went back a little way, and started forward very fast, made the leap, and landed all safe on the other bank. When his pursuers came up, they were greatly surprised, and said "Ugh! Great Spirit in him," and turned back, not caring to pursue him any further. Mr. Hoyt, the subject of this sketch, is the youngest of a family of 8 children, all of which, except 1, have reached three-score years. Mr. H. and his entire family are members of the Presbyterian Church. In politics, he is a Republican. His youngest son, Fred V. N., is taking a theological course in Yale College.

There in the Mohawk valley he was reared to manhood, receiving a very limited education in the public schools of that day. Mr. K.'s father was a Baptist minister, and died in Massachusetts in 1802. After Mr. King was of age, he returned to Massachusetts, the home of his birth, and with his brother Martin's assistance, erected a monument at the head of his father's grave. In a few years after his mother married John Foster, of English nativity, and soon after they moved to Canada, since which time her sons have never heard from her. In 1830 Mr. King came to this county but remained only a short time. He returned to Massachusetts, and May 31, 1831, he came again to Washtenaw county, and entered 160 acres of land on sec. 19, in Salem tp. He first moved into a small "shanty" belonging to a sugar camp, where they lived until a log cabin was built for their occupancy. The region around their home was wild, and filled with deer, bears, wolves, wild turkey and other animals that inhabit a region of this kind. Mr. King was married Oct. 10, 1823, to Margaret McGowan, and of the 13 children born to them, the greater part among the wilds of Washtenaw, 10 are living—Margaret, widow of Oscar Colvin, deceased; William, Sarah J., wife of Albert T. Mason; John V., Elizabeth, wife of Orpheus Church; George A., Michael E., David W., Helen, wife of George Bailey, and Marinda, wife of Thomas Burroughs. Mrs. King was born in Washington county, N. Y., Jan. 27, 1806. In 1874 Mr. King sold his farm and moved to Ann Arbor, and in 1879 removed to Saline, where he resides at present. For over 55 years Mr. and Mrs. King have trodden life's path way together, and beheld with their own eyes the wonderful improvements that have taken place since they first came here. They are both members of the M. E. Church, and each of them have nearly reached the three-score and ten years allotted to man and woman on this earth. They will soon lie down to their final rest to wait the great Judgment Day. He hired out as a laborer in this latter place, and worked at that until he had accumulated a sufficient sum of money to enable him to buy 40 acres of land. Starting on this farm, he worked with energy and perseverance, and before long had increased his acreage to 160, which some years ago he divided among his 4 children—Catherine, wife of H. M. Jones; William, John A. and J. P. John A., the subject of this sketch, was reared on a farm, and educated in the public schools. The subject of this sketch was raised on a farm and educated in the public schools of this county. When 20 years of age he came to Saline, and learned the art of making boots and shoes, subsequently opening a shop of his own, which he operated till 1868; then entered the employ of Schairer Bros., and has worked in the harness department of their shop since. John Layer, farmer, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, Feb. 12, 1838, and son of Michael and Mary Layer, the former dying in 1843. In 1846 John, with his mother and two brothers, Jacob and Gottlieb, emigrated to America. They remained some time in Buffalo, N. Y., then came to this county. The mother, with her son Gottlieb, resides in Huron county, and Jacob lives in Tuscola county. Mr. L. was married March 14, 1866, to Ricka Kulenkampdaw, born in Freedom tp., Nov. 7, 1841, and daughter of Elard and Ann Kulenkampdaw. Of their 6 children, 2 are living—Emma A., born July 9, 1873, and Sarah A., born Nov. 23, 1874. Mr. and Mrs. Layer are members of the Lutheran Church. In politics he is a Democrat. His farm is situated on sec. 7, and consists of 140 acres.

James B. Lindsley, farmer, was born in Washtenaw county Oct. 25, 1835. His parents were Samuel and Rachel Lindsley, the former born in the county of Down, Ireland, February, 1789, and the latter in the county of Antrim, Ireland, in October, 1807. The former came to this country in 1816, and stopped in New York city, and the latter followed with her parents in 1821, and settled in Livingston county, N. Y. Mr. L. was engaged in business in New York city for four years, then removed to Long Island, where he followed gardening for the same period. In 1833 he came to Michigan and entered 160 acres of land on sec. 32, and also 80 acres in Clinton tp., Lenawee county. He returned to New York and the following winter was married to Rachel Baty. In June, 1834, he again came West, bringing his young wife with him. They suffered the privation that all pioneers are subject to in a new country, but bore them with cheerful hearts and ready hands. In this wild region 4 children were born, 3 of whom are living—Sarah J., Mary A., and James B. Mr. L., sr., aided in laying out and surveying many of the roads in Saline tp., and was a prime mover in organizing school districts, and building school-houses. He died March 27, 1856, at the advanced age of 73. Mrs. L. followed him on Feb. 12, 1880, being of the same age at time of death. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, but never connected himself with any religious denomination in this country. In politics he was a Democrat, and James B. has followed in his political footsteps. He left a farm of 111 acres on secs. 31 and 32, which was the land he had entered upon first coming into the county.

William Manifold, an old pioneer of Washtenaw county, was born in York county, Pa., June 18, 1795. In May, 1834, he came to this county and located in Saline. In 1836 he entered two 80-acre pieces of land in Genesee county, but remained in Saline, where he made his home. He also entered 80 acres of land on sec. 14, in Saline tp. In 1853 he sold his farm and removed to Detroit, where he worked at the carpenter's trade till February, 1872, then returned to Saline, where he has since resided. He was married Dec. 14, 1843, to Sophia Reynolds, born in Seneca county, N. Y., May 4, 1804, and daughter of Enos Reynolds, born near Waterloo, Pa., and an early settler in the county. Mrs. M. died Dec. 14, 1872, after 29 years of wedded life. Mr. Manifold is a member of the Presbyterian Church, being at present in his 85th year. The band of pioneers who are left among the settlers of the early day are few, and the subject of this sketch deserves honorable mention in this volume. His father was a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

G. B. Mason, Postmaster, Saline, was born in Washtenaw county, Aug. 30, 1838, and is the son of Mial and Dorthy Mason, the former born Nov. 29, 1808, and a native of Massachusetts, and the latter born Dec. 25, 1796, and of New York nativity. They came to this county in 1836, and Mr. Mason clerked in a hotel for two years, and for three years kept the toll-gate on the Chicago & Detroit turnpike. He then engaged in the grocery business, and subsequently in the dry-goods trade. In 1861 he was appointed Postmaster of Saline by President Lincoln, which position he held till his death, which occurred Sept. 8, 1875, at the age of 67. His companion had preceded him, her departure taking place April 23, of the same year. The subject of this sketch was reared in Saline, and obtained his educational training in the schools of that village. He clerked in the P. O. till 1863, then for five years was engaged as clerk in a store. In 1868 he was appointed Postmaster, which position he still occupies. He is also a dealer in drugs and stationery, and carries a stock valued at $2,500. On Nov. 8, 1866, he married Anna E. Clark, born Aug. 1, 1847, and daughter of Albert R. and Martha Clark, of Saline. They have 1 child, Ralph C., born June 14, 1873.

Silas F. Mead (deceased) was born in Greenwich, Conn., March 17, 1812. In 1835 he came to this county. He was a school-teacher, but spent four years as clerk for his uncle, Silas Finch, in his store at Saline. He then rented and operated the York Mills for two years. In December, 1840, he married Harriet Risdon, and 4 children were born to them, 2 of whom are living—William D., who married Annie Hickmott, and Lewis R., husband of Blanche Durant. Both sons live in Oakland, Cal. Mary E. and Henry R. are deceased. Mrs. Mead is a daughter of Orange and Sallie (Newland) Risdon, and was born in Genesee Co., N. Y., Sept. 21, 1847. After their marriage they moved on a farm in Pittsfield tp., where they lived till 1851. In the latter year they removed to New Orleans, La., where Mr. Mead owned a shoe store till the Rebellion commenced. He then engaged in making oil-cloths for the soldiers' sacks, and continued at this till New Orleans was taken by the Union forces. He was then engaged for four years in the commissary department of that city. At the expiration of that time he returned to Washtenaw county, where he worked on his farm till his death, which occurred Sept. 9, 1877, at the age of 65. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, also connected with the Sons of Temperance. His widow survives him, and is an earnest and faithful member of the Presbyterian Church.

Dudley Miller (deceased) was born at Mendon, N. Y., July 24, 1812. His parents were Leonard and Rachel (Octrum) Miller, of German descent, and the former a native of Connecticut, the latter being born in New York. In 1824 they removed to Michigan, and the same year to a spot which now forms part of the city of Ypsilanti. They remained there one year, and then removed to the old Indian burying-ground, called the "Reserve." Here they built a double house, and used it for an inn and dwelling. Many of the pioneers seeking a home in the wilds of Michigan Territory, have found a resting-place beneath the roof of this humble tavern; and often the only pay the proprietors would receive would be the "God bless you" that came from the grateful heart of a foot-sore and weary traveler. The nearest market places were Detroit and Monroe, and several days were consumed in making a trip to either of these "frontier villages." Dudley grew up amid these surroundings, assisting his father until death claimed him in 1831, after which he cared for the family, farming the greater part of the time.

He was married October 23, 1831, to Rebecca Gillett, and the same year settled on 160 acres of land in sec. 24, Saline tp. Mrs. Miller was born at Benton, Yates Co., N. Y., July 18, 1814, and was the daughter of Joseph and Deborah (Watson) Gillett, natives of Connecticut, and of Scotch descent. Addie, born May 30, 1841, married May 30, 1876, to Lewis L. Bissell, Lakeview, Montcalm Co., Mich.; William Norton, born Oct. 22, 1847, and died April 22, 1859; Amos Jason, born March 11, 1850, married Dec. 4, 1879, to Sarah E. Bozelle, now residing on sec. 24, Saline tp.; Hattie M., born Nov. 18, 1852, and Ettie M., born July 4, 1855, married Oct. 27, 1880, to Miles A. Stoddard, Hubbardston, Ionia Co., and at present reside on sec. 24, Saline tp. Mr. Miller was a firm advocate of the "Golden Rule," and the latter part of his life was filled with noble and philanthropic deeds. He died March 27, 1877, mourned by a whole community. His widow still survives.

Charles Moore was born in Ontario county, N. Y., Sept. 17, 1821, and is a son of Washington and Susanna Moore, natives of New Hampshire. Mr. Moore was reared on a farm and educated in the common schools. In September, 1840, he came to this county, and purchased 110 acres of land in Saline tp., on sec. 25. He then returned to New York, and Sept. 26 he married Olive B. Baggerly. He returned to Michigan with his new bride, and has resided in Washtenaw county since. To this marriage 5 children were born, 3 of whom are living—Theresa S., wife of Jerome B. Hartwell, of Eaton county; Fletcher E. W., who married Mary Phillips, and Lillie D., wife of Newell Hubbard, of Milan, Mich. Heien U. and Lottie A. are deceased. Mrs. Moore was born in Ontario county, N. Y., April 20, 1824. Her parents were Everett and Sarah (Larned) Baggerly, the former a native of Maryland, born Aug. 7, 1785, and died Jan. 16, 1875, aged 90 years, and the latter a native of Connecticut, born April 11, 1794, and died May 4, 1871, at the age of 77. Mr. Moore's father was born Sept. 25, 1778, and died May 25, 1856, aged 78. Mrs. Moore departed this life April 1, 1852, aged 71. They were married Nov. 6, 1800, and 10 children were born to them, 8 of whom are living—Lorain, Jane, Lucy, Polly A., William, Betsey, James W. and Charles. Caleb and Morris are deceased. His father was a Revolutionary soldier, and saw many thrilling sights during that long and eventful conflict. An Indian once aimed a shot at his head but fortunately it struck his wrist and thereby his life was saved.

Benjamin Munroe, farmer, son of Alexander (deceased) and Huldah Munroe was born in Lodi tp., March 31, 1845. He was raised on a farm and educated in the common schools. March 5, 1872, he married Hattie Coryell, born in Seneca county, N. Y., June 21, 1849, and daughter of John and Abigail Coryell, natives of New York. He was under the instruction for one year, then studied with Dr. C. C. Kingsley, of Ypsilanti, for two years, at the end of which time he entered the medical department of Michigan University, graduating as Doctor of Medicine in March, 1868. He first commenced to practice in Deerfield, Lenawee county, and remained there about two years. From Deerfield he removed to Ann Arbor, laboring in his profession in that city till 1876, when he came to Saline, where he has since resided and engaged in his chosen profession. By close attention to business he has established a large and growing patronage.

Simon Nissley, farmer, was born in Germany, March 3, 1830, and is the son of Simon F. and Libbie Nissley, natives of Germany. In 1847 Simon emigrated with his parents to America, and came westward, settling in Bridgewater tp., this county, where his father still resides. In 1854 Mr. N. married Mary Rapp, who was born in Germany Aug. 9, 1831. Eight children have been given to this alliance—Simon, Oseo, Carrie and Polly (twins); the former married David Mandt; Daniel, Mary and Libbie (twins), and Minnie. The loving mother departed this life Nov. 17, 1879. She was a faithful and consistent member of the Bridgewater Lutheran Church. Mr. Nissley owns 144 acres of well-improved land, and has been engaged in agricultural pursuits since coming to this county, with the exception of seven years, from 1854 to 1861, when he was in the employ of the Great Western Railroad, in Canada. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, and politically is a Democrat.

Garry M. Osborn, farmer, was born in Greene Co., N. Y., Nov. 11, 1818, and son of Barrett and Nancy (Stone) Osborn, natives of Connecticut. Mr. O. was raised a "farmer's boy," and received the educational advantages the schools of that day afforded. Dec. 20, 1857, he married Emma Hartwell, born at Cobocotn, Steuben Co., N. Y., Sept. 29, 1838, daughter of Aaron and Maria Hartwell, of Connecticut. Of their 3 children, 2 are living—Lizzie M., born Oct. 18, 1857, and Minnie A., born Aug. 7, 1867, wife of John Fowler, of Eaton Co. Ethel (deceased) was born May 29, 1867; died May 11, 1870. Mr. O. came to Monroe Co. in 1840, and bought land in Exeter tp., where he lived six years. He then went to Mooreville, and kept a hotel a short time, and from there came to Saline tp., where he still resides, engaged in farming a piece of land comprising 167 acres. Mr. Osborn's grandfather served as a teamster in the Revolutionary war. Miss Jennie Wilkinson, more commonly known as the "Universal Friend," was Mrs. Osborn's great aunt.

George Osborn, farmer, was born in Greene Co., N. Y., Oct. 29, 1825, and is the son of Barrett and Nancy Osborn, natives of Connecticut. Mr. O. passed his early life working on his father's farm in Greene Co., and received a limited education in the public schools. He came to this county in September, 1840, and soon after purchased land on sec. 26, Salinetp., erected a house thereon, and moved in. He was married May 4, 1854, to Nancy Robison, a native of Lenawee Co., Mich., where she was born May 4, 1835, daughter of Samuel and Nancy Robison. This union was blessed with the birth of 2 children—Jennie A. and Barrett. Mrs. O. is a member in good standing of the Baptist Church at Mooreville. Politically Mr. O. is a Republican. His father died in 1862, aged 75, and his mother in October, same year, at the ripe old age of 83.

Chester Parsons, retired farmer, was born at Sandisfield, Berkshire Co., Mass., Dec. 1, 1799. His parents, John and Mary Parsons, removed to Greene Co., N. Y., in the spring of 1802, where the former died in 1813, but the latter resided there till 1826. Mr. P. lived at home till he was 19, then learned the tanner's trade. In 1820 he commenced active life for himself, working at $8 per month. In 1823 he accepted a position as fireman in "Beam House," of John Bray, and on Nov. 26 of the next year was united in marriage to Deborah B. Maben, daughter of Robert and Electa Maben, the former born July 5, 1781, and the latter Dec. 18, 1783. Mrs. P., was born Sept. 12, 1805. To this union 7 children were born, of whom 1 son and 2 daughters remain to cheer their home—Mary, wife of William Sanford; Melissa, wife of Charles Fellows, and Alfred, married to Percia Tallmage. In May, 1826, he emigrated to this county, and entered 80 acres of land, one and a quarter miles south of Saline village, which then consisted of two log houses, and was second farm south of the "Salt Spring Reserve." He was assisted by a resident friend in locating his land, and fearing some one might accidentally get the start of him, he, in company with his brother Orrin, started one evening, an hour before sunset, for Monroe, 30 miles distant, through a dense wilderness, with not a single house on the way. They plodded along an old Indian trail, it being so dark they had to feel their way with their hands. By morning they had accomplished 20 miles of the distance, and in a few hours the remainder. On returning from Monroe, he erected a log house, and the floor was put in at odd times. He would do a day's work, and every evening would put in a split log, till the floor was finished. To Chester and Orrin Parsons are due the honor of erecting the first building in Saline tp., being a much-needed saw-mill. In 1834 Mr. P. purchased 160 acres of land, where he now resides, and devoted his time and attention to agricultural pursuits. Subsequent additions to his original purchase has increased his acreage to 374, finely improved, with good buildings and a steam saw-mill on the premises. In 1847 Mr. Parsons erected a saw-mill, but it was soon after destroyed by fire. He rebuilt it, and operated it successfully for several years. In 1835 the Benton P. O. was removed to his house, and he has since that time filled the position of Postmaster. Soon after coming to Saline, he, with his brother's assistance, cut a road from Saline village to intersect the Tecumseh road, and the day after it was completed Mr. P. started with a team of "horned horses" (yoke of oxen) to Monroe for a load of provisions. The trip occupied three days, and was the first traveling done on this now busy thoroughfare. He also kept a hotel where he now lives, before the railroad was completed to Ann Arbor. Mrs. Parsons was at an advanced age when she died, and remarkably intelligent, while she also possessed a brilliant memory. A short time before her death she wrote a history of their trip from New York to Michigan, and connected with it an interesting account of the hardships and privations of their early pioneer life. She did not live to finish it, but was called to her reward where pioneer life is unknown. He again married, this time to Mrs. Jenette Wakefield, on Nov. 9, 1876, widow of Utley Wakefield, who died July 23, 1850, and daughter of John and Electa Arnold. Mrs. Parsons was born near Albany, N. Y., June 10, 1823. By her first marriage, she had 2 children—Eva E., wife of George H. Jewett, and Mary J., wife of William Wallace. Mr. Parson's father was born Nov. 18, 1764, and died April 7, 1813, aged 49, and his mother was born May 20, 1767, and departed this life March 26, 1857, at the ripe age of 90. He has been 54 years in Washtenaw county, and is now 82 years old, with locks as white as the driven snow.

Cornelius Parsons, merchant, Saline, was born in Washtenaw Co., Jan. 14, 1833. His parents, Orrin and Rebecca S. (Fuller) Parsons, were natives of New York. They came to this county in 1830, and located 1½ miles south of Saline, where the former built a saw and grist mill, the first erected in the place. He also opened a tavern near the junction of the Chicago and Tecumseh road, which he kept for 10 years. The mills Mr. P. operated till his death. Mrs. P. died in 1854. Cornelius was reared in the country, his educational facilities limited to the common country schools. In 1854 he came to Saline, and for several years clerked for Davenport & Miller; was with Mr. Northrop in the hardware business six years; then worked for Parsons & Co.; then opened a store with H. J. Miller, remaining there one year, at the end of this time opening a dry-goods establishment of his own, which business he is now engaged in. He was married June 3, 1853, to Mary A. Ross. They have 3 children—Edith L., wife of Andrew J. Warren. Grosvenor H. and George W.

Capt. Orrin Parsons, son of Orrin (dec.) and Rebecca S. Parsons, was born in Washtenaw county, Oct. 16, 1833. He was reared on a farm, and entered the literary department of Michigan University, graduating June 20, 1859. He then went to Brunswick, Mo., and taught school one year. In 1861, he enlisted in Co. D, 3d. Mich. Cav., under Col. Mintey, and participated in the battles of Madrid, Corinth, and Iuka, with an almost innumerable number of skirmishes. At the close of the war he was sent to San Antonio, Texas, and remained there for eight months, when he was honorably discharged. He enlisted as a private, soon after was elected 2d. Lieut., then 1st Lieut., and subsequently was assigned to the rank of Capt. of Co. M., in which capacity he served for the last two years of the war. June 20, 1866, he was married to Miss Olive R. Eddy. Two children were born to them, and 1 of whom, Mabel, is living. Mrs. P. was born April 9, 1846, a daughter of Henry T. and Olive R. Eddy, natives of New Jersey. She died May 12, 1873. Mr. Parsons is connected with the Masonic order, and in politics is a Republican.

Levi H. Reynolds, Vice-Pres. of Pioneer Society for Saline tp., was born in Schenectady county, N. Y., June 2, 1808, and is a son of Asa D. and Betsey (Ortlipp) Reynolds, natives of New York. In 1816 Mr. Reynolds removed with his parents to Livingston county, where he was reared and educated. In July, 1842, he came to this county, and located in Saline, and worked in the Saline flour-mills for three years. He had learned the trade and worked at it for six years, in Avon, N. Y. In 1846 he started the Schuyler Mills, and operated them for three years; at the expiration of this time, he entered into partnership with Mr. Van Housen, and they purchased the York Mills, and operated them for one year. Mr. R. then retired from the firm, and located in Manchester, remaining but a short time. He came back to Saline, worked in the York Mills two years, then removed on a farm, and devoted his time alternately to milling and farming till lately, when he moved to Saline, where he resides at present. He was married Sept. 1, 1835, to Irene C. Kennison, born in Orange county, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1816. Of the 4 children born to them, 3 are living—Eugene A., who married Lizzie H. Taylor; Helen A., wife of William D. Simmons; William W., married to Eliza Phillips. Sarah L., the eldest, is deceased. Mr. Reynolds is a member of the M. E. Church, and is a Democrat. Both of his grandfathers served in the Revolutionary war, and Mrs. Reynolds' Grandfather Ortlipp was a Hessian, but disliking the cause for which he was fighting, he deserted the British and joined the Continental army, remaining with them three years, and doing splendid service.

Orange Risdon was born at Rupert, Bennington Co., Vt., Dec. 28, 1786. When he was three years old his father removed to Saratoga Co., N. Y., where he attended a common school until his thirteenth year. From that time until the day of his death he was dependent upon his own efforts. He studied surveying under a Mr. Rice, of Ballston Springs, N. Y., and in 1807 made an engagement with Elisha Johnson, a noted surveyor of Lester, N. Y., to assist him in surveying 100,000 acres of land in the new counties of Allegany and Genesee. His duty was to carry the chain, for which he was to receive $16 per month, but scarcely a week had passed when his skill in surveying was discovered, and with the consent of the land agent, the work was divided, and his wages increased to about five times the amount of the first stipulation. In 1809 he assisted in laying out the infant cities of Lockport, Brockport and Buffalo. During the war of 1812 he served two years as assistant surveyor. At one time he owned nearly 1,000 acres of land on the Genesee river. In 1817 a great commercial crisis occurred; he suffered with others; this led to the determination to remove to the new Territory of Michigan. In 1823 a month was passed in exploring, on foot, this and other counties. The next year, in company with Judge Dexter, he rode nearly 2,000 miles on horseback, carefully inspecting the eastern portion of Michigan. Aug. 12, 1824, he bought 160 acres of land on sec. 1, of Saline tp., Washtenaw county. The road from Detroit to Pontiac was surveyed under his direction the same year. In 1825 the great military road from Detroit to Chicago was commenced by the U. S. Government, and Mr. Risdon was chief surveyor. From this time until 1856 he was mainly employed in the U. S. service. At least 75 townships were surveyed by him and about 45 others examined or re-surveyed. In 1869 he made a journey to California on a visit to his son. For 12 years he was a Magistrate; for 10 years Postmaster at Saline, but resigned this office in 1840. He officiated at the first wedding in Saline tp. Mrs. Risdon accompanying him on horseback several miles through the timber.

For many years he was an honored member of the Masonic fraternity. He received the Master's degree in 1810, which was his 24th year; the Royal Arch in 1813; the order of High Priesthood in 1815; the Knight's Templar degree the same year, in the city of New York. At the time of his death, Mr. Risdon had held the latter degree longer than any man in the United States. He stated to a relative that at one time the noted Gov. DeWitt Clinton and himself were the most advanced members of the Masonic order in the state of New York. He officiated as Deputy Grand Master at the laying of the corner-stone of the Michigan capitol, in Detroit, in 1823, and was also present at the laying of the corner-stone of the new State capitol at Lansing, in 1873.

Mr. Risdon was truly a pioneer, and the families coming at a later date were sure of his sympathy. His advice was often sought in the selection of lands; very many miles were traveled by him to point out desirable locations, and yet ever unwilling to receive a reward. He was genial in his disposition, unselfish, benevolent, and liberal almost to a fault. He was married at Stillwater, N. Y., in 1816, to Sally Newland. Her death occurred in 1866. A few days would have completed the half-century of union. Mr. Risdon's last illness was short; from the effects of a severe cold he could not rally and gradually sank. He passed away, Monday, Nov. 27, 1876, without a groan or struggle. His funeral was held the following Thursday, and the Masonic demonstration was of a high order, and very impressive. Great numbers of people from neighboring towns and cities were in attendance.

Ezra C. Robinson, farmer, sec 4, Saline tp., was born in Genesee county, N. Y., Aug. 2, 1826. His parents, Loammi and Isabel Robinson, were early pioneers of this county, having emigrated here in 1832. Ezra C. passed his early life in this region, and April 8, 1842, was married to Mary E. Bliss, and the result of this alliance has been the birth of two children—Ida M., wife of Jasper Perry, and Edward L., who married Lottie Bugg. Mr. R. is a member of the Christian Church, and his wife is connected with the Baptist denomination. In politics Mr. Robinson is a Republican. He owns a fine farm of 140 acres, valued at $75 per acre.

Loammi Robinson (deceased). Of the few who deserve special mention in this work, for the many labors and hardships that were incident to the founding of Washtenaw county, perhaps none stand higher than Deacon Loammi Robinson. He was born in Maine, May 31, 1879, and one year later his parents moved to Vermont, where Mr. Robinson spent his early life. When a young man he went to Central New York, and subsequently to Castile, in the western part of the "Empire State." He remained in this latter place six years, and then came westward to Michigan, locating permanently in Saline tp., Washtenaw Co. He immediately built a log cabin, and in the spring of 1831 brought his family to their "Western home." In a short time other families settled in the immediate neighborhood, and the settlement was called "Union District." Here, also, was organized a Christian Church society, and Mr. Robinson was chosen Deacon. In addition to his strict religious principles, Mr. Robinson possessed such strong temperance qualities as to be pronounced by the majority as "rabid" and "fanatical." In those days it was customary to have a jug of the "ardent" always in the house, and the weary traveler, or the neighbor who might drop in, was always welcome to partake of the contents. But in Deacon Robinson's home it was entirely different. No "little brown jug" ever greeted the eye of the tired wanderer but a large cup of "Adam's ale" was the cooling beverage that quenched his burning thirst. Two of his sons have followed the illustrious example of their father, and look back with pride to the temperance principles displayed by their sainted parent. In 1869 Mr. Robinson removed to Ann Arbor, where he passed his last days. After a long and painful illness, on Nov. 15, 1871, he heard the sweet words of his God, saying, "'Tis enough, come up higher," and, like a bird before the relentless storm, his spirit cast off this clayey tenement, and soared to the realms of bliss above. His last words were, "I am coming, blessed Savior,"—a sentiment that has filled the soul of many an earth-born wanderer, when the last duty on earth has been performed, and the gate of Heaven is just in view. On Nov. 22, 1823, Mr. Robinson married Isabel Edmunds, and the following children were born to them—Ezra C., Elvira, wife of John F. Nichols, Ann Arbor; E. Spencer, Shiawassee county, Mich.; Mercy, wife of Charles Isbell; Paulina, wife of Rev. John D. McCord, Buchanan, Mich.; Flora, wife of Henry A. Nichols, Bloomington, Ill.; William E., Professor of Bishop School, Detroit; Oscar L., and Ada I., wife of Oscar E. Nichols, Ogden, N. YORK TOWNSHIP.

This township is singularly favored in the fertility of its soil and the variety of its water courses. In the dim past, when the aboriginal inhabitants stood on the heights of this township and surveyed the stormy Tehigikitchigami, it could not possibly occur to them that in future ages another people would take their stand there and look eastward over fields of golden grain, over a land dotted with happy homes. It came to pass, however, and now, what was once a portion of the great Erie lake, forms one of the most beautiful districts of the beautiful peninsula. The soil is gravelly and sandy, with sandy loam and clay subsoil in many sections. The forest or timber tracts, though not large, are of great value. The Saline river, its tributaries, Sugar creek, and various other rivulets and creeks add much to its natural advantages, all conspiring to render it a fit home for a good people. The T., A. A. & G. T. R. R. passes through the township. It was completed in May, 1878. The Detroit & Butler railroad, built in 1880, passes through the southeast corner of the town.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

York contains 14,286 acres of improved lands, 7364 acres of unimproved lands, and an aggregate acreage of 21,650. The number of farms in the district is 192, which if equalized, would give an average of 112.76 acres to each farm.

In 1879, 3,129 acres were sown to wheat, which produced 63,629 bushels, or an average of 20.34 per acre. The acreage of this cereal in May 1880, was 3,834.

The corn crop of 1879 yielded 135,270 bushels, from fields comprising 2,018 acres; 1,209 acres of oats yielded 47,115 bushels; 474 acres of clover gave 791 bushels of seed; 49 acres of barley produced 1,150 bushels; 104 acres planted under potatoes, yielded 6,557 bushels; 2,465 acres of meadow lands produced 2,878 tons of hay.

ORGANIC.

Under Territorial government, the town was known as Ypsilanti and Saline, two tiers of sections belonging to Ypsilanti and four to Saline. At the suggestion of Hon. Wm. Moore, a member of the Territorial Legislature, it was called York, since most of the inhabitants came from the State of New York, and under this name an act organizing the township of York, in the county of Washtenaw, was passed by the Legislative Council, and approved March 7, 1834, "That all that part comprised in surveyed township four south, in range six east, be a township by the name of York; and that the first township meeting be held at the now dwelling-house of Noah Wolcott, in said township." The meeting was duly held at the house of Noah Wolcott in Mooreville, presided over by Boaz Lampson. Hon. Wm. Moore was elected Supervisor and Justice of the Peace, and Othniel Gooding, Clerk. The first ballot was cast by Mr. Marvin, father of Wm. Marvin and Hon. Jarvis Marvin.

(1412)

SETTLEMENT.

As early as 1824 the American pioneer came to York, and selected his lands in the midst of the wilderness. Immediately succeeding that period others followed over the blazed trail, and within a few years every quarter of the district held an occupying proprietor.

In reviewing the history of this period the labor of compilation has been rendered light indeed. Josiah Utter Fuller, in his historical reminiscences of York township, has treated fully and impartially almost every fact in connection with its early settlement and growth.

THE MATCHI AGON.

Among the first settlers in the town was Alanson Snow, known as the "Indian hater." He was so called, Matchi Agon, on account of his inveterate hatred to the Indians. When a lad, the members of his father's family were massacred by the Indians in Ohio right before his eyes. From that hour he vowed eternal vengeance upon the redskins, a vow that he kept with unrelenting hatred. He ranged the woods for days at a time, seeking opportunities to avenge their death. It is said that the Indians believed him commissioned by the "Great Spirit" to destroy them, and they fled from his presence as from the devil. He was strictly a "man of the forest" and his chief delight was in hunting. He roamed from morning till night with his trusty rifle in the woods, and as civilization advanced and the sturdy woodman's ax was heard felling the forest trees preparatory to clearing the land and making it more habitable, he (Snow) moved farther into the forest, there to satisfy his love for hunting, and his desire to keep the terrible but just vow made in early childhood.

ELDER GOODMAN,

a Baptist clergyman who came from England, did much toward the moral and intellectual development of the early settlers in this township. Once a week he held meetings in the first school-house built in the town. He either read to them from the history of England or talked to them on religious subjects. His kindness and self-denying devotion to the cause of truth earned for him many friends, and the young, especially, formed a strong attachment to him, and learned from him many useful lessons not soon to be forgotten.

Mr. Aaron R. Wheeler now owns, and since 1833 has occupied, the old homestead of Snow. Among others may be mentioned the names of Captain Thayer, Hall brothers, and Mrs. Smith, who came from Ohio in company with Alanson Snow, and settled here in an early day. Capt. John Thayer was Captain of one of the vessels on the lakes during the war of 1812. The privations of early pioneers can hardly be realized in these days of plenty. Capt. Thayer endured hardships peculiar to pioneer life. Among some of his trials may be mentioned that of his trying to quiet his children by singing to them, when they were crying from hunger. The heroic fortitude of his daughter Abigail, a girl of sixteen, entitles her to be ranked among the Spaldings, Langstones, Harts and Dariuses of Revolutionary fame. Her father had a "sugar bush" some two miles from his house, situated in a dense forest populated by bears, wolves panthers and other wild animals, and Abigail attended the "bush" herself. She stayed there night and day alone. Her lodge was in a hollow tree, which her father fitted up for her convenience. The names of Oscar McClouth, Samuel Bishop, the Shaws, Wm. Richards, John Parsons, Lander LeBaron, Ephraim Judd, Josiah Hathaway, Dea. Lorin Moore, may also be mentioned among the early settlers. Josiah Hathaway and Thomas Shaw are still living and in this town. Among other early settlers we must not forget to mention Mr. French, a soldier of the war of 1812. He lost a leg in that war, and had a wooden one. He was very generous, and was of great help to the early settlers, using his pension very often in alleviating their wants. We may add right here that it must not be forgotten that at this early day there was an abundance of wild game and that the maples afforded an abundance of molasses and sugar. Had it not been for this, the pioneers would have suffered more than they did for the necessaries of life. That the aborigines were artists, though of a rude order, was seen from the traces they left on the trees. Images of bears, deer and turkey, were found cut in the bark of beech trees, and very correct representations they were. In one instance there was found engraved on a tree, on a farm adjoining that of the writer, a white man running followed closely by an Indian with a drawn tomahawk. This was said to be a warning to the first surveyors, if any one attempted to colonize here.

There were other pioneers of York, who deserve attention. Jacob Cook, who lived farther north, was one of the early pioneers. He came in 1830. His nearest neighbor was four miles distant. Caleb Moore, Lorain Moore, Daniel Carpenter, Sheffield Newton, Isaac Clark, and Jesse Warner were among the first settlers.

Humphrey Davenport settled on the very southwest corner of York in 1833. In other parts of the township were Matthew Salisbury, Aaron Wheeler, Arthur Coe, the Kelseys and LeBarons; and among the very earliest settlers were the Shaws, James Miller, Conrad Redner, and Casey Starks, who came from 1824 to 30.

YORK IN 1833.

David Berdan's reminiscences of this portion of Washtenaw form an unvarnished story. He looks back to the township through spectacles 48 years older than they were when he beheld the village of Mooreville first; he names a few of his earliest friends, and speaks of those who tendered him hospitality on his arrival, in a plain, manly strain:

"I came to this country in 1833. As my finances were rather limited, I could not settle in Plymouth with my friends; therefore, I had to go back, as it was called, and seek a home at first cost. I came from Plymouth to this place by way of Ypsilanti, which was a very inferior little hamlet, and Saline was next to no place. Mr. Risdon kept a tavern where Mr. Davenport now lives, and his sign stood out in the commons. Mr. McKinnon's store and a few others comprised Saline. As 'Squire Moore came from the same part of the country I did, I wended my way to Mooreville. The way I went I found Mooreville before I found its father, which was 'Squire Moore. Mooreville, all told, was one log house, which stood about where the Methodist church now stands. Well, I found the 'Squire, and inquired of him if he knew of any Government land. He said there had been a nice ridge discovered the winter before, and it was being taken up very rapidly. He showed me my place, and I bought it, and have been there most of the time since, four miles from Mooreville. Besides 'Squire Moore, who lived near Mooreville, were Isaac and David Hathaway, Dr. Bowers and Mr. Wolcott, who were there before I came.

"I must relate a little incident that occurred the first winter I lived up in the woods. 'Squire Moore and Mr. Hathaway came to visit me and see how I got along. The 'Squire remarked to me that I should have a pig, as every family should, to eat the crumbs from the table. Well, I bargained with him for one, but the question was, how to get it home. Not a very long time after that, I had a friend come to see me from Clinton, with a yoke of oxen; and how do you think I fed the oxen? We unhitched them from the wagon and turned them up to a brush heap! I guess they were satisfied, for they didn't find any fault. The next morning was Sunday. My visitor and I took the oxen from the brush heap, and started for 'Squire Moore's (four miles) for some hay for the oxen. We arrived there after awhile and got our hay, and were about ready to start back when I happened to think of the pig I had bargained for. The 'Squire being a good old Baptist, I felt a little delicate about asking him for it on Sunday. But the opportunity wss so good (I didn't know as I'd ever have another chance to get the pig), that I mustered up courage to speak to him in regard to it. The 'Squire hesitated a little, but finally said he, 'I guess there will be no harm in it; you may catch it, but don't let it squeal.' I took the pig, the first live animal I ever owned in Michigan.

"Before I had a house on my place, I put up with 'Squire Moore considerably; and I must say that he and his wife were as kind as any people I ever met. He was quite a useful man in matters of State; was Justice of the Peace, went to the State Legislature, etc. He was also instrumental in founding the Baptist church at Mooreville. As I was the first settler up there, the new comers naturally came to me to get acquainted and know the lay of the land, etc.; and soon there were quite a number of settlers in there, and as friendly as can be imagined.

"'Squire Moore left a family which a President might be proud of—six sons and one daughter—among which were one minister and two lawyers. The minister, Lyman, died at Marshall. One lawyer, Oliver, died in the employ of the Government at Washington. The other lawyer is no less a personage than William A. Moore, of Detroit."

Mr. Berdan recites the names of a few settlers who occupied the land before his coming, but, as their names are hitherto given, this paragraph of his reminiscences is omitted. In concluding his paper he states: "This is the best account I can give of York from my own knowledge and hearsay history.

" And now let us remember the poor pioneers,
 Who came from all States of the East,
 And remember them also as brave volunteers
 Who dare settle among the wild beasts--
 Where the bears and wolves unmolested did roam,
 And the nimble deer skipped about;
 Where the red man from time immemoral did roam.
 And made the woods ring with a shout,
 Who wandered about with their quiver and bow,
 And also their fish-hook and line.
 Why they were put here we none of us know,
 But it seems it was done by design;
 But now they are gone, also the wild beasts,
 And a new generation is here
 To enjoy the proceeds, and luxurious feasts,
 Of the toils of the poor pioneer.
 But yet, my young friends, you have something to do,
 Whatever the course you may steer;
 As it has been with us, so it may be with you;
 Some of you may become pioneers. "

INDUSTRIES.

York Mills.—This mill is situated on Spring Brook near the river, about one mile south of the center of the village. It was erected in 1836 by Moses Rider, who shortly afterwards sold it to Ezekiel J. Moore, who in turn disposed of it to Ralph and Edwin Mead. It then successively passed into the hands of David S. Haywood, Caleb

Van Husen and Levi H. Reynolds and Caleb Van Husen. In 1851, Mr. Van Husen sold it to Daniel D. Wallace, who improved the property by the addition of a wing on the west. In the course of time Mr. Wallace deeded it back to Van Husen, but in 1868, it was again sold, Robert Brooks being the purchaser. Mr. Brooks ran it for a short time, but without success, and was compelled to assign it to William H. Davenport. In 1872 Mr. Davenport disposed of it to William H. Druse. Up to the time of Brooks the mill had always been run by water power, but on passing into his hands he built an addition and put in a 42-horse power engine, thus enabling the mill to run at all seasons of the year and to use either water or steam. In November, 1875, Mr. Druse sold to the present proprietors, J. G. Hoyt & Son. The mill has three run of stone and is run to its utmost capacity, using some 18,000 bushels of wheat per year, in custom work. In the spring of 1880 in addition to the standard grades of flour, the firm began manufacturing the new-process flour. In 1878 a stave and heading factory was started in connection with the mill, which has proven a successful and remunerative venture. Ten men find employment in mill and factory.

The first saw-mill was built at Mooreville by Isaac Hathaway in 1832.

The second saw-mill was built by Aaron R. Wheeler on Honey creek, running through the farm he still occupies.

In the fall of 1833, another saw-mill was built on Mill brook by Baugham & Co., in 1838.

At that time these mills furnished lumber for nearly all the buildings in Washtenaw county, especially the central part.

Now there are three manufactories in the township, a cheese factory, a cider mill and a steam saw-mill at Mooreville, and a stave factory and a sash and blind factory at Milan.

FIRST EVENTS.

The first house was built on the farm now owned by Horace Parsons, the second upon the neighboring farm of Leander LeBaron. Both houses were built of log

The first store in the town, was opened by Elijah Ellis about 1835, at Milan.

As near as can be ascertained, the first marriage was that of Arby Lampson to Esther Bonner in 1830, Rev. John Walworth officiating.

Their first child, born in the fall of 1831, was the first child born in the town.

The first death was that of Aretus Belding which occurred in the fall of 1831. Rev. John Walworth preached the funeral sermon. Mr. Belding was a partner of Jonathan G. Morton, who kept first store at Ypsilanti.

Wm. Moore and Aaron R. Wheeler were the first Justices of the Peace in York. They were appointed by the Governor of the Territory of Michigan.

The first law-suit was tried before A. R. Wheeler, Esq.,—Sackett vs. Wm. Fuller, defendant. Wm. Davis acted as attorney for defendant. Case decided in favor of plaintiff.

The first township meeting, April, 1834.

The first Supervisor was the Hon. Wm. Moore.

The first Township Clerk was Othniel Gooding.

The first school-house was erected in 1831, and opened under Washington Morton, in November, 1831.

The first ballot ever cast in the township was by Wm. Marvin, Jr., in 1834.

Rev. John Walworth preached the first sermon in the township.

VILLAGES OF YORK.

Mooreville, called after its founder, John Moore, who came from New York and settled here in an early day, is a small hamlet situated on the Saline river, about six miles from Saline. It contains two stores, one hotel, a steam saw-mill, two blacksmith shops, one wagon shop, a cheese factory, five churches and a fine new school building. It has a daily mail. Lumber and cheese are the chief manufactures. Its present post-mistress is Mrs. Dr. Bowers. Dr. F. F. Oakley, who was a surgeon in the late war, and who is well known throughout the surrounding country as a successful physician and surgeon, is located here.

MILAN.

partly in this township and in the town of Milan, Monroe county, is also situated on the Saline river. It derived its name from the town of Milan. The first postoffice was established here about thirty-five years ago. Hon. D. A. Woodward, first postmaster. Miss Nettie Palmer is the postmistress at present. The first settlement was made by Mr. Marvin, father of Hon. Jarvis Marvin. Its railroad facilities consist of the T. A. & A. R. and D. & B. railroads; while its ease of access and convenience of landing freight are seldom excelled. The trade transacted by its business firms is good, and steadily increasing. It contains four dry-goods stores, one grocery store, one boot and shoe store, one news office and jewelry store combined, one hardware, one drug store, two millinery stores, two wagon shops, two blacksmith shops, one dry house, two hotels and one church. As an illustration of the enterprising spirit of its inhabitants, we have but to point to the fine residence of C. D. Blackmar and the almost palatial residences of Dr. Besac and Mr. Burt, now being built. A large stave factory and cider mill combined is situated in this village. The chief manufactures are flour, lumber, brick, staves, hoops and barrels. Its leading shipments are wheat, wool, wood, apples and pork.

CHURCHES.

Rev. John Walworth, of the Christian denomination, preached the first sermon in the house of Stephen Bonner. Now there are seven churches in the town, two Baptist, two Methodist, one Episcopal, one Universalist and one Union church. The names of the pastors are as follows: Rev. Henry F. Cochran, of the York Baptist Church, Rev. J. Fisher, of the Mooreville Baptist Church, Rev. Dunning, of the M. E. Church at Mooreville. There are no regular pastors at the other churches.

Baptist Church.—A brief history of the first Church in the town will not be inappropriate. Since it was of the Baptist faith, we can do no better than copy a few extracts from a brief history of the York Baptist Church, a paper prepared for the Wash-tenaw Baptist Association, and read before that society in 1868: "In the year 1831 a few Baptists settled in the west part of the town, then almost an unbroken wilderness, and, although destitute of the preaching of the gospel, yet they observed the Lord's day, meeting for the reading of the Scriptures, prayer and conference. The little band continued their meetings about a year, when Rev. Bradbury Clay, seeking a home in regions beyond, here found himself so deeply settled and established in the land, that farther progress was impossible. The good man, looking about for assistance, called on Mr. Wm. Moore, an earnest Baptist Christian. A mutual acquaintance was soon formed. Mr. Clay was pressed to tarry and preach to them. He consented, and the result was his settlement with them as their first pastor.

"The first effort on record toward the formation of a Church occurred Aug. 10, 1832. Met Aug. 31 pursuant to adjournment. After a season of prayer and conference, resolved unanimously to form themselves into a Church, and Elder Clay gave them the hand of fellowship as a Church of Christ, to be known as the First Baptist Church of Mooreville. It numbered about ten persons, and Mr. L. Moore was chosen deacon. Mr. Clay remained with the little band about two years, and several were added to them by letter during that period. In 1834 several brethren and sisters settled in the east part of the town who desired Church privileges in their new home in the new country. For the convenience of the brethren and the good of the Church, they decided to hold their meetings alternately at Mooreville and York, changing the name from the former to the latter, their number having increased to about 30. In May, 1834, Mr. Brigham visited them and preached one year, 15 having been added by letter in that time. In May, 1835, the first baptismal occasion occurs.

"The next pastor was Rev. G. D. Simmons. In October the same year, the Church resolved to build a place of worship, and a log structure was erected soon after, in which they worshipped 12 years. The writer will simply add that many a glorious revival occurred in the old log house. Much seed that was then sown is now bearing fruit through the direct agency of Christian men and women who date their conversion to those early days. This Church has enjoyed many seasons of prosperity and seasons of depression, but it still lives."

The present officers are: Clerk, W. W. Kelsey; Deacons, A. R. Wheeler, Othniel Gooding, Sr., J. U. Fuller and Henry Kelsey. The average attendance at the Sunday-school is 50; its Superintendent, B. F. Gooding.

Episcopal Church of Mooreville.—The ground on which this building is located was deeded to the vestrymen of the Church by Thomas J. Olcott and wife, May 1, 1860. The vestrymen were Asahel Edson, Thomas J. Olcott, Richard Alchin, Alexander McMullen and William McMullen. The same day the ground was deeded, Rev. Darius Parker, of Clinton, laid the corner stone. Conflicting circumstances hindered the completion of the building until 1863, since which time there has been occasional services in the church by different clergy, but the organization does not number members enough to support a resident minister.

Union Church.—There is but one organized religious society at Milton, the M. E.; and in 1866, they erected a Union Church to be used by all Christian denominations. The building is 35x50 feet in size, and 19 feet in height, and cost $3,500. The present trustees are:—H. Allen, J. Ganulett, P. Case, M. C. Edwards, and C. H. Wilson. The M. E., Presbyterian, Baptist and Universalist societies usually have the use of the church.

Universalist Church.—In December, 1877, Rev. J. B. Gilman, of Manchester, assisted by Revs. Sisson, Crane and Gibbs, held a three days meeting in York tp., for the purpose of organizing a Universalist Society. A Ladies' Aid Society was formed, and the cause went rapidly forward. In February, 1878, the society was formally organized with Rev. Gilman (now of Macomb, Ill.) as its first pastor. The Ladies' Aid Society gave entertainments, etc., and in one year accumulated $1,048. The Church Society and its friends decided on the erection of a structure in which to worship; a site was selected, and under the supervision of the officers of the Church, an edifice costing $3,000 was erected. This was furnished throughout by the amount raised by the Ladies' Aid Society. The dedicatory sermon was preached early in 1880 by Rev. Stocking, of Lansing, and it was a very happy and enjoyable occasion. Rev. Gilman was succeeded by Rev. V. A. Saxton, who is the present pastor. The society is in a healthy and flourishing condition, and give promise of doing much good in the future.

TOWNSHIP SCHOOLS.

The first school-house was built on section 18 in the fall of 1831. It was built of logs by one Burtis Hoag. He furnished all of the material and was paid $50. Washington Morton taught the first school in the winter of 1831. At the present date of writing (fall of 1880), the number of school districts are eleven, seven of which are fractional. There are eight school-houses in York, valued at about $10,000.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

In the personal sketches succeeding, are many incidents of early settlement, entertaining and instructive. The foregoing historical sketch embraces much subject matter, of a valuable character; but to prevent, as far as possible the repetition of facts, nothing that has been fully treated in the biographical collection, is mentioned in the history proper.

Hon. L. C. Allen, was born Sept. 21, at the close of that cold summer of 1816, in the town of Huntington, Chittenden Co., Vermont, in one of those deep valleys which abound so plentifully among the green mountains. He was the 4th of 6 brothers—Harmon, Abel, Carlos, Lovatus Chapman (the present subject) Cyrus and Harry. Three sisters were also raised to womanhood—Charlotte, Maria and Laura. The 3 sisters and Cyrus have gone, the rest remain. Their father, Edward Allen, was a native of Connecticut and the son of Elihu Allen, who was a cousin of the celebrated Ethan Allen, of Ticonderoga fame. The Allens emigrated to Vermont from Connecticut some time before the Revolutionary war, and Edward, the father of L. C., at the age of 17, enlisted and served during the last three years of the war, for which the Government gave him a pension during a few of the last years of his life. He was the surveyor for quite an extensive neighborhood during its early settlement. L. C.'s mother was Abigail, nee Palmer, who also was a native of Connecticut.

Mr. Allen commenced his education at a little log school-house on one corner of his father's farm during the summer before he was three years old. His mother has told him that she sent the older boys to school and he would run away and go too, and as he made fair progress in learning, and was out of her way, she was quite willing he should go. He himself now distinctly remembers going there to school before he wore trousers. At the age of about six his family removed to the town of Richmond, where he was raised during the rest of his minority, going to school summers till about 9 or 10 years old, and then about three months a year during the winter when the snow was not too deep to get there. His most vivid recollections during these years are, wallowing through the snow and going over the drifts on the crust, digging houses in the drifts, and wrestling at school. At the age of 18 he went to an academy about four weeks, and then took a large school where there were many larger scholars and some boys larger and older than himself. He taught this school three months. He worked at home during the next summer, and in the fall took another term of five weeks in an academy, and in the ensuing winter taught another school, with better success.

His father gave him his time at 20, and he went to Massachusetts where some friends had gone before him, to learn some kind of manufacturing where better wages could be had than working on a farm. He secured a place at $10 per month, in the shop of one Luke Harrington, a manufacturer of guns and cast-steel hoes, who was a very enthusiastic Jackson man, and had great hopes of Van Buren as Jackson's successor. Luke offered to increase his wages 50 per cent. for another year, but not immediately accepting the offer, the great financial crash of 1837 occurred after Old Hickory had fought his great battle with the United States bank, and all the smaller banks in the country suspended specie payments, many of them permanently. Manufacturing establishments all over the country, as well as banks, suspended business, and young Allen, as well as thousands of others, was thrown out. He then, rather than feed on husks, returned to his father's house, where he worked summers and taught school winters till he was 25 years of age. He then went to Deckertown, N. J., where his brother Carlos had commenced the practice of medicine. He taught school continuously in that vicinity for about five years. Having heroically and successfully dodged the arrows of Cupid till 30 years of age, he was finally pierced to the heart with one which laid him at the feet of Sarah Dewey, a very estimable and accomplished young lady, whom he married in the spring of 1847. She was born Dec. 22, 1821, a daughter of Wm. F. and Catherine (Compton) Dewey, natives of New Jersey.

Soon after his marriage Mr. Allen took an interest in a woolen manufactory in the village of Branchville, Sussex Co., N. J., which business he pursued about three years and then removed to Michigan upon the farm where he now resides. Here he has pursued a successful course of farming, and has raised a family of 7 daughters and 1 son, namely: Kate, wife of Franklin Butler, was born in Sussex Co., N. J., Feb. 20, 1848; Mary E., wife of J. D. Forsythe, was born in New Jersey, March 11, 1849; Louisa, wife of L. R. Alder, a man of Iowa, was born in Washtenaw Co. Aug. 28, 1850; Laura A., wife of O. G. Alderman, of Swan Lake, Dakotah, was born April 26, 1852; Ada L., wife of J. J. Saulsbury, of North Baltimore, Wood Co., Ohio; Alice, born March 31, 1856; Ida M., born May 23, 1860; Willie F., born April 17, 1864.

Mr. Allen was first elected as School Inspector, then as Justice of the Peace, and finally, in 1862, as Representative to the State Legislature, on the Union ticket. He served two sessions with marked ability and honor. He owns 200 acres of land, all under a high state of cultivation. He has always enjoyed the confidence and respect of his neighbors, taking part in all public questions, and having been entrusted by them with various town offices, and in the years 1863-'4 he represented the towns of Augusta, York, Saline, Bridgewater, Manchester and Lodi, in the Legislature. Since that time he has quietly pursued his favorite occupation. He is often consulted by his neighbors as to their matters of difficulty, and has saved many of them expensive lawsuits by timely and friendly counsel. He is at this time mourning the loss of his beloved wife, whose death occurred the 25th of Jan. last.

As a representative man of the higher class of Michigan citizens, we give Mr. Allen's portrait in this volume, on page 529.

John F. Areny, farmer, section 7, was born in New York, Nov. 16, 1847, and is a son of Albert G. and Emily (Geer) Areny, natives of Connecticut. John F. settled at Ann Arbor, Mich., in 1868, and May 20, 1874, was married to Anna LeBaron, daughter of Uriah and Lois (Shepherd) LeBaron, who came to this county in 1828. Mr. Areny and wife have two children—Laura, born June 12, 1875, and Lois L., born Jan. 19, 1877. Mr. Areny has been a very successful sewing-machine agent for over eight years. He is a Republican.

Daniel Aylesworth, farmer, section 26, was born in New York, in 1805, and was a son of Daniel and Anna Aylesworth, natives of Rhode Island. Mr. Aylesworth came to this county in 1835. He was married in New York, in 1827, to Betsey Huntley, who was born in New York, in 1810. Two children were given them (both deceased). Mrs. Aylesworth died in 1832. He was married, in 1833, to Betsey Perkins, who was born in New York, in 1805. One child was born to them, Emeline, wife of A. D. Dinsmore. Again death claimed a victim, and Mrs. Aylesworth was laid at rest in 1869. Mr. Aylesworth was married, in 1878, to Mary A. Marvin, who was born in New York, in 1811. Mr. Aylesworth owns 40 acres of land, and is a consistent member of the Baptist Church.

Orrin Russell Townsend (deceased) was born in Carmel tp., Putnam Co., N. Y., Nov. 14, 1818. His parents were James and Sarah (Russell) Townsend natives of New York. When Orrin was two years old his mother died, and he then resided with his uncle, Stephen Russell, four years, and subsequently with a Mr. Morgan until his 21st year. With the latter he learned the wagon-maker's trade, but never followed it as a business. When 18 years of age, he went to Western New York and worked with his brother at the carpenter's trade, and then at milling for 14 years. He was married to Nancy J. De Mill, a native of Richmond, N. Y., and daughter of Isaac and Lanah DeMill. Two children were given them—Elizabeth, who was born April 6, 1846, and died April 3, 1847; and Delos A., who was born Sept. 11, 1851. Mr. Townsend came to Michigan in 1843, locating in Lima tp., where Mrs. T. died, Oct. 5, 1855. April 14, 1856, Mr. Townsend married Phoebe E. De Mill, who was born April 14, 1830. Three children were given them—Gilmer P., born Aug. 6, 1857; Hugh S., born May 5, 1861; and Charles O., born Jan. 16, 1863. In 1863 Mr. Townsend sold his farm in Lima tp., and purchased one in York, where he lived until his death, which occurred April 6, 1872. Mr. Townsend was quite reserved in his address, and politically was a Democrat. He once served as Justice of the Peace.

Warren Babcock, farmer and stock-raiser, was born at Scipio, Cayuga Co., N. Y., Dec. 18, 1823, and a son of David and Electa (Daniels) Babcock, the former of whom was born in New York, in 1789. In 1853 he came to Michigan, where he died Dec. 5, 1878. Warren first settled at Ypsilanti, and subsequently in Kent county, coming to his present residence in 1880. He owns a quarter-section of land in sec. 34, valued at $45 per acre. He is Republican in politics, and a member of the Masonic order. He was married July 31, 1847, to Cordelia Twist. Six children were given them, four of whom are living—Katy, wife of George Jones; Frank, who was born Nov. 20, 1858; Cordelia, born Aug. 4, 1860; and Warren, Jr., born Sept. 15, 1856. Harriet, and Mary E., who married William A. Duress, are deceased. The latter left one child, Kittie. Mrs. Babcock died, and Mr. B. was again married July 2, 1872, to Mary A. McKibbin.

H. B. Bessac, M. D., physician and surgeon, Milan, was born in this county May 21, 1845. His parents are William H. and Mary J. (Wheeley) Bessac, the former a native of New York, of French descent; and the latter a native of Connecticut. William H. Bessac is a retired physician, and resides at Manchester, at the age of 72 years. His wife died in 1855. H. B. graduated from the medical department of the University of Michigan, in 1873, and immediately began the practice of his profession. He located in Wayne Co., Mich., and in 1874, at Milan, where he has since resided, and enjoyed a good share of the public patronage. He was married in New York, in 1867, to Julia E. Yale, born at Middlebury, Vt., in 1844, a daughter of Harvey and Camilia Yale. Of the three children born to them, two are living—William H., born Feb. 2, 1869, and Bertrand, born Sept. 1, 1877. Doctor Bessac is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and votes with the Republican party.

Charles M. Blackmer, merchant, Milan, was born in Massachusetts, Dec. 27, 1844, and is a son of David and Zeria (Palmiter) Blackmer, who came to Washtenaw county in 1856. Mr. Blackmer was married, Jan. 12, 1865, to Emily E. Webb, born in this county June 19, 1845, and daughter of Myron and Catherine (Kanouse) Webb, natives of New York. Seven children have been born to bless this union, six of whom survive—Cynthia M., born Dec. 13, 1865; Grace M., born Aug. 4, 1867; S. Thurlow, born April 11, 1869; Eddie, born Dec. 4, 1870; Webb, born Aug. 4, 1872; and Bertha Z., born May 17, 1877. D. M., born Aug. 2, 1879, died Aug. 28, 1880. Mr. Blackmer started in the mercantile trade at Milan some years ago, and has built up a large and fast-increasing trade. He is a large property-owner, a member of the I. O. O. F.; and a Republican. He has been Clerk of York tp.

John W. Blakeslee, farmer, sec. 15, York tp., was born in New York, April 25, 1830, and is a son of John W. and Urana (Bonney) Blakeslee. Jesse Warner, farmer, sec. 31, was born in New York, April 30, 1827. His parents, Jesse and Margaret Warner, natives of Ontario Co., N. Y., emigrated to this county in 1835, locating on sec. 31, York tp., where the latter died September, 1849, and the former, April, 1861. Mr. Warner was married April 12, 1853, to Mary E. Wilcox, born in 1835, daughter of Daniel E. and Mary Wilcox, who came to Washtenaw county in 1835. They have 3 children—Helen E., born Dec. 30, 1854, wife of William Gauntlett; Della, born in 1861, and Ada L. born March 31, 1865. Mr. Warner is the present Supervisor of York tp., which office he has acceptably filled for five years. He owns 144 acres of well-improved land, valued at $60 per acre. Politically he is Democratic.

Edwin D. Webb, farmer, sec. 20, was born in New York, Nov. 1, 1830. His parents, Pascal and Linna (Monk) Webb, emigrated to this county in 1835. Mr. Webb was married in 1857, to Mary A. Kanouse, who was born in New Jersey in July, 1839. They have 2 children—Milton H., born April 24, 1859, and Otie M., born Feb. 19, 1873. Mr. Webb has held several positions of honor and trust in York tp., and is a member of the Masonic fraternity. Himself and wife are members of the M. E. Church. Mr. Webb owns 80 acres of fertile land.

Reuben Westfall, farmer, sec. 36, was born in Livingston Co., Mich., Jan. 18, 1846, son of Levi and Lydia (Burgess) Westfall. Mr. Westfall moved to this county in 1862, and was married in Lenawee Co., Mich., in 1867, to Mary E. Cook, who was born April 27, 1846, daughter of Hiram and Catherine Cook, natives of New York and early settlers in Lenawee county. They have 2 children—Irena, born Oct. 8, 1868, and Luella C., born Sept. 25, 1878. Mr. Westfall owns 172 acres of good land, and deals extensively in sheep. He believes in the principles as set forth by the Democratic party.

James W. Waugh, farmer, sec. 31, was born in Vermont Sept. 1, 1816. His parents were Nathaniel and Mary Waugh, the former a native of Vermont, and the latter of New Hampshire. They came to this county in 1832. He was married in Vermont in 1837, to Abigail Phillips, who was born in New York, December, 1823. Two children were born to this marriage—Sarah A., wife of Albert Warner, of this county, and Nancy, a resident of Livingston Co., Mich. Mrs. Waugh died in 1847, and in 1849 Mr. W. married Mrs. Rhoda Stone, who was born in New York in 1823. She had 2 children by her first marriage—William I. and Francis E. Mrs. Waugh is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Waugh is a firm believer in the doctrines of the universal salvation of all mankind, and Democratic in politics.

Lewis A. Wilcox, farmer, was born in this county Jan. 5, 1842. His parents were Alexander and Alvira A. (Sherman) Wilcox, the former of whom came to Michigan in October, 1834, and located 120 acres of land on secs. 25 and 26. He died Oct. 18, 1875. Two children were born to them—Lewis, and Addie, who was born Jan. 9, 1853, and married March 28, 1877, to Alva R. Dexter. Lewis was raised on a farm, and Feb. 12, 1863, married Louisa J. Fox, a native of Niagara Co., N. Y. Four children were given them, 1 of whom survives—Clara B., who was born December 24, 1863. Hiram A., Addie, and an infant are deceased. Mr. Wilcox owns 80 acres of land on secs. 6 and 35, valued at $65 per acre. He is a member of the I. O. O. F.

Henry Young (deceased) was born Jan. 16, 1794, in New Jersey. He learned the tailor's trade in the city of New York, from which place he went to his native place. Afterward he went to West Meriden, Monroe Co., N. Y. He joined the war of 1812 just before its close, being in the service only three months. He married Miss Mary Scramlin Dec. 21, 1817, who was born Feb. 20, 1802, near the Honeoye Falls, in Meriden, Monroe Co., N. Y. He came to Michigan in the spring of 1833, bought some land in sec. 36, town of York, this county, where he lived until his death, Dec. 28, 1863. He built a log house and chopped the timber on four acres. Then he went East for his family. Aug. 19, the same year, they started again for Michigan. At Rochester he took passage on a canal boat for Buffalo, whence he sailed for Detroit on the Sheldon Thompson. They had a very rough voyage. The boat sprung a leak which put the fire out, and every man had to take his turn at the pumps to save the boat from sinking. They managed to run into Cleveland for repairs; then went on to Detroit. There was a very sick time on the boat, scarcely well ones enough to care for the sick. They came from Detroit to Saline with a team, taking four days to accomplish the journey. In about two weeks from the time of starting from their home in the East they reached their home in the West. After getting his goods they went to housekeeping in the wilderness. There was no family except a bachelor brother, whose land joined within two miles. After a year or two the country was settled very rapidly.

He raised a large family of children, 6 of whom are now living—Franklin was born Aug. 28, 1824, and now lives in Saginaw county; Francis, born Dec. 28, 1838, who lives on a part of the old homestead; Helen J. was born Nov. 13, 1848, married James Lawrence, Nov. 14, 1850, and lives in the town of York, this county; Janet was born Dec. 11, 1830, and married Nathan Stewart, of London, Monroe county, where they now reside; Caroline, was born April 12, 1835, and married Jonathan Atkinson, of Raisinville, Monroe county, where they now reside; Ardella was born April 3, 1840, and married Andrew Braman; they live in Milan, this county. Mrs. Young died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. James Lawrence, Nov. 25, 1876.

They attended the M. E. Church when they first came to Michigan; their nearest meeting place was at Ypsilanti, a distance of 12 miles. It sometimes took two days to go, as they had to go with ox teams. He was no hunter, but the first year he came to Michigan he used to stand on the run-ways and kill deer. One evening he shot an old stag, then went to cut his throat and in their struggle he came very near losing his life. As for privations he had none worth mentioning, as he had some money that he received for his farm in New York State.

AUGUSTA TOWNSHIP.

It has been stated emphatically by many of the surviving pioneers that Andrew Muir was the first settler in the district now known as the township of Augusta. He built the first fire ever lighted by an American citizen in that portion of the wilderness, and also the first log house ever erected in that section of the county. The pioneer frame house was that built by the Bennett family in 1836, the second by Josiah Childs, and the frame buildings of Markham and Lawrence immediately after. The first saw-mill was erected in 1831-'32 by Asa Redding and David Hardy, who located a water-power on the East Monroe road, near Oakville, Monroe county. The Smith saw-mill, located in section 28, was subsequently put in operation, and in this manner the nucleus of the township manufacturing industries was formed.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

In 1833 the settlers erected a log school-house on section 3, which they dignified with the title of "District School No. 1." This establishment was presided over by the first school-teacher, Richard Gorton, and answered all the educational requirements of the time in that township. The first district school was not organized until 1839, although the school-building was erected in 1838. What a change has taken place! Now the well-built school-houses are numerous, and the system of education well adapted. The town hall is a neat building and stands near the southwest angle of section 15, and cost about $1,500. The workings of the Church have also changed since the time when Ralph Fisk was accustomed to call his friends together and join with them in quiet prayer. The Presbyterian congregation, organized in September, 1833, erected a church in 1835. Rev. Mr. Boughton was the first regular preacher to this congregation, and it was he who preached the dedicatory sermon. The Methodist and Congregational Churches have been added to the list in later days, so that in this respect the people are well provided for.

THE HARDY MURDER.

This was enacted under the most mysterious auspices. The pioneer settler was returning to his home, and was in the act of placing his horses in the stable, when he fell beneath the blows of an assassin.

THE WILD-CAT DAYS.

In the early times, when an uncertain paper currency circulated throughout the land, the people of Augusta did not exceed their fellow citizens in other districts in prudence. The issue of the wild-cat banks found its way into their hands, and for a period everything flourished in the quick motion and the new strength it infused into the people; but failing to continue its beneficial career, as all things unsound do fail, many of the people were plunged into financial ruin, from which a few of them never recovered. Others by their courage rather than their craft survived the crash of wild-catism, and are now among the most prosperous inhabitants of the county. In dealing with Ypsilanti township, of which Augusta once formed a part, the very insecure banking system of the past is referred to.

PENUMBRA.

Andrew Muir is said to be the first settler; but there is a faint shadow of probability that James Miller, who made a settlement near Stony Creek in 1829, may be the owner of the honor—he who founded the village of Stony Creek—and to him is accorded the honor of being the father of Andrew Miller, said to be the first white child born in the district. To obtain the seed for a garden of a few rods in extent which he intended planting with potatoes, he had to traverse the marsh for a distance of 18 miles, when he reached Tessabik or Flat Rock, procured the seedlings, and returning, planted them around the stumps which decorated the little garden.

THE FIRST POSTOFFICE

was established as early as 1832 at Wejinigan-sibi, or Paint Creek. The mail stage between Monroe and Ypsilanti passed that way at irregular intervals, never failing, however, to transfer a mail packet into the care of David Hardy, the owner of the office and first postmaster in the town. This little building stood on the spot where Josiah Childs subsequently built his dwelling-house and now resides.

THE FIRST AND ONLY ROBBERY

was that of March, 1878, when Township Treasurer Augustus Phelps was despoiled of $400; and after being subjected to very severe treatment at the hands of the burglars, was discovered in an unconscious condition by his mother. The perpetrators of this outrage were evidently strangers in the township, as no clue whatever could be obtained regarding their names or whereabouts.

ORGANIC.

The organization of Augusta into a separate township was carried out in April, 1836, under authority of the following act, passed by the Territorial Legislative Council, and approved January, 1836:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Michigan, That all that portion of the county of Washtenaw designated by the United States survey as township 4 south, of range 7 east, be, and the same is, hereby set off and organized into a separate township by the name of Augusta, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the dwelling-house of Aaron Childs in said township.

The election was held in accord with the spirit of the act at the house of Mr. Childs resulting in the election of Stephen Meade as first supervisor, and Aaron Childs as township clerk. From the organization of the county to that date it formed a portion of Ypsilanti township. For over 40 years the highest political honors in the power of the township inhabitants to confer was bestowed largely upon the Childses, Howards, and Alcotts. The names of the old settlers are found propping up annually the record of the officials.

PHYSICAL CHARACTERISTICS.

The township of Augusta has long since passed from the condition of a vast, untenanted timber marsh land into that of a beautiful field of grain and grass. The great labors of the pioneers have been the first cause in the attainment of this result. They who cleared the land of its heavy forests were, perhaps unknowingly, the great drain-makers; for it is said, and with truth, that every clearance effected in the forest lowers the waters in the neighborhood, by permitting the atmosphere to play its full part as an absorber. The water courses, known as Paint creek, which runs through the heart of the township from north to south, and Stony creek with its main tributary, Sugar creek, which may be said to spread in every direction through the western half of the town, aided the efforts of the early cultivators, so that by the combined efforts of industry and nature, another tract of land was converted from its primitive state into one of the richest agricultural divisions of Washtenaw. The new railroad was completed toward the close of 1880, and forms a most beneficial industrial characteristic of the town.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

The township of Augusta possesses the smallest area of improved lands of all the political divisions of the county. Of 13,042 acres under fence, 7,129 are under cultivation and about 5,913 used as pasture. The entire number of farms is set down at 142, which would give an average acreage of 91.85 to each farm.

The number of acres reported sown in wheat in May, 1880, was 1,833. This compares very favorably with the advances made in this direction in 1879. During that year 1,340 acres yielded 29,703 bushels, averaging 22.17 bushels per acre. The corn-fields comprised 1,235 acres, producing 104,380 bushels, and the acreage of oats, 679, yielding 31,000 bushels. The acreage of clover was 122, producing 243 bushels of seed; that under potatoes 80, yielding 8,840 bushels; while the 1,095 acres given up to pasture and meadow lands showed a product of 2,062 tons of hay. Evidently what this little township has lost in extent of improvements has been amply repaid by the fertility of its soil.

CHURCHES.

The Presbyterian Church of Stony Creek was organized Oct. 25, 1833. Previous to this date religious meetings had been held with considerable regularity for several years in school-houses and private dwellings, the services for the most part being conducted without ministerial assistance. In these the ladies took a prominent part. Sermons were frequently read by Mrs. George McDougall and others.

The formal exercises of organization were held in the school-house in Pittsfield, situated in what is now known as the Crittenden district, by Rev. Ira M. Wead and Rev. John Beach, delegates from the Presbytery of Detroit. The following persons constituted the original membership: Deacon Mason Hatfield and Azubah Crittenden, his wife; Cyrenius I. Dewey and Beulah his wife; Allen Crittenden and Emily Reed, his wife; Daniel W. Russell and Cornelia Miller, his wife; Henry Albright and Catharine Miller, his wife; Elisha Pratt and Sarah, his wife; George McDougall and Mary Muir, his wife; Coon Redner, Alva Pratt, Mrs. Gitty Miller, and Misses Luna Dewey, Lucinda Rowley and Mary Wickham. Mason Hatfield and Cyrenius I. Dewey were the first elders, the former being also elected deacon.

The Church society was organized Feb. 10, 1835, Coon Redner, Rodrick Rowley and Alva Pratt serving as the original trustees and Cyrenius I. Dewey as clerk. The same year (1835) the original church building, a log structure, was erected by Ebenezer Giles, for the sum of $75, on land owned by James Pierson, sr., west of the road, nearly opposite the present church. The commodious brick building now in use was constructed in the year 1845. At its dedication Rev. Justin Marsh preached the sermon, the choir being led by Mr. Rollo. The parsonage house was put up in 1849. In 1871 the church building was repaired, reseeded and re-dedicated, Prof. Estabrook, of Ypsilanti, preaching.

The first minister who had charge of the Church was Rev. Mr. Boughton. He was succeeded by the following line of pastors,—Rev. E. B. Emerson, Rev. Oliver Hill, Rev. Justin Marsh, Rev. Alanson Scofield, Rev. Seth Hardy, Rev. Henry Bates, Rev. Norman Kellogg, Rev. Wm. H. Platt, Rev. E. P. Goodrich, Rev. Mills Gelston, and Rev. W. H. Blair. In addition to these Revs. Messrs. Worthington, Wead, Jewshaw, Ellis, Gelston, and Prof. Joseph Estabrook have supplied the pulpit for short intervals.

In recent years the Church has numbered above a hundred members. The existing eldership is composed of Franklin C. Crittenden, Nathan Reed, David Gordner, and John K. Campbell; the following are at present trustees: Newton E. Crittenden, Peter D. Rogers, W. P. Olcott, and W. M. Dansingburg.

A prosperous Sunday-school has been maintained from the first, Deacon Alva Pratt being superintendent for a long term of years, and Mr. F. C. Crittenden more recently filling that position. Of the Sunday-school teachers Mrs. Peter Dansingburg, lately deceased, held a conspicuous place for about 40 years.

This Church has enjoyed a good name for musical ability and culture. Successful singing schools, musical conventions, and concerts have been common in its history, while the choir has furnished singers for other places. These results have been due in large measure to the unflagging perseverance of Mr. David Gordner, who has been in charge of the singing for nearly 30 years.

The First Congregational Church and Society of Augusta.—This society was organized according to statute March 9, 1854, then consisting of 13 members, as follows: David Hardy, Christopher Howard, J. Webster Childs, A. Jackson Stitt, Josiah Childs, Stephen D. Hardy, Peter Tyler, John W. Flower, Calvin M. Lowe, Samuel J. Viall, John Russ, jr., Spencer Russ, Osmer A. Lawrence.

At the same meeting the following persons were elected Trustees: J. Webster Childs, Christopher Howard, John W. Flower, Stephen T. Hardy, Calvin M. Lowe, Josiah Childs. These trustees were immediately instructed to raise money by subscription and otherwise for the purpose of providing a house of worship and procuring a site on which to erect the same. The trustees met the same day, elected its officers—C. Howard as chairman and J. Webster Childs as clerk—the last named having held the same office continuously up to the present. The trustees proceeded at once and selected a site on the East Monroe road, section 22, made a contract with John W. Flower for the erection of a frame building 32x48 feet, which was finished the following season at an expense of about $1,300. The lot (one acre) on which the church was erected was presented to the society by Wm. Jarvis, of Ypsilanti. The building was dedicated soon after being finished, in March, 1855. the sermon being preached by the Rev. Dr. Kitchell, of Detroit.

The First Congregational Church of Augusta was organized in connection with said society, on April 18, 1854, consisting of the following members: Josiah Childs, Alva Raymond, Joseph Talcott, J. Webster Childs, Calvin M. Lowe, Louisa Childs, Mary A. Raymond, Priscilla Talcott, Lucy A. H. Childs, Mary E. Lowe, Jeanette Stitt, Hannah Viall, Eunice L. Keeler. The Church was organized by a council of ministers and delegates from surrounding Churches, Rev. L. Smith Hobart acting as moderator.

At a subsequent meeting of this Church, Josiah Childs and C. M. Lowe were chosen deacons, J. Webster Childs, clerk, which several positions they have held ever since.

The first pastor was Rev. Wm. Kent; those succeeding have been Revs. Michael Porter, Wm. Hall, Sam'l D. Breed, Wm. H. Osborn, Nath'l D. Lamphear and Wm. H. Blair.

The Sabbath-school was organized at the same time. J. Webster Childs was chosen as superintendent, holding the same office to date. There has never been a vacation in this school. It now numbers about 60 members.

Adjoining the church is their cemetery; the first to be buried there was John Flower, in August, 1835. Present membership of Church is 60.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

The rest of the history of this township consists of brief personal sketches of some of the more prominent citizens.

George Bennett, one of the pioneers of Augusta tp., was born in Otsego Co., N. Y., Nov. 18, 1821. His parents, Prince and Esther Bennett, came to this county in 1831, and entered three tracts of land in secs. 2 and 3, Augusta tp. In this wild region George was reared to manhood, receiving only a limited education. July 4, 1849, he married Catherine A. Shannon, and the result of this union has been the birth of 6 children—James H.; Ida A., wife of John Groves; Emma A., wife of Charles Moore; Ada E., wife of William Cromie, and Lillie M. Mr. Bennett's father assisted in the organization of Augusta township.

Rev. Prof. Gabriel Campbell is a grandson of Andrew Muir, sr., one of the first settlers in Augusta tp. He was born in 1838, at Dalrymple, Ayrshire, Scotland, and is a lineal descendant of Oliver Cromwell. His father was Robert Campbell, sr., who emigrated from Scotland to America in 1842, and was one of the liberal contributors who secured the location of the State Normal School at Ypsilanti. Six of his sons graduated from this institution of learning, which was due in a great measure to the noble endeavors of their mother. Gabriel, the fourth son, received his preliminary education in the district schools, and in 1856 entered Union school, Ypsilanti, then under the efficient charge of Prof. Joseph Estabrook. He subsequently attended the Normal school, where he spent three or four years. He studied foreign languages in connection with the regular course, and graduated as valedictorian of the class, in 1861. While attending the Normal School, he was president of both student societies, and attracted considerable attention by his poetical productions. In 1861 entered the sophomore class of the University of Michigan, and the following year was chosen Captain of the military company, formed of both Normal and University students, and known as the "Normal Company." It became Co. E, 17th Reg. Mich. Vol. Inf. and 100 strong, went forth in the summer of 1862 to a campaign of unblemished honor. After the retreat from Richmond, when the city of Washington was threatened, Captain Campbell and "Co. C." were stationed in command of the bridge over the Potomac leading to the Navy Yard, a task of extreme difficulty and importance, but performed with distinguished credit. At South Mountain the 17th Reg. succeeded in dislodging the enemy from their stone-wall defenses, with such eminent bravery, as to win the title "Stonewall Regiment" and receive from Gen. McClellan special mention and commendation in his report on the conduct of the war. In 1863 Capt. Campbell was compelled to relinquish his position in the army, on account of ill health, and he returned to his studies in the University. At the inauguration of Class-Day celebration in the University, Capt. Campbell was elected the first class poet. His poem was entitled "War Pictures," giving a graphic description of experiences during the war, and met with such enthusiastic reception that President Haven, in behalf of the faculty and others, requested it for publication. It was issued in a handsome pamphlet, a mark of distinguished appreciation which no other student of Michigan University has yet attained. In 1865 he attended the Chicago Theological Seminary, and while in Chicago taught the German language to large classes, subsequently issuing "Campbell's New German Course," which was immediately introduced into the schools of Chicago, and throughout the country. It has passed through several editions, and had an increasing sale. Having completed his three years' course in theology, and received the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, he accepted an election to the chair of mental and moral philosophy in the University of Minnesota. Soon after entering the University, and in 1868, he was ordained to the ministry in the Congregational Church. He has supplied pulpits with so great acceptance as to receive calls, on several occasions, to the pastorate of leading Churches of that denomination in this country. One sermon, "The Eternity of Future Penalties," was recommended to the students of Auburn Theological Seminary, as the ablest discussion extant of that profound subject.

The years 1870 and '71, Prof. Campbell spent in travel and study abroad, pursuing a full course in philosophy at the University of Berlin. While engaged with his studies, he was invited by Michelet to the Philosophical Society of the German capital, as a guest, and was subsequently elected a member of the Philosophical Society of Berlin, the most distinguished body of philosophers in Europe. He has published a series of Essays on Philosophy in England, Scotland, and Germany, which attracted such attention as to be translated into German and published in that language. During 1874 and '75, in connection with his professional labors, he was editor of the Citizen, a State educational and religious journal. Prof. Campbell's work in the University of Minnesota was one of uncommon popularity and power. Several years ago he was offered the Presidency of that institution, which, however, he declined. This unsolicited tender of the presidency of a State University is an honor as great as has been bestowed upon any of the living Alumni of Michigan University. When, in 1880, the Professor gave up his position as Vice-President and Professor in Minnesota University, for a period of rest and preparation for a larger field of labor, the Alumni of that institution, with one accord, protested, and secured a large addition to his salary in order to induce him to remain. Prof. Campbell was married in 1865, to Louise T. McMahon, second daughter of Joseph McMahon, of Manchester, Washtenaw Co., Mich. They have been blessed with 5 children.

Robert Campbell, farmer, was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, Nov. 1, 1802. His parents were William and Elizabeth Campbell. He was reared and educated in Scotland. They came immediately to Washtenaw Co., and purchased 160 acres of land, and afterward 80 acres more. March 1, 1825, he married Ann Muir, born in Scotland, Sept. 18, 1804. She emigrated with her parents to America in 1829 and settled in this county. Her father built the first brick chimney in Augusta township. Of their 10 children, only 6 are now living—Mary, wife of William Lambie, William, Andrew, Robert, Gabriel and John K. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are members of the Presbyterian Church, the former being connected with that denomination for 62 years, and the latter for 60 years. In politics he is a Republican.

He was a member of the Board of Supervisors for 15 consecutive years, and Postmaster at Paint Creek for a considerable length of time. In 1870 he was elected a member of the State Legislature from Washtenaw Co. for one term, consisting of two sessions. Politically he is a firm believer in the principles inaugurated by Andrew Jackson. On April 11, 1833, he was united in marriage to Hannah F. Hubbard, who was born at Claremont, N. H., Sept. 13, 1825. Mrs. Childs is a lady of rare attainments, remarkable business ability and bounteous hospitality. One summer evening when only 10 years old, he was driving home the cows, when suddenly they stopped and started into the forest. Mrs. Moroney owns 120 acres of land and is a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

C. W. Taylor, a prominent farmer on sec. 34, was born at Mound Holly, Burlington Co., Vt., Oct. 6, 1811. His parents, W. and Ann E. (Horn) Taylor, came to this county in 1831, locating at Ann Arbor, and in 1834, in Northfield tp., where they passed the remainder of their days. C. W. was married in 1837 to Louisa Fraker, a native of Saratoga Co., N. Y., who died in 1838. Mr. T. again married, June 7, 1857, to Emma Greenville, a native of London, Eng., who came with her parents, Benjamin and Mary Greenville, to America, at the age of two years. Her mother died in 1853, and her father, in Texas, in 1864. Three children were born to this union, 1 of whom is living—Emma L. Mrs. Taylor is a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. Taylor was a carpenter 10 years of his life, but has lately followed farming.

Capt. James B. Arms, retired farmer, Webster tp., was born in Franklin county, Mass., Aug. 4, 1801, and is the only son of Eleakim and Tabitha (Leonard) Arms, natives of Massachusetts, and of English descent. He was reared to manhood in his native State, and when 33 years of age came to Michigan, locating in Washtenaw county. He immediately purchased 200 acres of Government land on sec. 4, this tp., where he still resides. He went resolutely to work to clear and improve his land, and at present owns 240 acres of as good land as can be found in this county. He was married at Albany, N. Y., in 1827 to Clarissa Smith, who was born in Massachusetts, in 1802, daughter of Joseph and Sallie (Cooley) Smith, also natives of the Bay State. Seven children were born to this union, 2 of whom survive—Charles, a resident of Marshall Co., Ill., and James B., jr., who was married in 1869 to Cora, daughter of Cornelius and Mary Cronan. They have 2 children—Alice E., born Dec. 8, 1870; and Lulu M., born May 12, 1876. The deceased children are George C. and Benjamin F., who was killed in the late civil conflict. Capt. Arms received his military title in his native State, when he served as Captain of the Massachusetts State militia. Since his residence in this county he has devoted his time to agricultural pursuits, and has seen the wonderful development of the county that was once a wilderness, into a busy, bustling, lively community, teeming with wealth and activity. He can tell many amusing and interesting stories of pioneer life, which are startling and surprising to many of his youthful auditors. He is a Republican in politics, and his wife is a member of the Congregational Church.

Alexander Ewing, M. D. The late Dr. Ewing was for many years one of the most prominent physicians and surgeons of Washtenaw county.

He was born in the north of Ireland, April 5, 1819, and was the youngest of a family of 6 children, all of whom, with their parents, emigrated to this country in 1833. Soon after, as a student of medicine, he entered the office of Dr. Alfred Digby, at that time the leading physician in Brantford, Ontario, and graduated from the Geneva, N. Y., Medical College in 1839. The following year he came to Michigan and located at Lima, where he married Sophia A., daughter of the late Dr. Thomas Sears.

After several years of extensive and laborious practice at Lima, he spent a year in the colleges and hospitals of New York city, and on his return, settled in Dexter.

In 1852 Dr. Ewing was chosen to represent his district in the Legislature, which position he filled with signal ability. At the breaking out of the late war, he was active in raising troops, and in the summer of 1861, he offered his services to Governor Blair, who promptly appointed him Surgeon of the 13th Mich. Inf., with which regiment he went to the field and saw much hard service participating in the leading battles of the Army of the Cumberland.

As Surgeon in charge of Hospital No. 3 at Nashville, Tenn., and subsequently at Lookout Mountain, he had an experience equaled by few army surgeons. At the battle of Chickamauga, he was the operator of Gen. Wood's Division, and remained to care for the wounded of that division, who were captured by the enemy. After many days of constant operating he, with other surgeons, was taken to Richmond to spend six weeks in the famous Libby prison.

Upon his exchange, and while enjoying a much needed rest, he assisted the Ladies Sanitary Society by relating at public meetings his interesting army experience. Soon after the expiration of his three years, he was mustered out of service to resume private practice, which was continued without interruption until feeble health warned him to desist and to seek medical advice, which he had so often given and seldom received. New York city's best medical talent was invoked in vain, and he died in Dexter, Sept. 17, 1879, in his 61st year, leaving a wife and 3 sons to mourn the loss of a kind and an affectionate husband and a loving and indulgent father, and a community bereft of a public-spirited and faithful citizen.
